FROM THE NEW YORK PROPHET.

BOSTON, Oct. 15th, 1844.

DEAR BRETHREN:

Having been a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints ever since there was a branch in this place, I take the liberty to address you concerning the position, conduct, and teaching of Elder Sidney Rigdon.

When he first went to Nauvoo after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, he told the Saints there in a public address that Joseph died accepted of God, and still held the keys of the kingdom, and that the kingdom must be built up unto him (Joseph Smith). This he affirmed in the presence of thousands of witnesses, as I was told; but since he has been tried and cut off from the Church, Joseph is not the person in his estimation that he then was. It appears that Elder Rigdon has discovered his error, and that his vision of Joseph was not true, for he now teaches that Joseph is that "evil servant" spoken of in Matt. 24, and that instead of holding the keys of the kingdom, he has this portion with hypocrites and unbelievers; so says one of his satellites, Mr. Tomlinson. Oh! can it be possible, that a man of his talents will suffer himself to be deceived to such a miserable subterfuge.

Alas! alas! how are the mighty fallen! But it is not so much to be wondered at when we consider what he has taught. He was in a certain city on his way to Pittsburgh, previous to the death of the Smiths, and taught the saints there that no female could be exalted to any degree of glory unless she had children. A certain widowed lady, who had never borne children, asked him in a private conversation what she should do, she said "I want glory in the eternal world, but I have no children, neither any husband;—pray, what am I to do?" His reply was, "You must borrow your neighbor's husband, and try to effect it that way." It is strange, then, that a man of such principles should be hailed from his exalted station, like Lucifer the son of the morning? I answer it is not. I give you the real name of the lady, but you need not publish it unless proof is required; she has looked upon him ever since with disgust and contempt, and has considered him a disciple or an accomplice of the notorious John C. Bennett—a very just conclusion.

They had often listened to the Twelve in that place, but never, no, never had they heard any such teaching from them, either in public or private. The saints who have called upon Elder Rigdon in Pittsburgh, on their way to Nauvoo, tell him things of his conversation. I view him as a wolf in sheep's clothing; professing to be simple and honest-hearted saints, as they call upon him, that he believes Joseph to be a prophet; this he thinks will catch their ears and give him a little power over them. My honest conviction is that the serpent's sting is concealed in this very profession, he has no care or interest for the teachings of Joseph, only as he can use them to bewilder the saints, and draw them into his own apostate snare; if he had, he would never claim greater power than the Twelve. The Book of Doctrine & Covenants says that the Twelve form a quorum equal in power and authority to the three first presidents; now let the two principle ones of the first three presidents be taken away, namely, Joseph and Hyrum, has the remaining one, Elder Rigdon, as much power alone as the Quorum of the Twelve? A child might answer. Add to this the fact, that Elder Rigdon has not had the confidence of the saints for five years past; this is a reality which all the churches know. It is also in evidence before the church, in addition to the testimony of the Book of Covenants, that the Twelve were particularly set apart, in March last, by the word of the Lord through the Prophet Joseph, to take the lead of the church; it is also in evidence before the church, that Joseph declared repeatedly before his death, that if Elder Rigdon were to have the management of the church, he would lead it straight to destruction.

We should all do well to ask by whose labors, fatigues, and toils have we been built up and fed, during the last five years? Has it been by the Twelve, and by those acting under their direction? Or has it been by Elder Rigdon?—It certainly has been by the Twelve. Let us then remember, that those who fed us first will feed us still. After the crucifixion of Christ, the government of the Church rested on the Twelve; so after our Prophet is killed, it is plain to see that the twelve apostles should preside over the Church.

But I am in favor of every man enjoying his own opinion; let James Emmet split off one way, and Elder Rigdon another way, and let them draw around them, and lead off with them all of a kindred spirit with themselves, and then perhaps all that remain in Zion will be called holy, after she is washed from this accursed which naturally rises and floats off when the pot begins to boil.—See Isaiah, 4th chap. But enough of this for this time—more perhaps by and by.

We have just heard from Nauvoo. The Temple is going on rapidly; all is quiet about that quarter; the capitals are placed on the walls, and the roof is in a forward state. Shall we not open our minds and hearts liberally, and help forward this noble edifice?—and let us not wait till a more convenient season before we help, but let us do it now—now is the accepted time—let not our means linger by the way, but let swift messengers be entrusted with it, those who have no holes in their pockets to lose it out or scatter it by the way; but let every dollar reach its destined place. Building of various kind is going on, and business begins to revive. Some of the heads of the church left them in Nauvoo, and tried to weaken their hands in their greatest distress and danger; but I trust that God will sustain his own cause without their aid—let God reward them according to their works.

Your brother in the everlasting covenant.

CINCINNATUS.

TURKISH MANNERS.

BY A RECENT TRAVELLER.

The structure of the language, especially in its more lengthy sentences, is very like to the Latin. The subject-matters are slowly and patiently enumerated, without disclosing the purpose of the speaker, until he reaches the end of his sentences, and then at least comes the clenching word which gives a meaning and connection to all that has gone before. If you listen at all to speaking of this kind, your attention, rather than be suffered to flag, must grow more and more lively as the phrase matches on.

The Osmanli speak well. In countries civilized, according to the late European plan, the work of trying to persuade tribunals, is almost all performed by a set of men, the great body of whom very seldom do anything else; but in Turkey this division of labor has never taken place, and every man is his own advocate. The importance of the rhetorical art is immense; for a bad speech may endanger the property of the speaker, as well as the soles of his feet and the free enjoyment of his throat. So it results that most of the Turks whom one sees have a lawyer-like habit of speaking connectedly and at length. The treaties continually going on in the bazaar for the buying and selling of the merest trifles are carried on by speechifying rather than by mere colloquies; and the eternal uncertainty as to the market-value of things in constant sale, gives room for endless discussion. The seller is forever demanding a price immensely beyond that for which he sells at last, and so occasions unspeakable disgust to many Englishmen, who cannot see why an honest dealer should ask more for his goods than he will really take; the truth is, however, that an ordinary tradesman of Constantinople has no other way of finding out the fair market-value of his property. The difficulty under which he labors is easily shown by comparing the mechanism of the commercial system in Turkey with that of our own country. In England, or in any other great mercantile country, the bulk of the things which are bought and sold goes through the hands of a wholesale dealer; and it is he who higgles and bargains with an entire nation of purchasers by entering into treaty with retail sellers. The labor of making a few large contracts is sufficient to give a clue for finding the fair market-value of the things sold throughout the country; but in Turkey, from the primitive habits of the people, and partly from the absence of great capital and great credit, the importing merchant, the warehouseman, the wholesale dealer, the retail dealer, and the shopman, are all one person. Old Moostapha, or Alpdallah, or Hadgi Mohamed, waddles up from the water's edge with a snail packet of merchandize, which he has bought out of a Greek brigantine; and when at last he has reached his nook in the bazaar, he puts his goods before the counter, and himself upon it—then laying fire to his tobacco, he sits in permanence, and patiently waits to obtain the best price that can be obtained in an open market. This is his fair right as a seller; but he has no means of finding out what the best price is, except by actual experiment. He cannot know the intensity of the demand or the abundance of the supply otherwise than by the offers which may be made for his little bundle of goods; so he begins by asking a perfectly hopeless price, and thence descends the ladder until he meets a purchaser.

OLD BONES.

On Saturday evening last a report was circulated in our town that a dead man was found on the Juniata coal-gate ground about four miles east of this place. On Sunday morning, many of our citizens, together with myself, went to the spot designated, and sure enough, there lay the skeleton of a human being, partially enveloped in an old blue cloth coat and striped cassimere pantaloons, one boot and part of another—beside the body lay the skull bones, bleached white as chalk by the action of the sun and rains. The other bones were entirely stripped of flesh; being covered with the clothes, they were of a dirty brown. The clothes were literally rotten, and a walking stick lay partly under him and rotten. No one could recognize anything about the remains to give any clue as to who the unfortunate being was, or how he could have wandered into such an out of the way place to end his earthly career.

Some suppose the remains to be those of a man named James Hogshaw, of Juniata co., a poor miserable creature who passed through this place about a year ago.—Perry Democrat.

A SCANDALOUS OUTRAGE.

When the petit jury on Saturday afternoon, brought in a verdict against young Hare of "Guilty" on the charge of the murder of the Irishman Rice, in the Kensington riots, the friends of the prisoner groaned vociferously, they subsequently assailed the members of the jury in the streets with groans and blasphemous threats of personal violence. Some went so far as to propose another South work rebellion! We trust that the sober thinking portion of this community will support the laws, and insist upon the administration of justice being unobstructed by mobs, or mob demonstrations. If juries are to be put in peril for uttering their honest convictions, (and six or seven of the jury, in the case of Hare, belonging to his own political party,) we may indeed bid farewell to justice and bow at once to the tyranny of the vicious and unreasonable.

THE DEAD LETTER OFFICE.

This office is at Washington, where letters are opened and read, the owners of which cannot be found, or that cannot be forwarded according to address. A writer in the Baltimore Sun says the money found in such letters is very great. The amount of monies received during the quarter ending the 30th September last, is $1470; but how much of this amount is counterfeit is not yet ascertained. In every case where money, good or bad, (or other valuables,) is found in letters, it is carefully re-enclosed and sent to the Postmaster of the place whence it was transmitted, with directions to the officer to use every effort in finding the writer of the letter, to whom he should deliver it and obtain a receipt. In this way about nine-tenths of the amount revert annually to the owners. If the owner can not be found within forty days, it is again returned to the department, where it remains subject to the order of the owner at any subsequent period.

From the Illinois State Register.

GEORGE T. M. DAVIS.

Some weeks since the State Register charged that the Hancock people had procured this gentleman, to write a threatening letter to the Governor, informing him that if he encouraged prosecutions, against the murderers of the Smiths the persons accused would implicate him in the murder. This statement has been denied by Mr. Davis; and he has called for the publication of the letter. Here it is. No one could doubt but that it was written at the instance of the Hancock people. It bears internal evidence of the fact.

We also publish another letter to the Governor advising him to call out the militia when they were not needed. Let this letter, stand side by side with some of the paragraphs of Davis, censuring the Governor for calling out the militia when they were needed.

The Governor's letter in answer was prepared at the time it bears date; but by the advice of his friends, he did not send it. It is now given to the public as a correction of the many misrepresentations contained in Mr. Davis' letter to him.

QUINCY, JUNE 30, 1844.

To his Excellency, Thomas Ford, Governor.

Dear Sir:—Fully appreciating the embarrassing situation in which you are placed, by the information derived from the seat of War this morning, that a design exists among a portion of the militia, whom you had relied upon to aid in maintaining the majesty and supremacy of the law, to wage a war of extermination against the Mormons, it is only from a desire to aid and support you at this trying crisis, that I have presumed to offer you any suggestions as to the course best adapted to preserve peace and save the State from the disgrace of a mob.

From the personal knowledge I possess, I am convinced that a war of extermination can only be guarded against, by your selecting a body of from 2500 to 3000 men most distant from the seat of excitement, ordering their encampment within four or five miles from Nauvoo, and then issuing a proclamation disbanding the forces in the immediate neighborhood, and giving all persons inclined to mob the Mormons notice that an attack can only be made upon them through a body of our citizens who are determined under any emergency to uphold the law and maintain the peace. This force thus located, would, in my humble judgment, have the double tendency of protecting the citizens of Hancock from any contemplated attack from the Mormons while at the same time it would secure the latter against the merciless violence of an excited populace bent upon extermination.

I repeat that my only apology for venturing to offer any advice is from a desire to aid you to the utmost of my ability in the honorable, determined, and fearless course you are taking to preserve the peace of the citizens of Illinois and to secure the supremacy of the law. With sentiments of respect I am very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE T. M. DAVIS.

Quincy, August 9, 1844.

Dear Sir:—You are well aware of the relation I bear towards you in regard to the late Mormon difficulties, and the position I have occupied before the public.—You cannot be otherwise than satisfied that from the previous relations existing between us, my motives could not have been otherwise than pure in sustaining you in the course you had taken. For doing this I was assailed privately as well as publicly by many of my political friends, and the animosity of some of them has not been appeased to this day. Conscious however, of the rectitude of my motives, I pursued and have continued to pursue that course which I deemed proper, unswayed and uninfluenced by either the frowns or smiles of friend or foe.—My desire still is, to sustain your cause if I can, and if proof is not adduced to show that you have been influenced by political motives. You have doubtless been aware that your last address to the citizens of Warsaw, have given great displeasure to many who have heretofore sustained you, and that they charge it was dictated purely by a desire to secure the election of Hoge. This has been openly charged here by your political friends from Hancock as well as your opponents. Up to the time I left home, I had excluded several severe communications against you because I believed them unmerited.—One of them went if true, conclusively to prove you knew of the design of the citizens to take the lives of the Smiths. It was based upon a statement made by Col. Buckmaster, not only to Col. March of Alton, but to one or two other of our citizens. Col. Buckmaster stated that on your way to Nauvoo, you and he talked the matter over, and both agreed that the Smiths would be killed during your absence, and that it was his suggestions to you, to leave the wagons a few miles out of Nauvoo, so that you and your escort could get that far out of the way, before the news could reach Nauvoo of the killing of the Smiths. If this statement of Buckmaster's is correct, your implication in the matter is fixed, and the only object I have in view in imparting this matter to you arises from what has occurred since I have been in this place this time.—Some fifteen or twenty citizens of Hancock county have been here attending the land sales. Some one informed them that you had prepared a list of names to be presented to the Grand Jury, with a list of witnesses to procure their indictment and conviction. Some of them have stated publicly that if that was the course you intended to pursue, they would show beyond doubt, that you knew all about it.—Among the testimony they have collected is that of Sharp. He told me himself, on yesterday morning, that on the morning of the day the Smiths were killed, he called upon you at your room and told you that the people intended to take the law into their own hands, and that you replied to him, they must not do that, or attempt it, while you was at Carthage, that you had come there to sustain the law, not to witness its violation. They are also in possession of the fact, that two different individuals, heard Col. Deming on the same morning long before breakfast, state to you that there was going to be an attempt made to rescue the Smiths out of jail and visit summary punishment upon them, but that it was the Whigs that intended to do it.

There is a good deal more I have learned here which it is useless to commit to paper, but which is generally of the same character as above related. Now my only object in writing to you, is that of a desire to see you sustained before the public in this unfortunate affair. And the best way I can serve you is to state to you facts within my knowledge, that you may act with a full view of all the circumstances before you. What possible good can grow out of a renewal of excitement in Hancock county I cannot see. If indictments are gotten up against these men, and attempts are made to arrest them, a scene of bloodshed and massacre will ensue, unequalled during the existence of this republic. They will, as a matter of course, justify themselves as far as they can in the eyes of the world, and they will attempt to prove a complete and perfect secession on your part of all that transpired. I have spoken very plainly, but not more so than I am wont to do. And I feel as if in communicating upon matters of this kind the one with the other, the utmost candor should be exercised. There can be no doubt that these citizens of Hancock at a body are determined to stand or fall together. They are creating a strong sympathy in their favor throughout this State as well as Missouri and the Territory, and an attempt to execute them would be attended with the most disastrous consequences. I cannot see what you have individually to gain in urging their prosecution and conviction, surely the vengeance of the Mormons against them is keen enough, without having it whetted by any other interference. And it is only during political friend and foe to take a course against you in Hancock, which to say the least of it, will give your adversaries an advantage over you they do not now possess. I hope you will pardon the freedom I have taken in writing to you, when I assure you, it is from the same motives, that has induced me thus to detain you. I may err in communicating these facts to you, but if an error, it is one of the head, not of the heart. Far be it from me to advise you what course you ought to take. Such is not my design. I feel as if I had discharged my duty towards you, as a citizen, when I state what has come to my knowledge as above delineated. Your future course must be directed by your own superior judgement and experience.

Yours very respectfully,

GEORGE T. M. DAVIS.

Dear Sir:—Upon my arrival at home a few days since, your letter of the 9th instant was presented to me; and I am happy to say that I can make you a most satisfactory answer. As the conductor of a public Journal, at one time, you thought it to be your duty to abuse me a great deal in your paper. I find no fault on that account. I am no advocate for the freedom of the press; although I regret its licentiousness, yet would I greatly prefer licentiousness, to such restraints as would prevent the truth from being all before the people. The great inconvenience and danger, however, of this licentiousness is, that the people never know how much to believe, of that which they see in the newspapers. The public press cries wolf, wolf, so often when there is no danger, that it will not be regarded, when it ought to be believed.

Your course however, in relation to the Mormon war, (as it has been called,) gave me a very high satisfaction. I was perfectly conscious of the most upright motives, in all that I did myself; and it was with great pleasure, that I witnessed the candor and fairness, of your course with reference to mine. It redeemed you in my estimation; and created the impression on my humble mind, that your former abuse of me, was the result of erroneous information which you had received; and which, unhappily, one political opponent too easily believes of another.

As to the statements in your letter now under consideration, I have the happiness to assure you with truth that political views, never invaded my mind, from the beginning to the end of the Mormon difficulties. I would have been very glad indeed, if the Mormons had refrained from voting at the last election. I always foresaw, that if they did vote, and more especially, for the Democratic ticket, my power to keep the peace, and enforce the laws of their part of the country, would be greatly impaired, as I fear now, it will be. Therefore I have anxiously endeavored, on all occasions, to prevent these difficulties, from taking a party turn. I have seen but three of the influential Mormons, since the death of the Smiths. To two of them who were ladies, I said nothing on the subject of politics. To Orson Spencer, who was the third, I must do myself the justice to say, that I clearly and frequently expressed my opinion that the peace of their people would be promoted, if the Mormons should refrain from voting, or at least divide their votes about equally between the two great political parties. I however told him, as I ought to have done, that I had no advice to give on the subject, one way or the other.

I have the most indubitable testimony that my letter to the Warsaw people had no effect whatever, in inducing the Mormons to vote for Hoge. That letter was not sent by me, nor by my knowledge, authority or direction to Nauvoo, as has been asserted. At the time it was written, I had information upon which I relied, that about seventy-five or one hundred idle loafers, were encamping at Warsaw in a state of riot, drunkenness, and debauchery, training, threatening and boasting, what they would do with the Mormons. They were keeping up an agitation to no purpose, and I was further informed that most of the citizens of the town, who desired the restoration of peace and security, were becoming sick and tired of their silly and vain-glorious doings. It seemed to me then, that the dispersion of this disorderly rabble, was all that was necessary to restore quiet; and it was for this purpose that the so much complained of letter was written; and for no other. I left Quincy before all the numbers, which I had directed were printed; and charged Mr. Thompson, the editor of the Herald, to send them to Warsaw and to no other place. He informed me that he did send them to Warsaw and not one of them to Nauvoo. That the agitators at Warsaw, should have started the story, that I had sent them in great abundance to Nauvoo to influence the election, ought not to surprise you. No one knows better than you do, as you have repeatedly acknowledged to me, the system, prevailing at that time and before, in Hancock, of spreading false reports, for the purposes of agitation and excitement. You know, when we were there together, that nothing could be relied on as the truth in fact, that the truth could not even be ascertained across one of the streets of Carthage without being adulterated by a mixture of falsehood. The Warsaw people expected to have to stand a trial for the murder of the Smiths, and their policy manifestly was, to earn the sympathy; and claim the protection of one of the great political parties in the country. They could not have lit upon a more ungenerous mode of effecting their purpose, than that of boldly asserting, as they did, that they were about to be sacrificed, to an intrigue of the Democrats. This report being believed, rallied the whole Whig party in their favor; and will most probably be the means of saving some of them from a conviction, for one of the most dastardly and treacherous murders on record. It is to be hoped that the Whig party from a sense of decency and as being that party which, in profession, lays great load and high claims to the lovers of law and order, will hesitate, before they make themselves the victims of so shallow a trick.

If I am correctly informed, the Mormons were induced to vote, at the last election by two considerations; neither of which had any connexion with me or my conduct in any particular. The first was, that their opponents had held a convention, and nominated a ticket which they called the anti-Mormon ticket.' At this time the Mormons had no candidates and their leading men were in favor of having none. But the appearance of a ticket, brought out upon the principles of professed hostility and extermination, seemed to their minds to compel them to vote in self defence. About this time also Sidney Rigdon, then one of their leaders, arrived from Pittsburgh. He insisted upon their voting; and finally persuaded them, that if they did not vote the report would go abroad, and he believed through out the world, that the Mormons had dispersed and abandoned their religion; and that their city had been deserted and broken up; and these reports would seem to be sanctioned by the fact that no votes had been given in Nauvoo. These considerations appear to have had weight enough with the Mormons to induce them to vote. With their sufficiency or insufficiency, I have nothing to do whatever.

As to their particular motive in voting for Mr. Hoge, I am uninformd; except that he had voted for him at the previous election; and I have heard that he had been polite and attentive to them as a part of his constituents, in sending them documents and the like. I have also heard that Mr. Sweet the Whig candidate had visited every other place but Nauvoo; and had also declared himself against them. Under these circumstances, it is wonderful that the Mormons should vote against him without any special locus poe on my part to induce them to do so.

When the Legislature convenes I am perfectly willing that the Whigs may investigate this charge; and will abide by their decision; although I have no idea that the Whigs themselves will insist on it after the Presidential election. I have reason to believe that most of the Whig leaders already know it to be false. But according to the ideas of morality which too frequently characterize the leaders of parties, they do not wish to lose the benefit of it pending this important election. As to the other matters, I am perfectly certain that Col. Buckmaster never made any such statement as is contained in your letter. He could not have done so, with truth. And I am equally certain that I made no such statements to Sharp, as he represents. It ought not to surprise you, that he should endeavor to excuse his part in a disgraceful murder, by pretending some authority for his conduct. At a proper time, a fair narrative of this whole business will be laid before the public. I will content myself at present by simply stating that Sharp made a speech to the troops of Warsaw, to induce them to murder the Smiths. In that speech he expressly stated that the Governor was opposed to them, in their measures, and had refused to do them justice. He further stated, that the murder must be perpetrated, whilst the Governor was opposed to them, in driving off the Mormons. On this important occasion, when he was endeavoring to persuade men to do a desperate deed, and when the sanction of high authority would have been so much to his purpose, he never intimated any knowledge or consent on my part either express or implied; but expressly stated that I was opposed to their measures, and had refused to do them justice. And when it was further urged, that they ought to be in a hurry to commit the act, for fear I would get back from Nauvoo, and prevent it, the leader of the band said, 'damn the Governor, if he attempts to interfere we will kill him also; and all the band said 'amen.'

I think I very well understand, the meaning and intent of this charge, which the Warsaw people bring against me, of conniving at those murders. They think to frighten me by false charges, threatened to be supported by perjury, from doing a sacred duty. I regard it as a threat, on their part to implicate me in their guilt if I cause the matter to be investigated.

Under these circumstances, I would regard myself as pusillanimous in the extreme, and I would be so regarded justly, by the whole world, if I did not make the more haste, in setting proceedings afoot against them. No one knows better than myself the reasons for the delay which has already occurred.

You know that sometime last month, I made application to the President of the U. S., through Col. Kearney, for a detachment of the United States army, to be stationed in Hancock county during those proceedings. I have but very lately heard the result of that application, and now there is nothing any longer to delay me in what I ought to do. In the course of next month something will be done.

I had nearly forgotten to say that what was reported to you, as having been said by General Deming is totally false. I do not remember to have heard him say a word about either Whig or Democrat during his whole command, on that difficult and trying occasion.

I am respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
THOMAS FORD,
George T. M. Davis, Esq., Alton Ills.

Mysterious Affair.—By a letter received from a gentleman residing in Luray, Page county, Virginia, we are informed that on the 25th of October, a party were exploring a limestone cavern, known in that neighborhood as McCoy's Cave, when one of the gentlemen observing that the floor of a small apartment which they were in, sounded as though there was a cavity beneath, he searched carefully for an aperture, and at length found a large stralactite that had evidently fallen from above; he removed it with the assistance of his friends and saw an opening about thirty inches in diameter. They attached a lamp to a number of handkerchiefs tied to each other and lowered it as far as they would reach—and saw the bottom was no more than ten or eleven feet below them. The light was so dim that nothing could be distinguished—however, they immediately lowered a small ladder that they had brought for the purpose of exploration; and one of the gentlemen descended; he stepped upon an object that was unlike the rocks in the other parts of the cave, and upon looking at it, discovered to his horror, that it was the body of a man.

The face, hands, and legs below the knee (the remainder of the body being clothed) had much the appearance of an Egyptian mummy, being dried, and shrunken to the bones.

It was dressed with a pair of buckskin short breeches, fastened at the knees with four buttons; stockings that seemed to have been made of yarn but only a small portion remained. The coat was of blue cloth, entire, but so rotten that it came to pieces when slightly pulled; vest of a lighter colored cloth, and steel or iron buttons.

There was no hat seen; and the hair which was a dark brown, was slightly gray. The buttons of the coat were of brass, and corroded to a dark green color. In his hand was clutched a chain with a watch attached, and a broad flat gold key with a steel barrel.

In his pocket were several pieces of silver coin—three Spanish pistareens, and a smaller one, besides two trunk keys, with a ring to fasten them together. Many speculations were made as to the probable time of his death, all coincided in the opinion that he had fallen through the opening at some period long before, where, unable to get out, he had perished.

The body was recently interred in the burying ground attached to the Presbyterian church near Luray. No one now living can recollect having heard of any person being missed. From the character of the dress it is evident that he belonged to the past generation, and a mystery must forever involve the affair, to be used as a subject for the future novelist, or futile speculations. The Siamese Twins, the Wives and Babies.—A letter in the South Carolina Spartan, furnishes the following very interesting account of the Siamese Twins, their two wives and two babies. The letter reads:

'You may be aware that some few years since the Siamese Twins, Chang and Eng, retired from the public gaze, and settled down in Wilkes county, as farmers. You will also recollect that during last year it was published in some of the newspapers that they had married two sisters. This notice was treated as a hoax by some of the Journals and I inclined to think that public opinion settled that the two twins were living in a state of single blessedness. To my surprise I find that the supposed hoax is a literal fact, and that these distinguished characters are married men. Mrs. C. and Mrs. E. are well known to several of my personal acquaintances, and are said to be very amiable and industrious. Each of the ladies has presented her particular 'lord' with an heir, in the person of a fine fat, bouncing daughter!

It is said that Chang and Eng, with their wives and children, contemplate making a tour through this country in a year or two. The twins enjoy excellent health—are very lively, talkative, and apparently happy; and will doubtless prove more interesting and attractive in their second tour than they did in their first.'

Lima, August 14.

The last steamer from the intermedios brought us the news of the total defeat of Gen. Vivanco, by Gen. Castilla, near Arequipa. The former arrived on board the same steamer, with the greater part of his officers; as fugitives, and has been exiled by the here existing government, which has declared in favor of the Constitution of 1838, and the legal authorities instituted by the same. It is not yet known what course of policy Gen. Castilla will pursue; but as he always declared himself to be the champion of said constitution, it is expected he will submit to the legal Vice President proclaimed in Lima. This last political change has been brought about here in all order, and without the least noise. Don Domingo Elias, finding that public opinion was in favor of such constitution, himself convoked all the authorities, and resigned the executive power to the party designated by the law to fill the office of Vice President. The Congress is convened for the 9th of December, and we are in hopes it will settle all the disputes among the pretenders, as the nation is quite sick of these continued civil strife.

Aug. 19.—In politics there is nothing new. Gen. Castilla has not acceded to the proposals of Don Domingo Elias, for an amicable arrangement, and was preparing to come with his army from Arequipa to Callao, by sea. However we doubt whether he will be able to do so, and still expect he will, by and by, come to terms with the existing government, which would tranquilize the country at once, as we have at present no other parties to fear.'

A London paper says:—'Webster's American Dictionary of the English language, is now ordinarily esteemed the best work of the kind. It forms two octavo volumes, containing 85000 words, the price is three guineas, and an earlier date than 1841 should not be purchased.'

APOLOGY.
We issued no paper last week for the all sufficient reason, that our supply of paper to print on, was carried past Nauvoo, up the Mississippi, we know not how far, and did not return in time. Circumstances alter cases frequently and we have to be contented with the changes and chances that happen, whether agreeable or not. We would like to issue our paper weekly in season, and we would like lots of subscribers, and pay in advance, but disappointment, some how or other, has as much control of events and purses, as vigilance.

The prospect according to the final issue of the election, brightens and whether we get 'loaves and fishes,' or not we intend to pursue the even tenor of our way as heretofore, calculating that virtuous intentions, and laudable exertions, will be rewarded.

THE ELECTION.
A large majority of the people have decided that democracy is triumphant in the United States. So it seems that people shows, quelquechose, braggadocio, and blood-shows, have not stole the hearts of the people yet. The result of the Presidential election (unofficially) is about as follows:

FOREIGN NEWS.
We have our regular files from Europe to the 18th Oct. but they contain nothing of interest to the American reader. King Phillippe was visiting Queen Victoria, and news had arrived at London, that French and English honor had experienced a slight shock at Tahiti. The spirit of rioting waxes hotter and hotter; and we may expect more trouble than pleasure hereafter.

Jac.—Yesterday the ice commenced running in the Mississippi; and from appearances, as well as from feelings, we think old Winter's patrol will come to quarters about these days, and bridge the river.

RELIGIOUS MISCELLANY.
The Boston Courier contains a letter from Mrs. Childs on the subject of Millerism:—It is well written; she would make a Mormon if she had the spirit of God to direct her. In fact we feel gratified at witnessing, how perfectly every sect, denomination and even infidel, are fulfilling the old prophecies. Knowledge is increasing and men are running, 'to and fro,' and, as Jesus saith, would, if possible, (but is not possible,) deceive the very elect.

A few more strange delusions, like Millerism, will make many believe a lie, and be damned—and so the elect will know by these signs that redemption is nigh; yea, like the fig trees putting forth leaves,—then know ye that Summer is near.—But read the extract:—

I often hear this called a singular delusion; but to me it seems by no means singular. It is the legitimate result of the external theological teaching, which has prevailed, to a great extent, in our churches, ever since the country was colonized by Christians. The people have been told, for a series of years, that the world would be destroyed by material fire, and that the Messiah would come visibly in the heavens, to reign as a king on the earth. It is but one step more, to decide when these events will occur. The Jews, who, in the first advent of a Messiah, expected a powerful prince, to conquer the Romans, and restore the national glory of Judea, were not more grossly external in their application of the prophecies, than are the most of the ological commentators on the second advent. Yet unconscious of the limitation of their own vision, they speak with patronizing compassion of the blindness of the Jews. If men apply as much common sense to their theological investigations as they do to every other subject, they could not worship a God, who, having filled this world with millions of his children, would finally consign them all to eternal destruction, except a few who could be induced to believe in very difficult and doubtful explanations of prophecies handed down to us through the long lapse of ages. There is, however, a deeper cause for this excitement than blind theological teaching. The old heavens and the old earth are passing away. In other words, the religious sentiment of Christendom is changing, and of course, old theological opinions, which are merely the garb of sentiments, are everywhere falling off, like tattered and ill fitting garments. As the Church changes, the State inevitably changes, too; and the civil and social condition of man is slowly ascending to a higher plane.

This is felt, even by those who deprecate, and would avert it, if they could; and pressing thus on the universal consciousness, its ultimate and most external form is Millerism. The coming of a new heaven and a new earth cannot reveal itself to their apprehension through any other medium than the one in which they announce it.

HEAT.
The speculations of philosophers on heat have not unfrequently given great minds new ideas on the subject; we therefore present the following, which appeared in the Christian Freeman, Boston, in 1842.

We wish the Lyceum would take up the matter in a candid manner, and, as Dr. Cannon is now in the city, perhaps he would give them some further views on the subject.

DISSERTATION ON HEAT.
BY DR. H. CANNON.

Heat or caloric has from time immemorial, been supposed to have descended from the sun, and the belief has been so far rooted and established, that philosophers and astronomers talk about the heat of the sun, in the same terms as though it were a known fact. But that heat or caloric ever originated from the sun is not the fact. I am surprised that any observing person should think so, especially those who take the liberty to think for themselves. The simple operation of boiling water is a convincing evidence to any one of a philosophic mind, that it is the nature of heat to ascend. For instance, you may put a flat piece of metal on the top of a vessel filled partly or mostly with water, build a fire on top of said plate, continue the fire ever so long, and your water remains unboiled, and but a little warmed. Reverse the fire, and a reasonable degree of heat underneath will boil the water. In order to demonstrate facts, I procured a quantity of withered vegetables, put them on a scaffolding, made somewhat like fish flakes, placing my fermentables on the flakes, and they shortly after began a fermentation, and heat was evolved with a fetid gas. On the top the heat and gas were insupportable. I went underneath, and found every thing quiet and comfortable. I returned again above, and the heat had increased so much that I concluded to have recourse to a thermometer. I found on the top the mercury stood at one hundred and twenty degrees. Far, and underneath only fifty degrees. I infer from this that it is the nature of heat to ascend, and that heat never descended from the sun.

My second experiment was the following: I made an instrument, by putting two pieces of iron together, the base of foundation two feet in length; made a hole in the centre, and put a perpendicular standard into that, one foot and a half in length, and riveted it fast. I then built a small fire of charcoal, and put my instrument into the fire, and marked the result with as much precision as possible. The base of the instrument was raised above the hearth, so as to be in the most intense part of the fire. The two horizontal ones were in a state to be handled with comfort, when the perpendicular was red with heat. I conclude that the above experiments are sufficient to satisfy an observing mind that heat does not descend from the sun. If heat descended, and our earth was receiving it continually from the sun, and we should receive but one degree every year, we should arrive at boiling heat of water in 210 years.—And if we had been receiving one degree of heat every year, since creation, we should long ago have stood on a sea of glass mingled with fire, singing the song of Moses and the Lamb. Yes, our earth would not only have been reduced to a liquid molten state, but would have been reduced to a gaseous state—to its original elements. On the other hand, if our earth were losing its caloric, or heat, by ascending upwards, and not returning, our earth would become a frozen mass, and all nature would be frozen to death. I conclude, from the notice I have taken of light and heat, and their operations, that light acts in direct opposition to heat, and the reason why it is warmer in the day time than in the night, is because the light meets the heat in the morning, and carries it back to the earth, and we feel it more; partly owing to its increased quantity, and partly to its motion being turned back by the light.

At the meridian it is hottest, because of more direct rays than in the morning and evening. In the night the heat escapes high above the earth; hence the night is colder than the day.

The above are my views on heat, or caloric, and have been for more than thirty years. If others have published the same ideas, I never have been so fortunate as to see them. Much more might be said on this subject, but I forbear to be tedious.

NEW AND INTERESTING DISCOVERY IN SOUTH AMERICA.
The National Intelligencer contains a long letter from Mr. Prickett, at Lima, commenting upon the discoveries of extraordinary ruins, said to have been found by Judge Naito in the province of Chichapoyas, while on an exploring expedition. In making a survey of the country, he found, at Cenlap, a building of the most extraordinary character, which he describes a wall of hewn stone 360 feet in width, 2,600 feet in length, and 150 feet high.

This edifice being solid in the interior for the whole space contained within 5,376,000 feet circumference, which, it has to the before mentioned height of 150 feet, is solid and levelled; and upon it there is another wall of 300,000 feet in circumference in this form, 600 feet in length, and 500, in breadth, with the same elevation (150 feet) of the lower wall, and, like it, solid and levelled to the summit. In this elevation, and also in that of the lower wall, are a great many habitations or rooms of the same hewn stone, 18 feet long, and fifteen wide and in these rooms, as well as between the dividing walls of the great wall, are found neatly constructed niches, a yard broad or deep, in which are found bones of the ancient dead, some naked and some in cotton shrouds or blankets of a firm texture, though coarse, and all worked with borders of different colors. If this description is authentic—and we have no reason to doubt it—this must be the greatest building in the world in point of size. We know of nothing in Egypt or Persia to equal it. From the description it must have been a vast tomb, but whether erected by the Indians before the Spani discovery, or by remoter generations, cannot be decided; yet the Judge says that the ingenious and highly wrought specimens of workmanship, the elegance of the cutting of some of the hardest stone, the ingenuity and solidity of the gigantic work, all in stone, the elegant articles of gold and silver, and the curiously wrought stones found in the mounds, all satisfy him that that territory was occupied by an enlightened nation, which declined in the same manner as others more modern, as Babylon, Balbec, and the cities of Syria; and this, he says, is evidently the work of people from the old world, as the Indians have no instruments of iron to work with."

DISINTERMENT OF NINEVEH.
Our exchanges contain notices of letters received in Paris, from Constantinople, dated July. The letters contain interesting information relative to M. Botta's recent discoveries at Khorsahad, near Nineveh; Eugene Flaminin, an artist, has been sent out by the French government for the purpose of making drawings of the excavations which are actively going on. Botta has discovered two doors uniformly adorned with bas relief, on one side is represented a colossal bull, with a human head, and on the other a human figure with an eagle's head and wings. These doors are fifteen feet in height, and they open into a hall 120 feet long. The only wall which is yet cleared from rubbish, that on the South side, is covered with a series of bas reliefs, representing battles, explained by inscriptions. The hill on which this building stands is surrounded by a stone wall, with bastions. Botta is actively exploring these ruins; he has fifty laborers at work, and it is hoped that in the space of ten months he will open the whole. He has ascertained that there is, on the direct road from Nineveh to Khorsahad, a chain of hills covered with brick and marble bas reliefs, inscriptions. He infers that these hills were formerly the bases of palaces, and that Khorsahad was a fortress situated at one end of the city. The quadrangular space, which is surrounded by the wall, and which contains the hill of Jonah, has hitherto been supposed to include the whole extent of the city of Nineveh. But M. Botta considers it more probable that this space was only the great court of the place, whilst the city extended as far as the hill of Khorsahad, a distance of five caravan stages. This conjecture accords with the possibility of the prophet Jonah having wandered for three days about the city, which would be incomprehensible if the limited space of the quadrangle on the Tigris be supposed to have been the whole extent of the city.—Bulletin.

Outrage in Washington.—A gross and brutal outrage was committed on Saturday night about 11 o'clock, at the corner of 3d st. and Pennsylvania Avenue, upon the persons of James E. Harvey, Esq., formerly of the treasury department, and Mr. Sherman, an attorney at law, who was attacked by a body of ruffians, and to be from the Navy Yard, with brickbats bludgeons, &c. and seriously, one it is feared, fatally injured. The cause of course was politics. [Bal. Clipper.]

Earthquake at Sea.—By the arrival of the brig Judson, from Demerara, we learn by Capt. Russell, that on the 20th Oct., in lat. 19.3, long. 64, at 11 o'clock A. M., he felt a severe shock of an earthquake of 3 or 4 minutes duration, which caused the vessel to tremble as if going over a coral reef, being about 100 miles off the Island of Saba at the time.

The Snow Storm on the Lakes.—More disasters.—In consequence of the severe snow storm, the little steamer Emerald, from Buffalo for Chippewa, lost her course, and ran so hard on Bird Island, that she could not work herself off by steam. A boat was lowered, and a kedge anchor carried out for the purpose of hauling off. When the small boat was last seen by people on shore, it was capsized, drifting down the river, with two men hanging on it up to their necks in the water. The schooner Philadelphia is ashore at Cleveland, with a load of wheat from Michigan City, to Kinne & Co., of Buffalo. Two schooners are ashore at Black River, bound up. Names not known. Brig Henry Clay was sunk at Milan with a cargo of merchandise. The steamboat United States met the snow storm at Huron, and lay there from Sunday morning till Wednesday morning at two o'clock. The brig Emerald is ashore at Black River with a load of wheat from Chicago.

LITERARY.
It is with pleasure we offer the following preface to a book, which, if selected and compiled with the same wisdom and spirit that characterizes this, will be one step towards Mormon Literature; and so long as Mormonism must make the world better, the sooner we can teach it to the children the better. The author did not intend to publish his preface yet; but we took the responsibility of trying what virtue there was among the Saints for the encouragement of genius; so here it is.

THE MORMON READER.
Designed for the improvement of youth of both sexes; and expressly adapted to the more advanced classes in school.
By P. P. PRATT, Nauvoo, Ill., A. D. 1844.

PREFACE.
The increase of light, the progress of events, the enlargement of intellect, and the fulfilment of ancient promises and predictions in the present age of the world, have opened a new and extensive field for the exercise of talent; and for the development of the most pure and brilliant gems of intellect which had else remained buried like the pearl in the bosom of the great deep, or the ore in the depth of the mine.

The rich and varied productions of this new field have already accumulated so extensively, that we can have in store a great variety of original pieces, both in poetry and prose, which for purity of sentiment, style and eloquence, have few equals and no superiors, either in ancient or modern times.

These embrace subjects of intense interest, to the present and rising generation, not merely as specimens of eloquence or beautiful composition, but as containing sentiments and truths, adapted to our own age and circumstances, and in a great measure free from the errors, traditions and superstitions which are unavoidably interwoven with the otherwise beautiful and useful compositions of former times.

The object of the author, in preparing this work, is to embody and lay before the public; and also to perpetuate such of these as are best calculated to improve the understanding, to inform the judgment—to refine the taste, and to inspire the youthful mind with the noblest and purest sentiments of truth. And also to preserve the minds of the rising generation, from incorrect tradition and sectarian superstition and error.

Why should an American youth of the nineteenth century be referred to:—

Some sanguine field of Africa's sultry plains? Or list to Hannibal's heroic strains? Have we no patriot's speech to ponder o'er? No deeds, no words—no thoughts—no fields—no gore.

Or why should he be indebted to a Roman Senate, a Grecian theatre—or to a Cicero or Demosthenes; or some ancient bard for themes, and words to instruct our youth? Have we no senate—no statesmen—no orators—no poets—no original themes for the exercise of thought and talent?

Or has the world been petrified, or stereotyped, or buried like Herculaneum, or Pompeii, for the last thousand years?

Again, why should a Latter day Saint, while blessed with the glorious fulness of the gospel, and with the light of modern revelation, shining around him with the splendor of noonday, and with the kingdom and laws of God established on the earth for the restoration of all things, and the ushering in of the Millennium, be referred to the speech of Wm. Pitt, in the British Parliament, to the history of Columbus? or to the deeds and speeches of our early American statesmen and heroes? or to some thrilling scene of the Revolution, as to the only subjects worth his attention?

Is he not engaged in a revolution of greater magnitude—in a mightier struggle—in a more terrible war—in a work more lasting in its influence, and more extensive in its bearing upon men and things, than were our fathers? yes verily he is. Does he not witness more mighty achievements; more heroic deeds, more noble efforts; more generous sacrifices, more sufferings and patience, and perseverance, and finally, more triumphant victories than can be furnished in the history of the past? He certainly does.

Then of course it may be inferred that in proportion to the magnitude of the work, and to the greatness and sublimity of the theme which occupies the human mind, its powers are increased and expanded, and its strength and beauties are developed.

Our orators, our statesmen, our heroes, our patriots, poets and martyrs, present superior claims to our attention, while they speak in words that burn—or while they live to conquer.

Or die, to live again
And conquer all, and reign.

TRADES MEETING.
At a meeting of the several trades, held pursuant to public notice, on Tuesday, November, 19, 1844. John Taylor Esq., in the chair.

Meeting opened with prayer by Mr. Phineas Richards.

President John Taylor called for the report of the committee on Factories, and addressed the meeting, and stated the disadvantages of the English in the manufacture of Pottery, the amount of experience of getting material to make it, and the exchange of hands which must necessarily make it very dear in its importation to this country, and strongly urged upon the citizens of Nauvoo to enter into the manufacture of this article, inasmuch as we have all the necessary materials and a number of hands to engage in the business.

Mr. Carrola weaver, stated that he would shortly be able to have twelve looms ready for operation; that others are engaged in making spindles. The weavers are now waiting for cotton to commence. He further stated that he had used his influence with the farmers to raise sheep; he received very favorable answers that they intended keeping sheep and growing wool; a gentleman has tendered his carding machine.

Mr. John Taylor stated that the church has engaged to receive cotton and other raw material, as tithing, which shall be manufactured in this place.

Mr. Scovill gave a report from the committee on Factories, relative to the erection of a building for a manufacturing establishment, which stated that twelve hundred dollars could be obtained; that the building could be better erected by shares taken in stock; that it should be built of stone; that a committee should be appointed to take stock immediately, so that the building could be occupied by June so that the gentleman (Mr. Livingston) would be able to occupy it at an early period.

Mr. Repsher said he thought that the Act entitled an act for the incorporation of Agriculture and Manufacture was not sufficiently broad to answer the purpose of the society, and further advised that a new charter be obtained embracing every kind of manufacture, as silks &c. Mr. Taylor observed that the charter covered the whole ground.

Mr. Scovill read a copy of a letter sent to Mr. Livingston.

Mr. Taylor thought that the companies who go into manufacturing ought to bear their own burthens, if they could; if not they should be assisted.

Mr. Repsher thought that a general interest should be taken in this matter.

Mr. J. Smith said that we had a charter sufficient to go into every kind of Manufacture and that when any portion think well to go into any measure, ample provision was made to sustain them.

A motion was made and carried that a committee be appointed to investigate the best measures to be adopted, whereupon the Chair appointed Elder Orson Spencer, Judge Phelps, and Edward Hunter as said committee.

Mr. Hunter addressed the meeting and said that there was every encouragement for establishing any manufacturing in this place arising from the cheapness of provisions that every kind of farming utensils can be made at a good profit.

Mr. Roberts said in relation to the manufacture of Carriages—that he had manufactured Carriages at four hundred dollars per dozen, such as had been sold at sixty dollars each. He could make a common elliptic wagon at sixty dollars, such as are sold at one hundred dollars, if he had capital. He has now been engaged in making spinning wheels, which is a good business, but cannot supply the demand. He stated that several gentlemen have engaged to throw means into different branches which he might go into.

Mr. Carrol stated that he had no objections to manufactures which employed steam power, they would not discourage hands not so employed.

Mr. Taylor said in answer to Mr. Roberts remarks, that a carriage manufactory would be wanted, and a chair factory, and that a mutual exchange of goods made here by reciprocity would call into requisition many branches of business and employ many hands which now lay dormant.

citizens in their lives and property, and their civil and political rights.—What, Sir, but a national pride and dignity of honor, which ought to inspire every republican, have united in one common bond so many hundreds of brave and honorable men to stand ready, and at a beck to come forward in defence of the freedom and the sacred rights, not of a mere town, a county, but of a state? A body that may yet be a formidable safeguard to our common country.—Surely the spirit of the brave fathers of '76, must have rested upon this people, and the mantle of the immortal Washington have fallen upon that noble patriot, the late Genl Joseph Smith. He, whose name will be associated with none but the wise, the great, and the good. It was he who animated this populace to rise in their strength and embody themselves to ward of oppression, vice, and misery, and to contend for liberty, virtue, and the happiness of all men. Though he is dead, still

"His voice sounds like a prophet's word; And in its hollow tones, are heard The thanks of millions yet to be"

Sir with a desire to be governed by and promote correct principles; in the face of high heaven, I would ask all men of candor, whether or not these are not the great and grand governing principles of the Mormons.—Having no fear of a successful contradiction, I will aver that every honest man who will acquaint him self with our history, and our acts, will give the affirmative response—they are.—Then sir, with these views of the justice of our cause, I cannot think that any man, or set of men, will do less than cheerfully respond in favor of such a corps based as it is, in such principles, I would say in connection with every other glorious principle, let every effort be made to increase in magnitude and to perpetuate in coming time every institution guaranteed by the several constitutions and powers from whence they are derived.

I could dwell long on the merits of the Legion of the order and the attention given to their commanding officers, the sacrifices of time when called upon to drill, the brilliancy of their glittering arms, the amount of expense in being obliged to provide themselves with arms, together with their superior force, rank the Nauvoo Legion inferior to no independent, or voluntary military body in the Union.

I am informed that the foundation has been laid for the erection of an Arsenal, which no doubt will be on such a scale as to do honor to the Legion and others who may make common interest of this building by contributing to, or throwing in their shares in joint stock to the same.—Such a building will be the pride of our city, and render the most efficient service to our Legion; such a plan for the safe keeping of our arms is very much needed. A few months should the weather prove favorable, will give us the satisfaction of witnessing the enclosing of this building. Now gentlemen of the Legion let none withhold their efforts; let every man lend a helping hand to rear a temple to liberty.

CAUTION.

Mr. Editor: A sense of duty urges me to trouble you with a communication at this time. I am sorry that the name of Latter Day Saint was ever so disgraced as to be placed on the head of the subject of this communication.

Since our exile from the State of Missouri, we had to seek for ourselves homes wherever we could find them; and that too, under the most disadvantageous circumstances, being stripped and robbed of all our earthly goods, and possessions.

This was the condition of bro. Miner and Durfee, who purchased, some time after arriving here, a quarter section of land about four miles east of the Temple in Nauvoo. They purchased of a Mr. H. Patten, and agreed to pay him seven hundred and fifty dollars. They paid him five hundred and twenty dollars, mostly in hard days work building for him a house. They had also broken up about eighty acres of prairie on their new farm, built a good little frame house, and also a log one, and made one and a half miles of fence. These improvements could not have been made for less than five hundred dollars.

Now about the first of August last, one Ephraim S. Green, at the instance of Horace Burgess, as it is said, went to Quincy and bought this land from under Miner and Durfee of the original proprietor for a comparatively small sum unbeknown to them altogether. Miner and Durfee had obtained the cash to go and make the last payment, but neglected to do it for four or five days: when to their surprise, Green came and demanded possession, and of his great clemency offered them 110 acres of land 24 miles distant, consisting of barren oak ridges which he had previously offered for eighty dollars, having only a tax title, and two hundred dollars in money.—Durfee and Miner, being peaceable hard working men, concluded to accept the offer and avoid a difficulty.—Thus has Green disinherited two faithful, hard working, and respectable citizens—thrown them out of house and home to line his pockets with the fruits of their hard labor. He professes to be a Latter Day Saint; but we should advise him to go to Pittsburgh, or to Hampton, and mingle with his own kindred. He is not wanted here, and that is not all.

Now if the said Green will go and make good the wrong he has done to Durfee and Miner, in dollars and cents, and pay them for the trouble and vexation to which he has subjected them by his ungodly avarice, then he may have the fellowship of this people and dwell here in peace if he deals justly with his neighbor; but if he refuse to do this—let those who have unsettled business with him, close it up as soon as possible, and let no one who intends to be a Latter Day Saint commit any business to his charge; and let those who buy of him hereafter inherit the curse that is upon him, as the curse of Naaman the Syrian came to Gehazi, the servant of Elisha. See 2nd Kings 5th chapter 27 verse; And when any one meets him, though it be but a child in the streets, let him say, that is the speculator that has legally robbed honest men. Let every man, woman, and child frown upon him as he walks the streets. Let him be regarded as a nuisance; for nuisances can be removed by the charter of our city.

Having been personally acquainted with Miner and Durfee for many years, it gives me pleasure to say that they are honest men, and I take pleasure in speaking in their behalf, and against the knave who has wronged them out of their home, and sold it soon after for eleven hundred dollars. Let every other selfish speculator take warning by this.

ORSON HYDE.

MARRIED—On the 21st inst., by Elder Orson Hyde, Mr. Geo. Moore to Miss Mary E. Guinand.

Upon this occasion we were by no means neglected, but were presented with a fine loaf of bridal cake, over which we had quite a jubilee. We the partakers of the cake, wish the bride and bridegroom all the happiness imaginable; and say to them, may the blessings of heaven rest down upon them, and may their arms be loaded with Moors, which shall be an honor to their parents, and an ornament to their country.

The Physician may boast of his skill in many diseases, the Quack may puff his wonderful cures, but of all the remedies ever discovered for the diseases of the Pulmonary Organs, it is universally admitted that nothing has ever proved as successful as that unrivalled medicine—Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, which has effected some of the most astonishing cures ever recorded in the history of Medicine.

Read what it has done!

A Surprising Cure.—Mrs. Martha Wilson, a poor but highly respectable member of the Methodist Church, was also afflicted with Consumption in its worst forms, and considered by all her friends, past recovery. A bottle of this Balsam was presented to her, which relieved her immediately. This circumstance being made known to the members of the church, she purchased several bottles for her which relieved her entirely. The same society have purchased over FORTY bottles for persons in indigent circumstances, and positively assert it has not been used in a single instance where it has not given surprising relief.

We, the undersigned, members of the Derbin Benevolent Society of the Methodist Church have examined the above statement of Mrs. Wilson's case, hereby certify it is in all respects true, and earnestly recommend Dr. Wistar's remedy to all who are afflicted.

INDIAN ADVENTURES IN OHIO.

NARROW ESCAPE OF TWO SCOUTS.

As early as the year 1790, the black house and stockade, above the mouth of the Hocking river, was a frontier post for the hardy pioneers of the North West Territory, now that portion of our State from the Ohio River to the northern lakes. Then nature wore her undisturbed livery of dark and thick forests interspersed with green and flowing prairies. Then the axe of the woodman had not been heard in the wilderness, nor the plough of the husbandman tilled the heart of the green prairie.

Among the many rich and luxuriant valleys, that of the Hocking was pre-eminently for nature's richest gifts—and the portion of it whereon Lancaster now stands, was marked as the most luxuriant and picturesque, and became the seat of an Indian village, at a period so early that the memory of man runneth not parallel thereto. On the green sward of the prairie were held many a rude gambol of the Indians; and here, too, was many an assemblage of the warriors of the most powerful tribes taking council for a warfare, upon some weak and defenceless frontier post. Upon one of these war stirring occasions, intelligence reached the littlearrison above the mouth of the Hocking, that the Indians were gathering in force somewhere up the valley, for the purpose of striking a terrible blow on one of the few and scattering defenses of the whites. A council was held by the garrison and scouts sent up the Hocking, for the purpose of ascertaining the strength of the foe, and the probable point of attack. In the month of October, and one of the balmy days of late Indian summer, two men could have been seen emerging out of the thick pines and hazel bushes skirting the prairie, and steadily climbing the eastern declivity of that most remarkable prominence, now known as Mount Pleasant, whose eastern summit gives a commanding view to the eye of what is doing on the prairie. Every day brought an accession of warriors to those already assembled, and every day the scouts witnessed from their eyrie the horse racing, leaping, running, and throwing the deadly tomahawk, by the warriors. The Indians looked on with indifference—the scouts for the most part, engaged in their usual drudgery; and the purposes manifested their noisy wayward joy of childhood.

The arrival of any new party of warriors was hailed by the terrible war whoop, which striking the mortal life of Mount Pleasant, was driven back into the various indentations of the surrounding hills, producing reverberation on reverberation, and echo on echo, till it seemed as if ten thousand fiends were gathered in their orages. Such yells might well strike terror into the bosoms of those unaccustomed to them. To our scouts these were but martial music—strains which awaited their watchfulness and newly strung their iron frames. From their early youth they had always been on the frontier, and therefore were practised in all the subtle craft and cunning, as well as knowing the ferocity and bloodthirsty perseverance of the savage. They were not likely to be circumvented by the cunning of their foes; and without a desperate struggle, would not fall victims to the scalping knife.

On several occasions, small parties of warriors left the prairie, and ascended the mountain, on which occasions our scouts should have seen the flames of the rocks or the side of some long prostrate tree, covered with tobacco and yellow lead, and again leave their hiding place when their uninitiated guests had disappeared. For food they depended on jerked venison and cold corn bread, with which their knapsacks had been well stored. Fire they drew out of a rock, and this report of one of their rifles would bring upon them the entire force of the Indians. For drink they depended on some raw water, which was found in excavations of the rocks but in a few days this store was exhausted, and McClelland and White must abandon their enterprise, or find a new supply. McClelland being the eldest resolved to make the attempt. With a sturdy rifle in his grasp, and two canteens slung across his shoulders, he cautiously descended to the prairie, and starting the hills to the north as much as possible, within the hazel thickets, he struck a course for the Hocking river. He reached its margin and turning an abrupt point of a hill, he found a beautiful fountain of limpid water, now known as the Cold Spring, within a few feet of the river.

He filled his canteens, and returned in safety to his watchful companion. It was now determined to have a fresh supply of fresh water every day, and this duty was to be performed alternately. One of these occasions, after White had filled his canteens, he sat a few moments, watching the limpid element, as it came gurgling out of the bosom of the earth—the light sound of footsteps caught his practised ear, and upon turning round, he saw two squaws within a few feet of him; these upon turning the jut of the hill, had suddenly come upon him. The elder squaw gave one of those far reaching whoops, peculiar to the Indians. White at once comprehended his perilous situation—for if the alarm should reach the camp, he and his comrade must evidently perish. Self-preservation impelled him to a noiseless death on the squaw, and in such a manner as to leave no trace behind. Even rapid in thought and prompt in action he sprang upon his victim with the rapidity and power of a panther, and grasping the throat of each, with one bound he sprung into the Hocking, and rapidly thrust the head of the elder one under the water, and made strong efforts to submerge the younger, who, however, powerfully resisted.

During the short struggle, the younger female addressed him in his own language, though almost in inarticulate sounds. Releasing his hold, she informed him, that ten years before, she had been made a prisoner on Grave Creek Plateau, and that the Indians in her presence, butchered her mother and two of her sisters; and that an only brother, who had been captured with her, had succeeded, on the second night, in making his escape, but what had become of him she knew not.

During this narrative, White, unobserved by the girl, had let his grasp upon the elder squaw, whose body floated where it would not, probably, soon be found. He now directed the girl hastily to follow him, and with his usual energy and speed pushed for the mount.

They had scarcely gone two hundred yards from the spring, before the alarm cry was heard some quarter of a mile down the river. It was supposed that some warriors returning from a hunt, attacked Hocking, just as the body of the drowned squaw floated past. White and the girl succeeded in reaching the mount, where McClelland had been no different spectator to the sudden commotion among the Indians. As the prairie parties of Indians were seen to strike off in every direction, before White and the girl arrived, a party of some twenty warriors had gained the eastern declivity of the mount, and were cautiously ascending—carefully keeping under cover. Soon the two scouts saw the swarthy faces of the foe as they glided from tree to tree, and rock to rock, until the whole base of the mount was surrounded, and all hopes of escape cut off.

In this peril, nothing was left, other than to sell their lives as dearly as they could—this they resolved to do, and advised the girl to escape to the Indians as soon as possible and tell them she had been a captive to scouts. A she said "No, death, and that in the presence of my people, is to me a thousand times sweeter than captivity. Furnish me with a rifle, and I will show you that I can fight as well as die. This spot I leave not, were my bones shall lie, bleaching with yours; and should either of you escape, you will carry the tidings of my death to my remaining relatives."

Remonstrance proved fruitless; the two scouts matured their plans for a vigorous defense—proposing craft to craft—expedient to expedient—and an unerring fire of the deadly rifle. The attack commenced in front, where, from the narrow back-bone of the mount, the savages had to advance in single file, but where they could avail themselves of the rocks and trees. In advancing the warriors, must, however, be momentarily exposed, and two were indeed of his swarthy form, was a target for the unerring rifles of the scouts. After bravely maintaining the fight in front and keeping them in check, they discovered a new danger threatening them. The wary foe made every preparation to attack them in the flank, which could be most successful and fatally done by reaching an isolated rock, lying in one of the ravines on the southern hill-side. This rock once gained by the Indians, they could bring the scouts under point blank shot of the rifle, without the possibility of escape. Our brave scouts saw the hopelessness of their situation which nothing could avert, but a brave champion on an unerring shot—then they had not. But the brave never despair. With this caution, White resting upon the rocky crag, and a deadly rifle, and a steady aim, and an unerring shot, the strongest desire of vengeance on a treacherous foe could possibly produce.

Soon McClelland saw a tall and swarthy figure preparing to swing from a covey so near the fatal rock that a single bound must reach it, and all hope would be destroyed. He felt that all depended on one adventurous shot, although but one of the warrior's body was exposed; and that at the distance of one hundred yards, he resolved to risk all, and he raised the rifle to his eye, carefully aiming the sight with his hands. He drew him so close that he felt conscious it would be—he touched the hair trigger with his finger—the hammer came down—just as the striking fire crashed his rifle into a hundred fragments! Although he felt that the savage must reach the fatal rock before he could adjust another shot, he proceeded to the rock with the most unflinching courage, casting many a far-seeing glance towards the fearful point. Suddenly he saw the water stretching every muscle for the jump, and with the agility of a deer, he made the spring, but instead of reaching the rock, he found his feet in the air, and giving one terrible yell, he fell to the earth and his carcass rolled fifty feet down the hill, he had evidently received a death shot from some unknown hand. A hundred voices from below reached the terrible shout, and it was evident they had lost a favorite warrior, as well as being foiled for the time in the most important movement. A few minutes proved that the advantage so mysteriously gained would be of short duration, for already the scouts caught a glimpse of a swarthy warrior, cautiously advancing towards the cover so recently used by a fellow companion. Now, on the attack in the front was resumed with increased fury, so as to require the incessant fire of both scouts, to prevent the Indians from gaining the eminence, and in a short time McClelland saw a warrior behind the cover, preparing for a leap to gain the fatal rock—the leap was made and the warrior, turning a somersault, his corpse rolled down towards his companion—again a mysterious agent had interposed in their behalf. The second sacrifice cast dismay into the ranks of the assailants; and just as the sun was disappearing behind the western hills, the foe withdrew for the purpose of devising new modes of attack. The respite came most seasonably to the scouts, who had bravely maintained the unequal fight from the middle of the day.

Now, for the first time, was the girl missing, and the scouts supposed that through terror she had escaped to her former captors, or had been killed during the fight. They were not long left to doubt, for in a few moments the girl was seen emerging from behind a rock, and coming to them with a rifle in her hand. During the heat of the fight she saw a warrior fall, who had advanced some fifty yards before the main body in front. She at once resolved to possess herself of the rifle, and crushing in the under growth, she crept to the spot and succeeded in her enterprise, being all the time exposed to the cross fire of the assailants and defenders. Her practised eye had noticed the fatal rock, and her's was the mysterious hand by which the two warriors had fallen—the last being the most wary, untiring, blood-thirsty brave of the Shawnee tribe. He it was, who ten years previous, had scalped the family of the girl, and been her captor. In the west, dark clouds were gathering, and in an hour the whole heavens were shrouded in them. This darkness greatly embarrassed the scouts in their contemplated night retreat, for they might readily lose their way, or accidentally fall on the enemy, this being highly probable if not inevitable.

An hour's cogitation settled their plans, and it was the girl, from her intimate knowledge of the localities, should lead the advance a few steps. Another advantage might be gained from the arrangement, for in case they should fall in with some out-post, the girl's knowledge of the Indian tongue would perhaps enable her to deceive the sentinel; and so the sequel proved, for scarcely had they descended one hundred feet, when a "what" from the girl warned them of present danger. The scouts sank silently to the earth, where by previous agreement, they were to remain until another signal was given them by the girl, whose absence for more than a quarter of an hour, now began to excite most serious apprehensions. At length, she again appeared and told them that she had succeeded in removing two sentinels, who were directly in their route, to a point some hundred feet distant. The descent was noiselessly resumed—the level ground and the scouts followed the intrepid pioneer for half a mile in the most profound silence, when the harking of a small dog within a few feet apprized them of a new danger. The almost simultaneous click of the scouts' rifles was heard by the girl, who rapidly approached them and stated that they were in the midst of the Indian wigwams, and their lives depended on the most profound silence, and implicitly following her footsteps. A moment afterwards the girl was accosted by a squaw from an opening in the wigwam. She replied in the Indian language and without stopping, still pressed forward.

In a short time she stopped and assured the scouts that the village was now clear of and that they were now in safety. She knew every pass leading out of the prairie was safely guarded by the Indians, and at once resolved to adopt the bold adventure of passing through the very centre of their village, as the least hazardous. The result proved the correctness of her judgment. They may keep a course for the Ohio, being guided by the Hocking river—and after three days march and suffering, the party arrived at the block house in safety. Their escape from the Indians presented the contemptible attack; and the rescued girl proved to be the sister of the intrepid Neil Washburn, celebrated in history as the renowned scout to Captain Kenton's bloody Kentuckians.

The principal facts of this narrative were given by the brother of McClelland, a citizen of Lancaster; and the adventures related prove that the truth is sometimes stranger even than fiction.—M. S.

Coffee.—The whole product of this article for the 1843 is estimated at 159,000,000 lbs., of which Brazil is reckoned to have produced 170,000,000; Java 140,000,000, and Cuba 45,000,000. The remainder is divided in different proportions between St. Domingo, Porto Rico, the British and Dutch West Indies, Ceylon, French Colonies, East Indies and Mexico. Rio coffee is fast supplanting, especially for American consumption, the other descriptions. The production of Brazil has increased very largely within a few years, and the capability of this extensive and fertile empire for further and indefinite increase, together with the small amount of labor required for the cultivation and in fitting the commodity for market, point to Brazil as the chief source for the future supplies of this important article of commerce. It has been estimated that at three cents a pound, the cultivators of Brazilian coffee are better than any agricultural labor in the United States. The imports of coffee from Rio de Janeiro to this port have grown to considerable importance. The cities of Baltimore and Boston have hitherto been the chief markets for coffee from Brazil, but it is quite probable that the trade to New Orleans will rival either possibly both of them, in a few years. The trade of Brazil offers a great field for American enterprise. The recent action of the British government, designed to prohibit Brazil in company with other slave holding States, must render that empire more indifferent than before to a renewal of its commercial agreements with England, now about expiring. France and the United States, therefore, become the natural competitors for the traffic with Brazil. Our country can offer great inducements, and ought to supply, in return for coffee and other Brazilian commodities, nearly all the provisions and a very large proportion of the manufactured goods required in the empire, besides doing a great portion of the carrying trade.—*Mo. Lawyers.—Bless me, cried a stranger, on entering a court room, how many lawyers have you; how is it possible that half this number can find employment? Nothing so easily conceived, said a bystander; they live by watching each other. I conceive, says the stranger, how the case stands. The catchpole, watches the culprit, the attorney the catchpole, the counsellor the attorney, and the solicitor the counsellor. You put me in mind, says the bystander, of a fable I read when I was at school, which was this:—A grasshopper, wet with dew, was mortally stinging under a leaf, a wamgan that eats grasshoppers, was just stretching forth to devour it; a snake that eats wamgans lay coiled up ready to fasten upon the wamgan; the hawk that eats snakes had just stooped from above to seize the snake; all quietly intent upon their prey and unmindful of their danger. Just at the same moment, the wamgan ate the grasshopper, the snake ate the wamgan, the hawk ate the snake, when spurring from on high, a vulture gobbled up the hawk, snake, grasshopper, wamgan and all.

Canal Sold.—The Morris Canal was sold on Monday, at public auction in Newark, by Ira C. Whitehead, Esq., Master in Chancery, under a decree of the Court of Chancery in New Jersey, at the suit of Wilhelm Wilbur, Jr., representing the holders of the original Holland Loan. It was struck off to Asa Whitehead, John J. Bryant and Benjamin Williamson, Esqrs., for one million of dollars. It is understood that a new company has been found to revive, enlarge and prosecute the work, so that the trade from the coal regions of Pennsylvania can be direct to New York.

POETRY.

Lines written on the birth of the infant son of Mrs. Emma, widow of the late General Joseph Smith.

BY MISS E. R. SNOW.

Sin's angelic spirits—
Lovely as a morning flower,
Comes the smiling infant stranger,
In an evil-omen'd hour.

In an hour of lamentation—
In a time—a season when Zion's noblest sons are fallen,
By the hands of wicked men.

In an hour when peace and safety
Have the civil banner fled—
In a day when legal justice
Covers its dishonor'd head.

In an age when saints must suffer
Without mercy or redress;
Comes to meet a generation
That has made it fatherless.

Not to share a father's fondness—
Not to know its father's worth—
By the arm of persecution
'Tis an orphan at its birth!

Smile, sweet babe! thou art unconscious
Of thy great, unkindly loss!
The broad stroke of thy bereavement,
Zion's pathway seem'd to cross!

Till in childhood thou hadst known him,
Had the age, thy father spurn'd;
The endearment of remembrance,
Through thy life time thou hadst shar'd.

Thou may'st draw from love and kindness
All a mother can bestow;
But alas! on earth a father
Thou art destined not to know!

Nauvoo, Nov. 24th, 1841.

Lines written on the death of Father Hancock, who died near the Mobley Settlement, Hancock County, Ill., Oct. 1, 1841.

BY H. E. REED.

Gone, to the world of spirit; gone;
He's left this vale of tears,
The cabin and the garden spot,
In which he pass'd the remnant out,
Of his troubled years.

Gone—fire—these well; we lov'd thee dear;
No more we'll hear thy voice;
Our Sabbath meetings seem to mourn,
We look for fathers—father's gone
To meet no more with us.

Gone where the wicked never come;
The weary are at rest;
Pain, sickness, sorrow, all is o'er;
He's paid the debt, and can no more
He reigns amongst the blest.

From the N. Y. Tribune.

THE LOVELY BAND.

They grew together, a lovely band (Of brothers and sisters dear,
And they gaily play'd on the sea-girt strand,
And they knew not a single care,
Merrily over the high blue hills—
Merrily over the sea—
Over the crags where the eagle dwells,
They stray'd in their careless glee.

The butterfly said with a trembling wing,
As the laughing group drew nigh, [singing]
For they said—'He's a bright and a beautiful
And our prisoner he must be;
The silvery trout in the babbling brook
That wound through the meadow green, Scarce ventured out from his shady nook,
For he knew it was death—I ween.

The bob-o-link paused in his love-sick song,
And tied to the old elm tree,
As the chattering truant hurried along,
In chase of the tireless bee;
And then he warbled a lively song,
For a lively bird is he,
And he happy'd about the branches among,
As if proud of his minstrelsy.

When winter came on with his blustering storms
And covered the hills with snow,
Congaling the streams in his icy arms,
And peeping through the lattice through—
With his merry freight, the fairy sled
Glides swiftly over the stream,
Which rumbles along in its narrow bed,
Away to the sea, unseen.

Over the mountain of cold white snow—
Over the meadows of ice—
Through the valleys away they go—
In the glee of their sportive chase,
The happy hearts, and the sparkling eye,
That gather at eventide
Around the hearth—while the cold wind sighs, Might pardon a parent's pride.

For the budding flower hath a holy charm,
And it twines around the heart,
To be shielded there,—lest a breath of harm

Should a taint to its truth impart.
Shall I still go on with the lovely band—
And tell of their future years?
No! I'll leave them there on the sea-girt strand,
Away from life's withering cares.

FOCARONTAS.

A BOOK OF THE EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

A very natural curiosity having been expressed by the public, both at home and abroad, in regard to the progress of the 'Narrative of the United States Exploring Expedition during the years 1838, 1839, 1840, 1841, and 1842, by Charles Wilkes U. S. N., and but little or nothing having been published to gratify that curiosity, we have applied to the proper source, and have been permitted to say that considerable progress has been made at Philadelphia in printing the work. It will consist, first of five demi quarto volumes of about five hundred pages, each, illustrated very superbly with sixty-eight steel plates, about forty-six steel vignettes worked on pages of letter press, and two hundred wood cuts scattered through the work, with four very large maps and several smaller ones. This edition is ordered by Congress for distribution to foreign powers and a few libraries; it will be a very small one. A second edition, [if such it may] be called when both are simultaneously printed, of octavo size, will be published, and be under the control of Gen. J. Blanchard, of this city. The copyright of this belongs to and has been secured by the author. It will contain the same illustrations, the whole of which are in a very forward state; nearly two volumes of both editions are actually printed. From what we learn we should probably be safe in stating our belief that the whole will be ready for publication in three months. More attention has been given to the mere 'getting up' of this work than to any other published in this country. It is purely, in all its parts, an American production; the illustrations are highly creditable to our artists and draughtsmen, and may be classed with the best that have appeared in Europe; a large portion of these we have seen. When we nib our critical pen after the publication, we shall endeavor to convey to our readers a correct account of the literary execution. Great labor has undoubtedly been bestowed by the men attached to the expedition, to make this a truly elegant work. We anticipate its publication, in common with our countrymen, with considerable impatience.—Smith's Journal of Belles Letters.

AN ANIMATED WARMING PAN.

We can't tell where the following comes from, we find it straying about among our exchange papers, without an owner. Our readers may all have seen and laughed at it before, but if they have we are quite sure a second perusal will provoke a second and a heartier laugh. In Ireland a warming pan is called a friar. Not many years ago an unsophisticated girl took service in a hotel, in the town of —. Poor thing—she had never heard of a warming pan in her life, though she regularly confessed to a friar once a year.

It so happened on a cold and drizzly night that a priest took lodging at the inn. He had travelled far, and being weary, retired at an early hour. Soon after the mistress of the house called the servant girl.

'Betty, put the friar in No. 6.'
Up went Betty to the poor priest.
'Your reverence must go into No. 6, my mistress says.'

'How, what?' said he, annoyed at being disturbed.

'Your reverence must go into No. 6.'
There was no help for it, and the priest arose, donned a dressing gown and went into No. 6.

In about fifteen minutes the mistress called to Betty.

'Put the friar in No. 4.'
Betty said something about 'disturbing his reverence, which her mistress did not understand. So she told the girl in a sharp voice to do as she was directed, and she would always do right. Up went Betty, and the unhappy priest, despite of his angry protestations, was obliged to turn out of No. 6, and go into No. 4. But a little time elapsed ere the girl was told to put the friar in No. 8, and the poor priest thinking that every body was mad in the house, suddenly resolved to quit it the next morning, crept into the damp sheets of No. 4. But he was to enjoy no peace there; Betty was again directed to put the friar into No. 3, and with tears in her eyes he obeyed. In about an hour the landlady concluded to go to bed herself, and the friar was ordered into her room. 'Woe, woe, what it all meant,' Betty roused up the priest, and told him he must go into No. 2. 'The monk crossed himself, counted his beads, and went into No. 2.

It so happened that the landlady was troubled with the green-eyed monster. Going up to bed, therefore, before his wife, his suspicions were confirmed by seeing, between his own sheets, a man sound asleep. To rouse the sleeper and kick him into the street was the work of a moment; nor was the mistake explained until next day, when the priest informed the innkeeper what outrages had been committed upon him, and he learned to his amazement, that he had been serving the whole night as a warming pan.

A Vision.—Beautifully the sun went down behind the western horizon, tinging the clouds and hill-tops with its mellow golden light. After watching the lovely scene with calm and quiet admiration, until the glorious light of day had given place to mellow twilight, and that had been superseded by the darkness of night, illumined only by the far-off twinkling stars, I retired to my repose, and being somewhat fatigued, was soon in the land of dreams. I thought I was flying through the air towards the golden clouds of sunset, on the wings of dazzling brightness, and, in my delighted and enraptured imagination, I had almost reached the bright portals, when I was suddenly awakened by the cry from below stairs, 'Jacob come down here, Polly has got the cholera!'—Post.

Important Discovery.—The attention of the iron masters has been attracted to a process of considerable importance lately introduced into their manufacture.—The application of electricity, to supersede several of the expensive processes, has, it is stated, been tried in the Welsh and Derbyshire furnaces, with satisfactory results. It appears that the costly fuel and labor required for the purification of the ore from sulphur, and phosphorus, and subtle elements, create its high market value, and these being all electro-negative, have induced the new process, whereby the impure stream of metal, after flowing from the blast, is in its moment of consolidation, subjected to a powerful voltaic battery, which so disengages the impure components that in the process of puddling, they are readily extracted. The London blacksmiths, it is stated, have tested this iron after a single reheating, and pronounce it the best metal in the market. By the same process an experiment was tried by Dr. Ure, by whom a soft rod of iron was held in contact with a moderate red heat, and that gentleman is understood to have stated that in a few hours these facts prove what they seem they are calculated to affect most seriously this important branch of our trade. [Newcastle Advertiser.]

Corn Stalk Sugar.—Mr. John Beal, of New Harmony, Ia., has made 395 lbs. of good sugar this season, from the corn-stalks that grow on three quarters of an acre. This is at the rate of 500 lbs. per acre. His plan is thus briefly noticed in the Cleveland Herald. When the ears begin to form they are pulled off. When the leaves are dead, about half way up the stalk is stripped of leaves, cut up at the root, the top cut off, and then ground in a sugar mill. Twenty stalks will yield about one pound and a half, and three fourths of this is ground sugar. Mr. B. made 80 lbs. in a day, with a simple apparatus of his own construction. Five hundred pounds at 4 cents per lb. is $20 per acre. It would have produced, say 50 bushels of corn, at 25 cents, or $12.50.

Painful Suspense.—A gentleman named McRay, who lately arrived at Apalachicola from New York, on board the brig Ann Eliza, left his wife at a public house while he proceeded to transact some business. When he returned she could not be found.

Search was instantly made, but for two days it had proved fruitless. It is supposed that she labored under some mental derangement, and had wandered into the woods or drowned herself. A party of gentlemen started on horseback to look for her.

Have seen.—Persons go into a mechanic's shop in cold weather, where the workmen were at work in their shirt sleeves, and leave the door open; and I have seen the same persons stand up or seat themselves around the stove, keeping the heat from the workmen, causing them to shake as with an ague fit; and when I saw these things I said to myself, 'this is an unkind and unfeeling generation.'

Fire at Oberlin, Ohio.—The steam mill at Oberlin, owned by Messrs. Beebe and Horton, was burned on the 9th ult. Loss of building and machinery estimated at $2,000; grain, flour, &c., about $400.

Indian War in Texas.—Indians from the United States have made an incursion into Northern Texas, on the Louisiana border. The military around Natchitoches have been ordered out to defend the neighborhood.

Who, present or absent, thinks and says the same of his friend and enemy, is more than honest—more than man—he is a hero.

SIDNEY RIGDON.

Cincinnati, Oct. 21, 1844.

Dear Brother,
To-morrow is the great and awful day on which the Lord shall ride forth in view of all nations upon his burning throne, wrapped in the garments of vengeance, environed with fleecy clouds, with streams of burning fire issuing from his mouth, whilst the shrill blast from Gabriel's trumpet shall wreck nature in her onward passage, and summon her guilty sons to appear in judgement, according to Mr. Miller's system of computation; but all the believers in these notions will undoubtedly learn one thing by the stand which they have taken, and that is, that they understand but little of God, of his ways, or of his word.

I have just heard from Nauvoo. They are going on at a firm and steady pace, since the expulsion of the Laws, Higbees, Fosters and Elder Rigdon and his followers; the people there are now settling down in a strong and heavenly union; every thing moves on like clock-work, and I will now venture a prediction, that since Nauvoo has thrown off so much bile from its stomach it will be more healthy, and less complaints about spiritual wives, adultery, bogus making, &c. &c. Elder Rigdon has been associated with Joseph and Hyrum Smith as a counsellor to the Church, and he told me in Far West that it was the imperative duty of the Church to obey the word of Joseph Smith, or the presidency, without question or inquiry, and that if there were any that would not, they should have their throats cut from ear ear. I did not believe this—said I to myself, can the spirit of God dwell in that man's heart?—I answer, no! This, together with some other transactions of his and his son-in-law, was the cause of my taking the course that I did in Missouri; let my offence, then, be charged to their account in the day of Judgment, for I do declare before God and man, that they were the cause of it. Such kind of language I never heard from Joseph or Hyrum Smith; neither did they preach a 'salt sermon' nor tell a 'granny parish story,' nor boast of throwing any one aside into the hazel brush.

Now, Elder Rigdon, admitting all your charges against the church and the Twelve to be correct, for the sake of argument, I would ask by whom have they Smith, and your humble self.

Why, then, do you turn traitor, to bring distress and reproach upon a people, for crimes with which you charge them, when you have had the honor, according to your present position, of leading and conducting us into them? You may say that you have taken little or no part with the Church for the last five years—very well. Then as you have not been faithful over a few things, how could you expect to be made ruler over many? But you may say that you have been ignorant of the wickedness and crime carried on in our church for several years: what I and stood next the head too!! If your vision was not clear enough to discover such glaring wickedness before, you are not a seer keen enough to be entrusted with the care of this Church. You may be sure that these crimes were committed in secret and unknown to you; if you possess the spirit of God, you would have known them if they had existed, for that teaches all things; but if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his. The Church knew you came to them, not with the spirit of Christ, but with a lying spirit, and therefore, they would not hear you; 'my sheep' says Christ 'hear my voice, but a stranger they will not follow.'—This is the reason they would not follow you. Then they were the sheep of the bad shepherd, and you said you were the shepherd to lead. You may say that we are all goats; well—who built us up and taught us? your humble self claims this; can a stream rise above its fountain? No. You claim to have stood at the head, and if we are goats, you are a goat, and possibly, Daniel's he goat whose horn was broken.

Elder Rigdon if you knew the people of Nauvoo were so basely wicked as you now represent them; why did you use the following language to them on the sabbath before you were expelled from the church, in public address to some five or six thousand people. 'Brethren, the time of your affliction and trouble is almost at an end you shall prosper, and go forward, and not backward. You shall rise up, and not to be put down; you shall have prosperity, and not adversity. You shall be blest with all blessings in heavenly places in Christ Jesus.' [Balaam could not curse Israel, but bless.]

'Glory, hallelujah to God and the Lamb.' You may say that you did not know then that the Church would reject you; but they had rejected you from being a leader two or three weeks before that, by a unanimous vote. But you may say that you blest us upon the condition that we did not take away your license, and reject you altogether as a minister; why, then, did you use this language to us when we demanded your license?—I have set here and laughed at your proceedings all the evening, to see you fulfil the vision the Lord gave me in Pittsburgh. I saw you demand my license, and cut me off. Oh shame! shame!! on a man that will suffer himself to be drawn away in the gulf stream of inconsistency, and wrecked upon the fatal reefs of falsehood and treachery.

Now, Elder Rigdon, if you had the vision in Pittsburgh that you would be rejected by the Church in Nauvoo, as you declared to us you did, after we really cut you off, why did you declare to a public audience in Pittsburgh just before you left for Nauvoo, the last time, that you were to be the leader, and that the matter was known and understood by the Church?

And again, if you had the same vision in Pittsburgh concerning Joseph and Hyrum's death, that Cole said he, and, and Joseph, and Hyrum had in Nauvoo, and on examination of the date of your vision found it to have taken place at the same time that the vision was shown to them in Nauvoo; why did you say to people in Pittsburgh on hearing of the death of Joseph and Hyrum through the newspapers that such a thing could not be true, that you did not believe it. When the vision was that they saw Joseph and Hyrum in Carthage jail—saw a great number of men running towards it, armed—saw them point their guns at the jail—saw the flash and smoke arise—heard the report of guns, and saw Joseph fall out of the window dead; and you claimed that the very same was shown you in Pittsburgh before the scene really took place; and yet, when the report came to you in the paper, you told a large audience in that place that it could not be true—you did not believe it. What!—did you not believe your own vision? then how can you blame others for not believing it? You may say that you never made any such statements in Pittsburgh; but I stand ready to prove that you did.

Now, Elder Rigdon, I ask a few plain and serious questions for you to answer if you please. If you had known for a long time that we had not been led by the Lord, as you said you had when we demanded your license, why did you wait till that late before you apprised us of our condition? Why did you remain silent when the prophet lived? Why did you not find out your duty towards us before the Twelve were such bad men as you now represent them, why did you not come into our councils when we respectfully solicited you to do so, and there lift up your voice and try to reclaim us from those damning sins of which you say we are guilty? If sin we have committed, it is in following your instructions too far, and you have been one of our leaders.—Your declaration was, in Far West, that 'if any would not tamely listen to the dictates of their leaders, they should have their throats cut from ear to ear; and you have evidence that I have ever since looked upon you as a base and wicked tyrant. And in that character do I now regard you.

Now, sir, you have taken a stand against virtuous and innocent people, and because your lying, hypocritical spirit was detected in Nauvoo, as it was once before in Kirtland, Ohio, by Joseph Smith when you lied to the Church in the name of the Lord, and afterwards confessed to the people your black and wicked design: you now try to cover your inglorious retreat by throwing dust and smoke into the eyes of your pursuers, but, sir, the spirit of God will clear our way. And now I will speak a word of thy brethren, John C. Bennett, Higbees, Fosters, and Laws. They are beasts, or cattle made to be taken and destroyed in their own nets. But thou art cursed above all cattle, on thy belly shalt thou go until thou lick up the dust of the feet of those persons whose characters thou has so vilely and wickedly traduced. If this people had received you as their leader, they would have been in your mouth, a good people; but now they rejected you, they are very bad, and guilty of all manner of crime. We will try to get out of the difficulties into which you have brought us, and when we want your labors or assistance hereafter we will call on you.

One week before Elder Rigdon was expelled from the Church, he told us in his sermon that he was going to fight a great many battles in this country, and then carry his victorious arms over to Old England, encounter the Queen's forces, and subdue them. Then he would enter the palace of Her Majesty, and demand of her a portion of her wealth and dominions: 'and if,' said he, 'she will not do it, I will take the little madam by the nose, and lend her out, and she shall have no power to help herself.' The Lord has declared this to me from heaven, and if I do not do it the Lord never spake by mortal! Elder Rigdon will never do this unless he is born again.—But he went on to tell us that his army was to be composed of saints, worldlings, black legs, counterfeiters, bogus-makers &c. &c. 'Yet' said he 'these are all honorable minded men, and lovers of liberty.' The people of Nauvoo thought if such characters were to compose his conquering army, they would not enlist; for they did not believe that the God of heaven ever suggested any such thing; yet the god of this world might. This company were to rendezvous at, or near Pittsburgh, and also commence their fighting near that place. I left Nauvoo in the same boat with Elder Rigdon, several of his adherents went with him, and also three or four men who had been pointed out to me as suspicious characters, supposed to be counterfeiters, came on board in his company, and with whom he appeared intimate and friendly.

Well, with this force, perhaps, Elder Rigdon, will go forth, conquering and to conquer, and gather together the nations and kings to the battle of the great God.

He is going his whole length in lies and slander, and his satellites in Pittsburgh are charging the saints in Nauvoo, with things that eye hath not seen, nor ear heard; neither hath it entered into the heart of man, except his own and those who are of their spirit. Let not the saints in the East be insulted by such a tirade of abuse and slang, the spirit which they possess is a lying one, and as an evidence of this, Ebenezer Robinson came down to this city the other day to get a printing press, and reported here that Elder Rigdon had been on his knees to Elder Rigdon and acknowledged his authority. Wonderful! wonderful!!—all excitement and confusion! But Elder Page, the very day that Robinson left, and he says that he told Elder Rigdon if he would present the same amount of evidence that he held the keys of the kingdom that Joseph Smith had that he held them, he would confess his authority on his knees; and bent his knees to the floor in the presence of Elder Rigdon, to show him, what he would do could he show proper reasons; 'But' says Elder Page, 'if you do not do it I never will acknowledge your authority; and I know you cannot do it.' I have merely given you this example to let you see that you can put no confidence in what they say; for they will lie and basely misrepresent.

O. HYDE.
N. B. Elders Taylor and Richards who were Joseph's intimate friends, were in the prison with him and Hyrum until they were shot. But they never heard Joseph intimate a word about such a vision had any such vision, Mrs. Taylor and Richards are the very men to whom he would have told it if he had told it to any one.

From the N. Y. Herald.

MAJOR NOAH'S GREAT LECTURE AT THE TABERNACLE, ON THE RESTORATION OF THE SCATTERED TRIBES OF ISRAEL TO THE LAND OF PALESTINE.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, a very large auditory assembled in the Tabernacle, to hear Mordecai Munnah Noah's announcement of his grand project for the restoration of the Jews to the Holy Land. A great number of the clergy of all denominations in the city were present, and amongst them, closely wrapped up in the ample folds of a large blue cloak, the Right Reverend Bishop Hughes. The attendance of the ladies—who have ever been very deeply interested in all matters connected with the fulfilment of the prophecies and the introduction of the millennium—was limited, owing to the storm; but still there was a considerable number of them present, some of them of surpassing beauty. The front pews, especially, were graced by a very brilliant circle, chiefly composed of the daughters of Israel.

About half past seven o'clock, the Sacred Music Society sang a hymn, having reference to the restoration of the ancient splendor of Jerusalem. Mr. Noah then ascended the rostrum, and read a lecture, of which we annex a succinct report:—

I have long desired an opportunity to appear before you in behalf of a venerable people, whose history—whose sufferings—and whose extraordinary destiny, have, for a period of 4,000 years, filled the world with awe and astonishment; a people at once the most favored and the most neglected—the most beloved, and yet the most persecuted—a people under whose salutary laws all the civilized nations of the earth now repose—a people whose origin can date from the cradle of creation, and who are likely to be preserved to the last moment of recorded time. I have been anxious to appeal to you, fellow citizens and Christians, in behalf of the chosen and beloved people of Almighty God—to ask you to do justice to their character, to their constancy, and to their triumphant faith—to feel for their sufferings and woes—to extend to them your powerful protection, and to aid in the fulfilment of their destiny by helping to restore them to the land of their forefathers, and the possession of their ancient heritage. It is, I acknowledge, a novel, though a natural appeal, made I may say, for the first time to Christians since the advent of Christianity. But the period has, I believe, arrived for this appeal. Extraordinary events shadow forth results, long expected, long promised, long ordained. Commotions in the State, and divisions in the church—new theories put forth—new hopes excited—new promises made—and the political events in Syria, Egypt, Turkey and Russia, indicate the approach of great and important revolutions which may facilitate the return of the Jews to Judea, and the introduction of that millennium which we all look for—all hope for—and all pray for. Where, I ask, can we commence this great work of regeneration with a better prospect of success than in a free country, and under a liberal government? Where can we plead the cause of independence of the children of Israel with greater confidence than in the cradle of American liberty? Where ask for toleration and kindness for the seed of Abraham, if we find it not amongst the descendants of the pilgrims? (Applause.) Mr. Noah then went on to speak of the antiquity of the Jews, and of the cause which had provoked against them the hostility of other nations. The deep rooted hatred of the nations to the Israelites was therefore traceable to one cause. The Egyptians, who worshipped beasts; could not tolerate a people who worshipped the true God. The Greeks, Cannanites, and Romans, were always their enemies for the same reasons. But how necessary for the oppressions of our Christian brethren? Let me probe these causes to their foundation, by showing the errors of the followers of the early Christians. I approach this in a spirit of respect for those who have me. Born and educated among Christians—having through their confidence and liberality, held various public offices of trust—I come to its discussion with the most charitable and apostolic feelings. In the first spirit, then, I will explain, for the first time in some centuries, this subject. We have the authority of early writers and illustrious historians for the undeniable truth, that all the calamities of the Jews, as a people, are the results of the agency of our fathers in conspiring the death of Jesus of Nazareth. We are, it is said, crushed beneath the cross. It is the desire to evangelize the Jews, and thus atone for that alleged great sin. Let us calmly examine this subject; let us examine the condition of the Jews at that time. The sins of the chosen people, chiefly idolatry, occurred before the Babylonian captivity. Since then those sins have not been repeated, and their fidelity remains unquestioned to the present day. Their glory under Solomon excited the envy and jealousy of surrounding nations. On their return, under the decree of Cyrus, they were subjected to great persecutions and several divisions took place. The Persian empire was at length subdued by Alexander the Great. The Jews kept steadfast by Darius, which incensed Alexander, who, however, struck by the imposing splendor of their religion, became their friend. His death was followed by a long series of difficulties, persecutions and trials. An effort was made to retrieve their condition, and under Judas Maccabees this was in a great degree accomplished. But at last the Jews passed under the Roman yoke, and after unparalleled sufferings, Herod as cended the throne of Judea, and oppressed the people to such a degree, that he became universally unpopular; in an effort to regain the favor of the people he restored and beautified the Temple. It was at this period of prostration that Jesus of Nazareth was born. They had expected at that time a temporal deliverer. They sighed for liberty and vengeance. Jesus was not this one they expected. His message of peace held out no hope. He was no warrior. He unfurled no banner—sounded no trumpet—prophesied no victory over the Pagans, and the Jews gave themselves up to despair. In order to understand it, we must endeavor to place ourselves in their position. A rich and powerful nation, enjoying a happy mode of laws, noble rulers, a pious priesthood were suddenly overrun by robbers and murderers. Their resources were quite exhausted. Sinking, defaced, decayed, the once proud people desisted by hope and almost abandoned by God, the rays of the setting sun falling on the brazen helmet of the Roman centurion keeping guard over the Holiest of Holies—at that period Jesus of Nazareth was born. Corruption, profligacy and intrigue had reached high places. Jesus was the most resolute of reformers—preaching against hypocrisy and vice—he became formidable by his decision of character and withering rebuke. He preached with unsurpassed eloquence. He proclaimed himself Son of God and the Savior of the world. The Jews were annoyed, perplexed, bewildered. They had known him from his childhood. They knew his relatives: they remembered him a boy—as a man pursuing till the age of thirty his humble calling. Then they saw him announce himself as the Savior of the world—performing, as is alleged in the Evangelist, wonderful miracles—and surrounded by bands of disciples, humble, but of extraordinary decision. The Jews became alarmed. They proceeded to bring him to trial in the manner prescribed in the law. I regard that trial as having been illegal—as having been proceeded with in an hour of panic. He did not come under the law. The language of the parables was mysterious. Jesus acknowledged the unity of God. He prayed to him. He disclaimed any intention of altering the Mosaic law. The assumption of the title of the 'Son of God' was not unusual. The same avoidance of any claims to Godhead was observable in the writings of the Apostles. It was not, therefore, altogether the charge of assuming the title of the 'Son of God'—it was not the leading cause of the accusation of the Sanhedrim. It was the sedition, and not altogether the blasphemy, which led to conviction. It was the assumption of the prerogatives of Caesar which led to the Roman punishment—the crucifixion. The insults of the convicted Jews came from the Romish soldiery, and the mobs which even in our day disgrace all that is held sacred. It is not my duty to condemn or justify my ancestors in that dire extremity. But if there are mitigating circumstances, I must spread them before you, and at all events I am justified in appealing to you against the ascription to us of what was done 1,800 years ago. Had Jesus been acknowledged as king at that fearful crisis, the people would have sunk under Paganism. We should have been all darkness now. But Christianity arose; Jesus was put to death and it went forth amongst the nations, and after the reformation shone forth with a brightness such as its great Master intended. The Jews did nothing but what God ordained. He is I trust, now leading us back in peace and happiness to possess our promised land. What a miracle! Can you not see that God designed all this? 'The secret things are from the Lord.' Full appreciation of the designs of the society for the Evangelization of the Jews. I do not think—pardon me for saying so, that their success has been commensurate with the effort. My desire is that they should unite in restoring the Jews in their converted state, relying on God for the rest. Among a people specially preserved, the change of faith is almost insurmountable. It is also impolitic to send converted Jews to preach Christianity amongst the brethren. They are always suspected. Equally impolitic was the consecration of a converted Jew as Christian Bishop of Jerusalem. If your efforts are still to be directed to evangelization, as well as restoration, send pious Christians to them—they will be well received, and their mission treated with confidence and regard. But ask the great question of yourselves. Is it not your duty to restore the Jews? Are we not the only witnesses of the unity of God, and the truth of the Bible? The predictions of our restoration are as full as were those of our overthrow. Has God cast off his people? or has he merely visited their transgressions with punishment? In almost every page of the Bible we have directly and indirectly the literal assurance and guarantee of the restoration of the Jews to Judea. We have suffered the curses and now await the blessing. The past has been dark indeed—the future is full of glory and splendor. God's eye has ever been upon us. To us he committed the lamp which has illumined the world; and we have held it with a steady light to illumine the Gentiles. No—no—What would all be without our restoration? Our land has long mourned—shall it not rejoice? Innumerable are the promises in our favor. The current is strong and impulsive throughout the writings of the illustrious prophet, Isaiah. On these unfulfilled predictions rests the happiness of the human race; and you are partners in the contract—share in the glory. These passages recollect, relate not to the spiritual, but to the temporal restoration of the Jews. Above all, you that believe in the predictions of your Apostles, and in the second coming of the Son of Man—where is he to come to? To Zion—to the Jews. And yet you would convert them here! You seek to evangelize them in the face of all the predictions that they will occupy the Holy Land as Jews! Within the last twenty-five years great revolutions have occurred in the East, marking distinctly the progress of Christianity. Mr. Wentworth, to describe the recent revolutions in the East, and expressed the opinion that the end of Palestine was destined soon to become the great meeting ground between the contending powers of Europe and Asia, and that then it would revert to its original possessors. This is our destiny. Every attempt to colonize us elsewhere has failed. The Jews are in a most favorable position to re-possess the holy land. They are at this time steadily advancing the cause of education—Wherever the liberality of governments allow, they are pursuing with success agriculture and the arts. The soil of Palestine is lofty and rich. The climate is salubrious. A double crop in the lowlands may be annually expected. Corn, wheat, tobacco, olives, mulberry trees, cotton trees, grapes, cochineal, the coffee tree, orange, fig, date, pine-apple, pomegranates are all abundant. The ports are numerous and can be re-occupied. Manufactures can soon be established. Two millions of Jews reside with twenty miles of the Holy City. The Jews throughout the world are numerous. So far as industry—science—love of arts—enterprise, want to furnish encouragement for the settlement of India by the Jews, the enterprise was most inviting. Mr. Noah then proceeded to announce his project for the 'restoration.' It was, that all the Christian Societies of the United States should unite in supplicating the Sultan of Turkey to grant permission to the Jews to hold landed property in India, on the same conditions as the Musselmans. This was all that he proposed, and this, he contended, was all that was necessary. In conclusion, he urged with considerable eloquence upon his Christian auditory, the duty of aiding in the restoration of the 'Chosen People.' He implored them to dismiss their prejudices—to emulate the example of Christ, and to love the children for the Father's sake. We have, said he, lost all—country—government—kingdom and power. You have it all. It is yours. It once was ours. It is again to be restored to us. Dismiss, therefore, from your hearts all prejudices. The chosen people are worthy of your love, your confidence and respect. It is nothing to have had such fathers and founders of their faith as Abraham, Isaac and Jacob—such mothers as Sarah, Rebecca, Leah and Rachel? Is it nothing to have been deemed worthy by the Almighty to have a path made for them through the waste of waters? To have been led to Sinai, and there to have received the precious gift of that law which we all revere and hold sacred to this day? Is it nothing to have erected the temple at Jerusalem? Is it nothing to have outlived all the nations of the earth, and to have survived all who sought to ruin and destroy? Where are those who fought at Marathon, and Salamis and Luctra? Where are the Generals of Alexander—the mighty crowds of Xerxes? Where are the bones which once whitened the plains of Troy? We only hear of them in the pages of history. But if you ask where are the descendants of those who fought beneath the walls of Jerusalem—the subjects of David and Solomon—the brethren of Jesus? I answer, I am (applause) here, miraculously preserved, the pure and unminged blood of the Hebrew, having the law for our light and God for our redeemer. Amid persecutions the most severe and protracted we have abided by the faith. When bound to the stake by men who claimed to be Christians, and when the flames hissed and crackled around them—when exhausted and dying, they called on God to sustain them in their extremity; a still small voice, pure and angelic, whispered in their ear—'Fear not Jacob, I am with thee!' Countrymen and citizens, think God your hands and hearts are free from the stain of such iniquity.—(Applause.) After dwelling at some length on the argument that Christ had come for the Christian, but not for the Jew, and that he would come to the latter only after the restoration, Mr. Noah made a warm acknowledgment of the services rendered to the church in all ages by woman—Jew and Gentile—and concluded by an earnest appeal for their aid in the restoration of the 'dispersed' to the land of Judea.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 4, 1844.

SEE TO IT.

Winter has arrived at the appointed time, not one moment behind-hand.—Well, what of it, seeing it has always been so? Why, we will tell you good folks—to see to it:—The poor you have always without you, and if ever they needed alms, now is the time. And if ever you enter into the kingdom of heaven on your charity, and not your long faces, will take you there.

Again, now is the time for thieves to break through and steal:—Watch therefore as well as pray that your consciences may not go unpunished, and the city receive a bad name, because the people are have not made the way of the transgressor hard.

Again, the present generation is very much given to cheating, and bogus-makers are corrupting the currency of the country: see to it that ye be not deceived, and whenever base coin or counterfeit bills slipped in for money, nab the villains, that justice may claim her right, and the penitentiary answer the end for which it was erected.

Finally, see to it, for what you do not see to your neighbors will forget and there is 'new year,' and a 'new President,' at hand, and new lords make new laws; and all these considered—look for N-E-W-S.

HARK!

There has been a good deal said about 'stealing' in and about Warsaw. From reports' every thing of value, cattle, hogs, horses, grain, goods, &c. &c., has been ab—no; as—as; no; cu. sa'd; fi. fa'd—or completely left vacant. If the Warsaw and Quincy papers tell the truth, all quadrupeds and wagons, within ten miles, have made tracks towards Nauvoo; and can it be that the wagons were empty?—If Quincy is as bad off, and who knows to the contrary? the poor fellows in those towns, must have to go to mill on their backs, if they have anything left to grind.

All the crimes committed as a matter of course, must be perpetrated by the Mormons, and a great many other matters might as well be charged to them; Clay might have been defeated by the Mormons; the late gales may have arisen on account of Mormon prayers; the flood must have come on the strength of Mormonism; but we should really like to know who translated Sharp & Co. from the infected district?

AH, LUCK!

Being out of politics, it is amusing to witness the turns and stratagems of all political parties, to worm themselves into power. The probability now is, that the Abolitionists, the Whigs and the Native Americans, will unite, and fill the void of the American Republican party. In this day of wonderful events, and on till he reigns whose right it is to reign, the vanity of national domination and servility, will expose itself plainer and plain-er, like the envenomed serpent exhibiting the forked tongue, the dazzling spots, the curling body, and the rattling tail, ready for destruction.

Stool Pigeoning.—The Whigs, and 'pieces' of various parties, are about marshaling a new party for the election of 1848, under the special appellation of 'American Republicans'. Federalism and folly will live as long as Mathusalem; and the New York Herald, the Jack o' lantern of all parties and sects, will extinguish Mormonism once a month till, to his utter astonishment, he finds it a great mountain, out balancing all parties and creeds; then, like the swine, filled with spirits of devils, it may run into the sea and choke.

"MORMONISM."

If Mormonism succeeds, Christianity will receive a mortifying blow. The question, is, what ought to be done? The answer is, 'reform the people.' We have looked upon it as a mere delusion, containing the seeds of its own dissolution. But there is order in this fanaticism, there is system in this imposture, and it carries with it an invisible spirit by which the learned and the unlearned are strangely overcome.—Baptist Register.

Yes, Mr. Register, 'reform the people'; that is just what ought to be done, and if Christianity, as now practised by Christendom, from the Catholic with his beads, down to a Millerite with his picture of Daniel's vision, does not 'receive a mortifying blow,' there is no truth in the Bible.

Inform the people, and if Paganism, from jagernaut down to an Indian pow-wow, does not 'receive a mortifying blow,' then there is no virtue in the priesthood of the Son of God.

Inform the people, and if all nations in their present notions, embracing Jews and Gentiles, and infidels, do not 'receive a mortifying blow,' then there is no God.

Inform the people, for information is the seed of Mormonism, and power the life of it. Is the discernment of the Register? there is 'order and system' in Mormonism, and there is faith, virtue, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity. And again, there is a form of godliness, and the acknowledgments and manifestation of power; because the sign you know, were to follow them that believe.

Inform the people, for Joseph Smith, like his brethren the prophets, has been killed, and you know, the good book says it should be so. The first man that offered an acceptable offering before the Lord was killed, and Christ was killed, and the promise was that his disciples should be served likewise.

Inform the people, and give the teeth for false information will disgust wise men, and then our 'invisible spirit,' full of revelation, and prophecy, will overcome the learned and unlearned, and help bring to pass the strange act of God. Give the people information; do, and Mormonism is safe.

Inform the people, do, that Mormonism contains the seed of its own continuation, and the elements of its own extinction. What bore Noah's ark triumphantly over the flood will bear Mormonism victoriously through the fervent heat of the last days. Mormonism embraces everything good in heaven, or on earth, and it claims all truth in heaven, earth, and hell—so do inform the people, that the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, holds the keys of the kingdom, spoken of by Daniel, and the voice of the spirit says, this is the way—walk ye in it!

Inform the people, that the 'invisible spirit' of Mormonism, having the Book of Mormon and Book of Doctrine and Covenants, for walls to support the gospel of the Bible, on one side, and the Melchizedek and Aaronic priesthoods on the other, for witnesses and messengers, is abundantly able to cope with the philosophy, wit, ambition, avarice, and aggrandizement of the priests of Baal since the apostle's fall asleep, even the hireling clergy of the nineteenth century.

Inform the people, that Mormonism is the stone cut out of the mountain without hands, and will continue to roll forth until it becomes a great mountain, fills the whole earth, and even the gates of hell should not prevail against it. So Mr. Register, you perceive that Mormonism is a great leveling machine, high as heaven, deep as hell, and great as the earth, propelled by the 'invisible spirit' of an all powerful God and who can stop it?

The following Sectarian desertion is fixed on the 'sliding scale system' and will answer for community and family use anywhere, and on all occasions: read it.

THE DOUBLE FACED DISCIPLE.

One face was on this wise. We saw him in the assembly of the saints, and he took his turn in the religious services of the place with unexceptionable propriety. His tongue was loose, and words flowed freely and pleasantly. In prayer, there was propriety, apparent sincerity, and seeming unction; in exhortation and remark there was aptness to teach, and the power of solemn and well-directed appeal. No one could object to such a face as this, surely. It was a very pleasant face. The features were excellent. There was neither spot nor wrinkle, nor any such thing. Truly a pleasant thing it was to look upon such a face. And were one to see such a face as that through all the life of Christian life, many would regard it as a glad in the light of it. And would the disciple now in question have been; yea, happy and contentedly useful, had he never exhibited any other features than those seen in the place of conference and prayer.

But let us get a look at him under other circumstances. He has business elsewhere; besides the place of prayer. But there is a very decided difference in the aspect of the disciple in different positions.

Follow him into the family. He is not the man he ought to be. He is sour, selfish, irritable, gives way to fretfulness and anger, often neglects that very duty of prayer which gives him so fair a face in the conference-room. He is not the man that he was then. If there was as much moral-loveliness in the family circle as in the house of God, then there would be a most desirable consistency of character. If one face looked like the other it would be pleasing to gaze upon them both. But he has two faces.

In business affairs, had he his sanctu-ary face upon him, how nobly might he sustain his Christian profession! But the business world about him have learned to see the difference. Men must watch him closely, or be over-reached. He is skilful at driving hard bargains. He can grind the face of the poor. He can weary and worry his creditors with long delay, when it is in his power to satisfy every claim. He is amply rich and free in protestations and promises, but lean and poor in coming up to them.

There are quite too many disciples of this description. There may be found specimens, more or less striking, in almost every Christian community. Judas was one of this description, and Simon Magus was another. And Ananias and his wife had two faces apiece. So even the apostles were tried in this way, as pastors are in our own days. And as the apostles did not spare double-faced disciples, but caused the sword of the Spirit to flash terribly before them, so ought Christian preachers now to do the same. Zion has suffered enough from such professed friends. The sooner the last of them has but one face, and that an honest gospel face, a face that shines in the beauty of consistent holiness, and shines at all times and everywhere, the better.

We have but one exhortation to give a double-faced disciple. Let him look into that bright mirror, the glorious gospel. If he will do this seriously, frequently, and with deep desire for self-reformation, he shall be gratified. That mirror is faithful. There is no mistake about its representations. It will show up the case of the two-faced lookers therein perfectly. No one can use that glass long without ascertaining that horror, happiness, usefulness, and safety, and strive in calling on him to possess that religion which, shining in constant beauty in the world, is the only kind that will shine as the stars for ever and ever.—New York Evangelist.

Fire on the Prairie.—Three persons burnt.—A few days since Ezekiel Fields and Jack Fields with their two sons, residing in the Northern part of the Cherokee nation, went to their field in the right time for the purpose of preserving a fire then sweeping over the prairie, from consuming their fences. But a high wind prevailing at the time, the flames rushed onward with such speed that they were obliged to leave their work, and endeavor to save themselves by flight. The two men and one of the lads were, however, soon overtaken and burnt to death. When found the next day, the son was in the arms of his father, who had doubtless borne him as far as he could in his effort to save their lives. The paper from which we gather this information states that the persons of these unfortunate victims were painfully disfigured by the fire. The other youth saved his life by rushing through the flames to their windward.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A VOICE FROM THE TEMPLE.

We would say to all those who wish to bring tithes for the building of the temple in the city of Nauvoo, that we have deemed it wisdom to remove our office, for the better accommodation of business, and of all who visit us on business, to the new and commodious brick store of Elder P. P. Pratt, situated one block north from the west end of the temple; at which place we will attend every day in the week, (Sundays excepted) from morning till evening, to receive donations for the temple and also attend to all other matters of business pertaining to the trustees. We publish this notice that the brethren may not need to enquire where they shall deposit their donations. We have only one place of deposit in the city of Nauvoo and that is the above mentioned brick store.

We would also once more offer a word of caution to all the saints for their benefit, inasmuch as there are those who are going round amongst the branches of the church to collect funds for the temple without authority, and who are all the while practicing impositions upon the brethren. They generally use the property for their own individual benefit, and make no returns of it to us, and consequently when the donors come to see the records their names are not there. Many have felt to censure us on this account, but censure in such a case is unjust, for we have published notices repeatedly, warning the saints not to credit any man's testimony as to his being an agent unless he can show written authority from us or the quorum of the Twelve, and all those who intrust their means in the hands of unauthorized agents, do it at their own risk, and not ours. The presiding elders in the branches have a right to call for, and to see the authority of any and every man professing to be an agent for the church, and if he is an honest servant and a man of authority he will always be ready to produce his testimonials to proper authority, but if he is an impostor he will either make excuses, or he will probably scorn at the idea of your questioning a man of God as to his authority. In some instances men have considered themselves insulted when asked by the presiding elders for their authority, but this is only an evidence either of their own wickedness, or that they come on an errand on which they were never legally sent. Beware of wolves in sheep's clothing!

We are more particular on this subject because there have been instances not a few, where men who are not Latter-day Saints, but on the contrary our most bitter enemies, have gone round gulling the churches and professing to be Mormons and agents to collect funds for the building of the temple and Nauvoo house, &c.; and they have taken advantage of the liberality of the brethren by all kinds of fine speeches and persuasive inducements to get away their money, until they have accomplished their object, and then they become "missing." It is not our wish to see the brethren cheated so barefacedly after all the persecutions we have suffered, and we once more repeat the caution, be wise and careful.

There are instances where the saints rarely see an authorized agent, in consequence of the distance from Nauvoo, or, in consequence of their residing some distance from a regularly organized branch. In such cases, when they want to send up their donations, let them do it by some man with whom they are well acquainted, and who they are well satisfied will do right, and carry their donations safe to their destination. And it would be well in all cases, where the brethren abroad send donations by authorized agents, to send a letter by mail (post paid,) to the trustees in trust, informing them of the facts, and by whom their donations were sent, &c.; and a good man will not blame you for being thus careful, for the same law that regards your rights will guard his rights and the rights of every man.

It is our intention for the future to publish the names of our agents in the "Nauvoo Neighbor" and "Times and Seasons," which we consider to be safe and better than written authority, inasmuch as the latter can be "forged," but the former cannot, and the agents can carry a copy of the paper, having their authority with them, wherever they go.

There is also another subject which we would touch upon in this notice. There have been instances, wherein men have gone amongst the branches of the church, collecting money and agreeing to pay the same amount in labor on the Temple, which they represent will answer as good a purpose as the money. We have to say on this subject that all such transactions are regarded as fraud, and is only a crafty way of cheating the brethren. It would be folly for us to tell a man that ten days labor on the Temple would answer the law of tithing as well as a dollar in money, when he has possessed of one hundred dollars in money. We know better, and every faithful brother and sister in the church will know better when they understand the principles of salvation as well as old Abraham and Jacob did. For Jacob said of all that he gave me, one tenth I will give unto thee, and whoever will read the history of the ancients with care will find that the law was that they must pay one tenth of all in its kind; whether cattle, horses, sheep, or the fruits of the field. This law was a law of redemption, whereby a man might redeem himself of a thing, but it was so strict, that it is far easier to pay the tithing in kind rather than redeem it.

Jesus Christ, all who do the works of Abraham are the children of Abraham, and he (Abraham) paid tithes of all. The Savior also said to the Pharisees, "ye pay tithes of mint and anise and Cummin; but neglect the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith. These ought ye to have done, and not have left the others undone."

We make reference to these subjects that the brethren may take the hint, and think for themselves for just so sure as there are laws established from before the foundation of the world for the government of the Church of Christ, just so sure will we fail of obtaining a fulness of salvation if we do not abide by those laws. No man can obtain a celestial glory if he will not abide a celestial law, and the law of tithing is a celestial law, and a law was in force where the Melchizedek Priesthood was inherited.

Why did the Savior say "how hardly shall they that have riches enter the kingdom of heaven?" Just converse with a rich man upon the subject of tithing, and you will soon see a reason why the rich can hardly enter the kingdom of heaven. When you converse with a man who has got ten thousand dollars in money, in his hands, and tell him that his tithing will be one thousand dollars in money, you generally will see the force of the words of Jesus. That man would consider himself almost ruined if he should donate his one thousand dollars, whereas a man who has only ten dollars in money in the world, will come forward with cheerfulness and donate his tenth with joy. Remember the widow with her two mites.

No man or woman who really desires to be a fulness of salvation will wish to be kept ignorant of these principles, and laws and ordinances on which his salvation depends, and consequently we are free to give a hint on the subject of tithing, not because we take it upon us to instruct the people, but because we realize in some measure the importance of it ourselves as to the saints, thinking for themselves on the subject.

When the saints ask for instructions, the Twelve are the proper authorities to refer to, and they will deal it out as fast as the saints are willing to obey.

We are happy to have to say that the temple has progressed more rapidly than our most sanguine expectations could have imagined. All the capitals are on the walls, except one, which if the weather permit, will be up in a few days. The weather has been remarkably favorable and continues so to the present. The feelings of the saints are good and their hearts are cheered while they look upon the house of God and reflect on the prospects of its speedy completion. Their toils and poverty and persecutions are all swallowed up in the cheering prospects of their reward, only a little ways ahead. Peace smiles upon our beloved city. And the great God looks down upon this people with sympathy and compassion from day to day, dispensing his heavenly blessings upon all the families of his saints according to his infinite wisdom and their willingness to receive them. The hearts of the saints are united firmer than ever, notwithstanding the vigorous efforts made by Satan and dissenters to sow amongst us discord, strife, and confusion, and every evil work, scattering not excepted. Many houses are in progress of erection, which on account of the lateness of the season will have to stand unfinished until next spring. Every effort is being made to establish and put in operation various branches of manufacture for the employment of the saints, and the prospects are good, but not unattended with difficulty, toil and anxiety. But diligence, economy, and steady perseverance in a good cause, never fails to bring its reward, and very often the sweetest roses are surrounded by the sharpest thorns, and the greatest treasures deposited in places the most difficult of access, where we have to dig, and dig long and deep in order to obtain them.

We might prolong these remarks, but perhaps we have said enough for once. We will leave the subject, praying the blessings of our Heavenly Father to rest upon all good men, and especially upon the Saints that they may have peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, and attain to that knowledge which will obtain for them an inheritance in the eternal kingdom of our God.

We have the honor to be Your most obedient servants, and brethren in the faith of Christ,
N. K. WHITNEY,
GEORGE MILLER,
Trustees in Trust.
By WM. CLAYTON, Recorder.
Nauvoo, Dec. 2, 1844.

MR. EDITOR: DEAR SIR—Having pretty much recovered my health again, I feel it a privilege to give you a short history of my mission to Tennessee. I started about the 20th of May last in company with some three or four of the Twelve, and several other brethren, on board the steamer Drey.

We were treated with the utmost respect and friendship, by Captain Anderson and crew. At St. Louis the Twelve organized quite a large branch of the church.

The next day about noon, we set off on the Louis Philippe. Several of us were from want of means, compelled to take deck passage, and as a matter of course we expected the same privilege that we enjoyed on other boats; but we had not been but a few hours under way, when the Clerk came out with all the importance of a southern negro-trip, ordered us all off the board deck, and commanded us to remain below. I am determined not to patronize them again. Next morning about 7 o'clock we arrived at Paducah, Kentucky, where three of us, Elders Joseph Mount, Samuel Heath, and myself, went ashore with the blessing of the brethren, and proceeded on our way to Dresden, Tennessee.

We had not gone far, until I found it very difficult for me to get along, in consequence of an injury I had received in my right thigh when a boy, by a fall from a horse, and a crash of my foot on the same side, as I was moving to this place, in 1842. I was compelled to stop before night, but on the third day we reached Dresden.

The particulars of that conference you have before learned. Some of us continued at Dr. Camp's about ten days, and while we were there, some of the most respectable citizens desirous to imitate the ancient Bereans requested that Dr. William L. Cutler should preach to them. He consented, and when the congregation came together, quite unexpectedly to me, some of my former acquaintances were among the number, and they requested to hear me also, as they never before had that privilege.

I felt wholly unprepared to address them; however I was always pleased to have an opportunity to bear testimony to the truth. Our president, Elder A. O. Smoot, opened the meeting with singing and prayer, after which Dr. Cutler addressed the congregation upon the all-important subject of the Christian religion. The discourse was quite interesting, embracing various subjects, so that at the conclusion, I could scarcely see where I might crowd in any thing that would benefit or interest that people. However, relying upon the promises of God, I arose, and like the "Preter, let off" a venture, and immediately caught the animating spirit, that characterized the foregoing discourse.

I commenced with 2d Samuel 13th chapter, showing that men were often permitted to run and bear tidings, when in reality they were not chosen; nor can they ever publish the truth when they undertake it. On account of their wonderful aspiring principle and disposition, and continual importunity, they are permitted to go. They are often talked good men, as in the present case, but like Ahimanz, they have heard a great tumult, but "knew not any thing about the matter." "Some city or thing, and some another," although, they are all under the influence of the same spirit, and acknowledge each is "orthodox," only disagreeing in little "nonessentials;" yet they always find one essential to arouse the minds, and excite the fears of the people, by false representations; and finally some old mother has died wonderfully happy, shouting Hallelujah! Glory! and very soon some body else begins to feel the benign influence of the noisy spirit, they are straightway called into the crazy pen, where astonishing feats are performed, and amidst the most abominable confusion and obscenity, many get religion, and are now completely qualified to receive an inheritance in the Kingdom, away beyond the bounds of time and space; where they shall ever dwell in the presence, and enjoy eternally the smiles of a God who sits on the "tip top of a topless throne," a being "without body or parts, or passions." Very different from the God, who hid Moses in the cleft of the rock with his hand, or Jesus either, for the Angels said "This same Jesus shall return in like manner," &c. When Peter had preached to the people on the day of Pentecost, until they were "pricked in their hearts," they knew that God worked by means, and there was something for them to do, and when the inquiry was made, Peter was able to give the necessary instruction, without hesitation, and without his "opinion." He had been instructed, himself by the God of Heaven. He had not any desire to make an image in the form of a calf, and call it an anxious seat, a mourning bench, nor had he been to college, and learned to make spiritualizing machines; and convert the truth of God into a lie. A poor illiterate fisherman had no more sense than to speak what the Lord put into his mouth. "Repent and be baptized," &c. This was the order of God. The promise was to them, and their children, and as many as the Lord our God shall call. If the same order is not yet to be observed, it follows most certainly, that God has ceased to call men. Paul taught the same doctrine, and practised the same ordinances as Peter did, and called it the gospel of Jesus Christ: "The power of God unto salvation, to every one that believed." (See Rom. 8th chapter, Heb. 6th chapter, and Acts 19th chapter.) He also pronounced a curse on any one, "even an angel from heaven, who should preach any other gospel." (Eph. 1st chapter.) There was "one Lord, one faith, and one baptism." Consequently the apostles and elders all taught the same thing; being organized, set in order, and being authorized to administer to the Saints. (James 5th chapter.)

This is the law and testimony exhibited clearly, and "if they abide not therein, it is because there is no light in them." The Jews continued in all things written in the law of Moses, because it was the commandment of God; nor do they believe that Messiah has yet come. Often the inquiry is made by the present generation, can so many people be wrong? So many good preachers, and so happy as camp-meetings. I ask could all the Antediluvians, only Noah and his posterity, be wrong? Could all the inhabitants of that great city, Sodom, be wrong, only Lot and his two daughters? Could all Israel, and the world be wrong, only a few despised Nazarenes, in the days of Jesus Christ's probation? Yes, it was so. Those who alone claimed to be the people of God, who actually held the oracles of God in their own hands, desired a murderer in his stead. The Rabbin instructed the people, just as they do now, and said "Let his blood be upon us, and our children!" Mark the calamities that fell on that people, and then only are we with what unconcern the professing world cry out against the prophet and Saints of God; like those who slew Stephen, they gnash their teeth with rage! Take care! Remember those who spoke against Moses.

(1st King 22d chapter.) A lying spirit was permitted to go from the presence of God, to seduce four hundred of Ahab's prophets, that Ahab might go out and fall in battle. While one prophet determined to speak only what the Lord put in his mouth, he declared the evil that would befall Ahab, for which he was severely afflicted.

The religion of this generation is just like that of Ahab: (2d Kings 17th chapter.) their priesthood being originated with the Old Law. (Rev. 17th chapter.) "By their works you shall know them." Wonderful attainments, gay attire, sumptuous fare, golden cups, and praise of men! The greatest characteristic of piety—"Shed the blood of Saints and Prophets." Recollect David slew Uriah, although he did not wield the weapon of death with his own hand. The cruel principles practised by Apostate Rome, drove the church of Jesus Christ into the wilderness. Job said; "In the wilderness there is no way." An evidence of that fact is exhibited in the history of the wanderings of the children of Israel, on their journey from Egypt, to the land of Canaan. Instead of passing over in three days, they were forty years journeying, during which time they did not offer burnt offerings and sacrifice, as they had done before, and did do afterwards. Even Moses, who spoke with Jehovah face to face, was not permitted to enter into the promised land—an account of a small circumstance, such as collegians would call a "nonessential."

Thus it is evident that those men who construe the word of the Lord into "nonessentials," deprive themselves of an inheritance in the kingdom of God. While those who dare administer the ordinances appointed by Heaven's King, without authority from him, will doubtless share the fate of Saul. (1st Samuel 13th chapter.)

We are informed by the renowned historian, Whelpley, as also in the Revolutions of Europe, that the church of Jesus Christ was over-run, and driven into the wilderness, A. D. 570, and John the Revelator informs us it must remain there 1260 years, which makes exactly the time, the year 1830, that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized, with the gifts and blessings.

This is a fact beyond contradiction. "In the mouth of two or three witnesses, every word shall be established." Now truly the prophet's declaration is verified in this fact, that she has come out "As fair as the sun, as clear as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners." For, at this wonderful crisis, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he reveal his secret to his servants the prophets." (Amos 3-7.) Truly the Lord has chosen a servant, and revealed his secret to the prophet, but as it was in days of yore, so it is now. "All seems an idle tale." As with the old prophets, John the Baptist, Jesus of Nazareth, and his Apostles, so it is now. The children of Israel had been annexed to acts of obedience, while, at the same time, penalties were affixed to transgression. In the law given by Moses, it was death for any person to despise (violate) it.

Now if the violation of that law was death, which law was only a type or shadow, how can we escape, who transgress on the commandment of Jesus, sealed with his own blood? Jesus gave a pattern, by which his people must be made perfect. It is actually necessary to have a pattern in all things; but of what value is a pattern, unless it is observed? Moses was instructed to make the Ark of the Covenant, just like the pattern showed him in the Mount. However, since there are "Lords many, and Gods many," and men have made so many laws for Heaven's King, and revealed so many acts of Jesus and the Apostles, that the chain is broken, and all has become useless.

Yet amidst all this confusion, even as at the "Tower of Babel," we have shown you that in fulfillment of Peter's prophecy on the day of Pentecost, that the Lord would pour out of his spirit in the last days, not only on his servants and handmaiden, but also upon all flesh. Paul said there was one flesh of beast, one of fowls, and one of fish; consequently, the spirit of God will be poured out on all flesh. Then will enmity cease. The sow and the bear will lie down together, the leopard and kid, &c. Peace and harmony will prevail, and the little children shall lead them. Glorious event!

In the prophecy of Daniel, (8th chap. 14th verse,) we are informed that in answer to Daniel's supplications and inquiries, an angel informed him, that 2300 days or years (Ezek. 4th chap. 5th and 6th verses,) from that time the Sanctuary of the Lord should be cleansed. Still in the course of Daniel's inquiry, (9th chap. 24th verse,) it is made known to him that 70 weeks were determined upon his people &c.; at the end of which time the most holy was to be anointed. A day for a year, according to prophetic count, will make (7 times 70 is) 490 years until Christ the Lord should be anointed; which was done according to Luke, when Jesus was 30 years of age. Then from the Christian era 1840 for instance, we will subtract the 30 years and we will have 1810 left. To this sum we will add the 490 years, which will make precisely 2300, making 1840 the year that this same church, that was organized in 1830, should receive her chartered privileges, ordain her own laws, and be free! (See Book of Covenants, Second Edition, page 400.)

This is a fact too clear to need comment. Here is evidence conclusive, which no man on earth can get round, and still admit for a moment that the Bible, the good old family Bible is true. "The words that I speak (says Jesus) shall judge you at the last day." "There is no other name given under heaven whereby men must be saved." Therefore "God will judge the world in righteousness, by that man Christ Jesus, whom he hath appointed heir of all things," and "ever long all the honest hearts, to earth's remotest bounds, will acknowledge that the dominion of the son of God is an everlasting dominion, and his government the same over all people; while in the dispensation of the fullness of times, God is gathering all things into one, both in heaven and in earth. If we will arrive at perfection, we must follow him who was rich, and for our sakes became poor, that we might become rich. When we become willing to be made perfect through suffering, then shall we be comforted; then will his spirit bear witness with our spirits; and we shall know of a truth, that Joseph Smith is that personage, through whom the God of heaven has revealed his will to man in this last dispensation.

"There is no man who has power over the spirit, to retain the spirit," therefore in the sequel, I gave them an Indian anecdote.

June 9th, 10th, and 11th, we held a conference in Dyer county. Among others I preached on Sunday to a large attentive congregation. There were mob spirits present, but the Lord gave me perfect liberty, and I thereby obtained complete audience, for near two hours. As servants of God and brethren together, we truly rejoiced, and each could with one of old exclaim, "I know that my Redeemer lives." We bore testimony to the truth with great assurance, while Satan's host trembled. I selected the 23d chapter of Luke as a foundation for some remarks. We had hitherto been prevented from circulating General Smith's views. A lawyer by the name of Fitzgerald, in Paris, Tenn., declared that if we did circulate them, that we would thereby violate a statute of the State, and he would volunteer his services to prosecute us. We did not believe by circulating the views, that we would in that act violate any law whatever, but we knew that it would be so construed, and as our instructions from the Prophet, and other authorities of the church had ever been, never to violate the laws of any land where we were, but to be subject to them in all cases; (also Book of Covenants page 105.) We therefore desisted; thus sacrificing our liberty as American citizens; but to my great satisfaction the opportunity now offered, for me to lay before the people, the real character and principles of Joseph Smith the Prophet. This I most cordially embraced, while indeed I considered it the greatest honor that could have been conferred upon me, to speak in justice and truth, arraying myself against King Diabolus, to defend the slandered character of the most honorable, the greatest man on earth. Him whom the Lord delights to honor! At the same moment realizing the blessing I had received from his mouth a few hours before I left home. I bore my testimony to facts that I knew; then noticed the attention with the apparent humility of our Pilgrim fathers in 1620, when they framed the first American constitution, they who had fled from religious intolerance, choosing to dwell among the rude untutored savages, rather than enjoy all the prisons and bloodshed of old Mother Rome in Europe. Having arrived at Plymouth weighed down under oppression, they assembled in a body politic, where 41 of them entered into a compact for humanity's sake. But alas! in 1635, puffed up with bigotry, and led by superstition, they soon clothed the infant Protestant colony in blood; and all done by the Orthodox Christians to do. Having laid this apt before them in a plain and simple manner, showing the effect of violating a sacred compact.

I then called their attention to the murders and robberies committed on our people, in this once happy land, merely on account of their religion. I warned them against tolerating such cruel deeds; and laid in short, General Smith's claims before them. The Lord blessed us abundantly at this meeting. We baptized six, and ordained one elder. From this conference I came home on business, but have learned, that several have since been added to the same branch by baptism.

NAUVOO MANUFACTORIES AND TRADES MEETINGS.

MR. EDITOR:—It may not be generally known, that the Masonic Hall has been devoted on Tuesday evening of each week to holding what is appropriately styled Trades Meetings, for the purpose of bringing into successful operation all the combined forces of our numerous and useful mechanics, whose energies have been heretofore called into requisition to follow such employment as has been incongenial to their feelings or their own particular callings; and to have pursued such vocations as have been inimical to their separate interests, and the interests of our otherwise flourishing city; not only impoverishing our citizens; but encouraging the merchant to bring foreign goods and products into Nauvoo at a vast expenditure; exchanging their goods (which we are abundantly able to make) buying our provisions and thereby depriving us of the very means of subsistence; so that the mechanic in some instances has either to turn his hand to some other employment, or leave our city perhaps to manufacture the very goods which we are purchasing at so dear a rate.

It is with no little satisfaction, Mr. Editor, we see you battering this enormous evil, and calling to your aid such men as shall, we trust, be instrumental in giving you the happiness of seeing the consummation of your most ardent and highest expectations in the advancement of our city in manufactures, in commerce, and in wealth.

As no doubt the proceedings of your last meeting will be published in your columns, I shall not go into detail or dwell upon all the advantages that will result in such a concert of action as you propose. The results we doubt not can be effected. The calling into requisition every mechanic for the production of every article manufactured that may be raised either in this city or any other, from the manufactory of a splendid carriage down to the making of a jack-knife, is the object of the Trades Meetings. Come then ye weavers, cutlers, hatters, carpenters, shoemakers, &c. &c.; let us see what can be done from henceforth to give stability to industry, and what best efforts can be made in building up ourselves our neighbors and our city: come let us provide here an inheritance for ourselves and for our posterity.

For do you not know (if you do not come and learn) that a union among our men of capital, in common with yourselves, is about to effect a mighty revolution in the business of your city; that already farmers are engaged to have sent on to this place some hundreds of sheep, for feeding mutton and raising wool; that an inexhaustible store of wool will be required to be kept constantly on hand, and for which there will be an incessant demand; that a number of hand and power looms are immediately to be constructed, and factories built for the use of the same; that a great amount of cotton has been sent for which is probably on its way to Nauvoo to be spun and woven; that carding machines are being fitted up; that the Church has engaged to receive the raw material from abroad as tything which shall be manufactured in this place; that a carriage manufactory is about to be established, and that carriages which have heretofore been sold for 60 dollars each can be sold for 400 dollars per dozen; that a company is about to manufacture fire-arms to supply the Legion, private individuals and the country at large; projects are on foot to manufacture boots and shoes; for best hides are shipped off by our merchants when we have among us the best of tanners; we are sending to the store for foreign or eastern manufactured shoes of eastern manufactured leather, when our shoemakers are moving down to St. Louis for work, which can be manufactured much cheaper and no doubt as well in this place.

Time is property, and labor is capital. Among the many remarks which were made at the Trades Meeting, one remark was worthy of notice; that according to close investigation it has been ascertained that for 20,000 dollars expended for the raw material, 100,000 dollars worth of goods could be manufactured; from such an amount of hard cash saved to the city from time to time, we could apply maintain our standing on an equal footing with other cities; but it is a lamentable circumstance that such sums are constantly going out of Nauvoo to foreign manufactures. These things, gentlemen of Nauvoo, are startling facts. You have here too men from the Staffordshire Potteries of England, enough of them to furnish the entire west with their manufacture; but pray where do you get your plates and dishes, and under what circumstances? Why, the English in the manufactory of those goods send abroad for some of the material at a great expense; then comes the exchange of hands from the manufacturer to the merchant in England, and from the merchant in England to the merchant in New York, and from there to this place, and when arrived here frequently the greater portion is mashed, and who has to pay charges? Why, you do. You have to send your cash to England, which ought to be laid out here; for the materials are all here and within our reach.

I will not expatiate any further on this subject or weary your readers, Mr. Editor; but hope that the time is not far distant when charity will begin at home; and we shall see this rolling stream freighted with the fruits of Nauvoo enterprise, industry, and economy.

EDUCATION IN PRUSSIA.

BERLIN, July 1844.

I know not where better to send you the few impressions and statistics I have of Germany than from this interesting city. Our Minister has done something to awaken an interest at home in the German people, and every day is adding to the spirit of inquiry in regard both to the many local divisions of the German people, but to all of them in common, most interesting to us, because here and there somewhat allied to one of our own free institutions is the system of education adopted by the different governments. The publication of facts I have collected in regard to this feature of the German governments I have been in, I cheerfully resign to the labor and collection of a distinguished American I find here, (Horace Mann of Massachusetts,) a man who, for many years, has been devoted, with all the enthusiasm of youth, to the advancement of the cause of education at home. The field is a rich one to labor in, and cultivated as it will be by the worthy husbandman who has entered it, its fruits must be most beneficial to all who interest themselves in one of the noblest enterprises that ever engaged the heart of man. At home many are apt to think that at least in the provisions of education the United States holds a rank with the most favored nation of the world. The time may come, and the sooner the better for the country and mankind, when the boast will be a true one; but, taken altogether, the reverse is far from the truth at present. There may, perhaps, more freely be obtained in some parts of the United States more practical and solid education than can be had in Germany, but as a whole we shall be found deficient not only in means but results. We speak it is true, rather of the education of books than of the mind, regardless of practical learnings. There are no less than twenty universities in Germany alone, ranking as high as the highest of our colleges. They excel in all branches of learning, some in Philosophy, some in Theology, Protestant and Catholic, some in Law, and some in Medicine. The smallest of them has not less than twenty Professors, and the largest of them as many as eighty-four, with all the intervening numbers. The students at each vary from two hundred to two thousand. The Professors receive something from the States where they are, but most frequently their support is derived from the students to whom they give private lessons. The requisitions of students before entering a university are generally much higher than with us, embracing for example, and ability of composition in Greek and Latin, both German and French, as well as a knowledge of History, Natural Philosophy, and Mathematics. The examinations are as rigid in the end as the beginning, and many an unfortunate student is rejected at both. The system of education in the universities is also much more general here than with us. It embraces for a Philosophical class lectures upon Music, Drawing, Botany, Astronomy, the Literature of the cultivated nations of the world, Geometry, Physiology, Anatomy, and occasionally Gymnastics and the art of Fencing, while in almost every department of learning the requisitions are equally strict. A more important matter is the cheapness of education. For the advantages afforded there is more cheapness here, but expenses vary almost as much as with us, though upon the whole they are much less in Germany. The system of morals among the students is far below what rigid discipline and public sentiment requires at home. There is gambling, and it is tolerated, and if an enormous quantity of beer-drinking be a vice, the German students are the greatest sinners in Christendom.

The preparatory schools are generally established by the government, and are expensive. Education here is very extensive and thorough, embracing even the Hebrew for students who intend to devote themselves to theology and the classical, and four or five of the modern languages for all. Our free schools are not eclipsed by the Parochial schools of Germany. Education to the poor is often freely given, and sometimes commanded to be enforced upon those who desire not the boon. Music, too, is wisely taught, and if the mind is pitched the ear is pleased, and heart improved, the best results attend this charming recreation. Prussia, more than any of her German neighbors, has a reputation for her schools. The system of popular education, adopted by some of the American States, counties, towns and parishes, prevails here. There is encouragement from the government, and a Board of Education employ school inspectors for every important town. There are school committees, too, for every parish, and a Minister of Public Instruction, the officer of the government, has commanded all. All poor parents have a competent education provided for them by government, and all masters employing servants, who have children, are required to have them instructed from the time they are seven until they are fourteen years old. Even books and clothing are given to the poor who are unable to buy them, and the children of the destitute are kept at school until they have gone through all the elementary instructions provided for them by the government. The details of the system are as admirable as the general design is noble. Whatever appertains to health, to personal comfort, to good morals, to respect and obedience to parents, to good citizenship, is carefully inculcated. Religion is taught in its fundamental principles, and always, I learn, without sectarianism, while the system of education adopted extends as well to the physical as the moral culture of the student. The elementary instructions embrace the rudiments of Arithmetic, Geography, Physiology, History, &c., while in the burgher or middle schools, Foreign languages, Mathematics, and a knowledge of the Prussian laws and constitution, are added. Bibles and Testaments are freely distributed to those who can read, and the design throughout is to give the scholar a thorough moral and intellectual training either at no expense for those who have the liberty to instruct themselves. If any where in the world the schoolmaster is abroad, it is in Prussia. For the education of teachers there are fifty or sixty formal schools where the candidate has to apply himself diligently for three years, and then to subject himself to examination by a competent board of masters. Females have like schools to prepare them for teaching their own sex. The estimate of scholars educated in the public schools of Prussia, has been put down from 13 to 15 thousand, and such most briefly told is the system of education prepared by the government of Prussia for the education of Prussian children. I have read with amazement the remark of one or two, that notwithstanding this stupendous enterprise, he remembered, of a high toned monarchical government, without a constitution, to enlighten the youth of a kingdom, its results have exhibited no more improvement in morals or manners than is displayed by the people of other governments where no such advantage is provided. It is morally impossible that such should be the fact, and though I have seen the assertion made and repeated, all the evidence of observation and inquiry which I have, has proved a different result. Mine, however, has been but a hurried investigation, and the opinion of a Massachusetts Mann, the main object of whose visit to Germany is to obtain the condition of the state of education here, will be ten fold more valuable than those of one who makes education but one of almost a hundred subjects of inquiry. The schools in Germany, where the students are prepared for the university, are called Lyceums, Gymnasiums, and Pedagogiums. There are few positions in society higher than that of the pedagogue, none in which the government of the people take more interest, and all over Germany, in town as in country, they are as highly esteemed as the village or district schoolmaster in New England. When, and how, by the way, did the teacher's craft and occupation fall into such low estate in some of the States south of the Potomac? There I have seen and heard almost demonstrations of contempt against the whole profession; but in Germany, as in the North and East at home, those who have been the teachers of youth have from an office deemed here as honorable as any in the land, been introduced to all the honors and emoluments of the State. The reason is obvious enough. Education here is esteemed the greatest of public benefactors. In Austria the system is somewhat peculiar; but I want to see something of the people and schools there before mentioning an opinion as to their relative merits with other portions of the dominions. At Potsdam, the residence of the King, a place which claims the same position to Berlin that Versailles does to Paris, and where there are many classes and conditions of people, I visited two of the schools. The one was parochial and the other mainly military, though all of the elementary branches of learning were taught there. In both these seemed the best discipline of the master mingled with the greatest cheerfulness of the scholars. Both schools were entirely supported by the government. In the one were children of both sexes in training for all the duties of life, and in the other, which is one of the largest and best institutions I have seen, were children from seven to sixteen years of age. Some were discoursing music from all the instruments of sound; others, were in the enjoyment of a wild and careless play around the neat and spacious pleasure grounds of the buildings and squares prepared for their recreation; some were educating the limbs and muscles by ladders and poles, which they could climb like monkeys; others were studiously employed at their books, and about half of the whole number were in the course of a thorough military exercise under the tuition of one of those "children of a larger growth," who was most admirably fitted for his place. I had seen no superior discipline of soldiers, not even among the troops of Russia, than among that little army of boys, all of whom I may remark, en passant, were the sons of poor soldiers. The marches and countermarches were as quickly performed as the command was given, and the boys moved with a spirit and celerity that men could not approach. All the internal regulations were in keeping with those without. From such a school as this the government may look with safety to find by and by some of her most distinguished men.

THRILLING ORATORY.

To all admirers of true, burning eloquence—that electric fire which darts through an audience, kindling thousands of hearts into enthusiasm—we recommend the following oration delivered at Lancaster, Wisconsin, July 4th, 1844. It was such eloquence as this that in ancient days humbled the hardened audacity of Cataline, and impelled the Athenians to cry out as one man, "Let us march against Philip!" We have seen nothing before in modern times so awfully overpowering—not even in the heart stirring appeals that fell from the lips of Henry, or dropped from the lofty soul of Chatham. The author seems to have a certain freshness and fullness of mind which throws out the fruit of eloquence spontaneously—from which towering thoughts rush forth with wondrous force and rapidity, like splendid weeds from the rank places of the earth. There is a world of meaning in his brief, emphatic, nervous sentences—though, it must be confessed, the ideas are occasionally too high for the intellectual calibre of the great mass of hearers. But—read!

Americans! This is a great country—wide—vast—and in the southwest, unlimited. Our republic is yet destined to re-annex all South America—to occupy the Russian possessions and again to recover possession of those British provinces which the prowess of the old thirteen colonies won from the French on the plains of Abraham; all rightfully ours to re-occupy. Ours is a great and growing country. Faneuil Hall was its cradle; but what war will be found timber enough for its coffin?—Scoop all the water out of the Atlantic ocean, and its bed would not afford a grave sufficient for its corpse. And yet America has scarcely grown out of the gristle of boyhood. Europe what is Europe? She is no what: nothing: a circumstance; a cypher; a mere obsolete idea. We have faster steamboats, swifter locomotives, larger crickets, bigger plantations, better mill privileges, broader lakes, higher mountains, deeper cataracts, louder thunder, forked lightning, braver men, handsomer women, and more money than England dare have! (Thundering applause.) Who is afraid?

If young America, then in the cradle strangled the British lion, and afterwards bucked John Bull into the briny Gulf of Mexico, with what ease can our country, now in the giant strength of manhood, plant its flag on the shores of the Pacific, seize Quebec and Gibraltar, blockade the English channel, and plant the stars and stripes upon the tower of London. (Loud cheers.) Americans! Remember that your country was born in blood, baptised in gore, cradled in the war whoop and to the rifle and bowie knife. We have fought our way up. First come the war of the Revolution. The colonies cut their way out of it, through blood and carnage and thunder. The tore their blanket wide open. Oast or twist it looked a mighty slim chance; but the cut and seared and tore and slathered away like hell's blazes. (Cheering.) They grappled John Bull like a pack of bull terriers. They took him by the haunches; they grappled his wine-pipe and at last they made him bellow like bloody thunder. Washington sheathed the sword. The gentle olive branch of peace waved her green and luxuriant foliage in majesty over the shores of Columbia; and foreigners flocked in and built their nest with us among its sheltering boughs. But a few more years had rolled away down the railroad track of time, when John Bull again came bellowing up the Mississippi, pawing up onto his back the rich and luxuriant soil of Louisiana, and horning the bank of sayed river and lashing his tale like fury. But just below Orleans, he found the great Jackson, and he could not shake him more than an oxen; he could not shore! (Great applause.) Jackson stood there like a tower, and met John Bull as he advanced every time. At last he hit him a lick, right back in under between the horns, that knocked the breath out of him, and sent him off reeling and blailing and bellowing like he felt disagreeable at his stumk.

Soldiers of Winnebago war, and invincible fose of Sank furse! (Here thirteen men arose.)—Heroes of Bad Axe!—Veterans of Sillman's fight! [Assassins of Carthage!] very nimble men! You have come down to us from a reform of generation. Heaven has bountifully prologated our lives, that you might see the fruit of your valor. You behold around you no longer the torch of the savage and the gleaming of the tomahawk and the scalping knife. You no longer watch the Indian trail and the ambush or hear the savage yell and the terrific warwhoop. All is now peace and quiet. These houses that you see around you are the abode of civilized and refined white folks. This spacious edifice that surrounds you, is not a wigwam, but the temple of law and justice. How changed are all things. Under the spux of the school master the very tail of civilization has advanced beyond what the frontiers then was. Glorious freedom!—great and glorious country! Let me die in contemplation of thy sublime destiny exclaiming with my dying breath, "bear the stars and the stripes aloft—and onward—onward." (Terrific cheering.)

The Philadelphia Riot Case.—The jury in the case of John Taggart, charged with riot at Kensington, returned a verdict of guilty on Friday morning, but recommended him to the mercy of the Court on account of his unparalleled suffering from the violence of the mob. John McAller, whose thumb was blown off by the bursting of a gun, was found on Friday on a charge of riot. Thus has the whole business of this term of the Quarter Sessions been transacted, and the most important riot cases tried. No court will be held until after election.

Murders and Riots in Bath.—We have a letter from Owsinsville saying that on one day of election, two men, (names not stated), much intoxicated, got to fighting when about a mile distant, got to fighting with knives. One was killed on the spot, and the other died before the next morning.

The writer states there were 22 fist fights. This shocking state of things could only have resulted, we suspect, from the opening of the infernal whiskey houses. [Frankfort Com.]

TWO STORES.

DAVID D. YEARSLEY has opened two stores, one in the building lately occupied by Gen. Joseph Smith as a store, on Water street, the other on Mulholland street, a little east of the Temple. The Keystone Store, where he will accommodate his friends and the public, with Dry Goods and Groceries to their hearts desire. A quick "pic" being better than a slow "bit,"—he means to sell cheap for cash and produce.

One man can not do everything, nor have everything, but he means, with two stores to do a double business, and keep a good assortment of Crockery and Hardware also.

Being fond of company he wishes all to call and see.

FOR THE NEIGHBOR.

For the Neighbor.

BY S. HUL T.

O earth attend! ye nations now give ear,
Let mortals weep, in anguish drop a tear;
For periclit'd on earth, (nor yet in hell)
In sorrow breathe a more than mortal sigh.

Dign now ye gods who dwell in realms of light
To stoop in silence and behold the sight;
For periclit'd on earth, (nor yet in hell)
A scene more tragic since the Savior fell.

Ye sons of God on this polluted earth,
Cense from your incense and put off all mirth;
Weep o'er the deeds just done, by wicked hands,
For righteous blood now stains this guilty land.

O Illinois thy base high-handed crimes,
Stand yet unavild on the page of time;
The horrid deeds that now thy country stain,
Unquall'd were in Nero's bloody reign.

Though shameful seen as blood and carnage Grew;
Transacted were within a sister state;
Though dark the deed, perform'd by her alone
More savage still and darker are thine own.

Ye men of fame who o'er this state preside—
Who roll in pleasure, luxury, and pride;
Your solemn vows now call you to sustain
Your country's honor and its laws maintain.

But where's thy greatness and thine honor now,
Thy pride, thy friendship and thy plighted vow?
Where now the pledge that once thou didst Bestow—
Were they perform'd? thine actions answer n—

Ye patriots true whose noble names burn With ardent zeal—whose hearts like steel are firm;
Rise up like men in freedom's righteous cause;
Stand to your rights, defend her sacred laws.

Immortal shades! our honored fathers' ghosts Who once with pride and Britain's warlike hoist;
Whose fearless spirits broke the haughty foe—
Weep o'er thy sons, thy fallen ones below.

Look down ye men now standing at the helm,
To guide the fate of this extensive realm;
Your fostering care, to every branch extend;
Their wrongs redress, their liberties defend.

Shall mob presume to raise the impious hand
Against the laws of this once favored land,
In acts of riot, plunder, strife, and blood;
Of laws rigid, both of man and God?

Wake O Columbia from thy slumbers now,
Break off the spell that closes now thine eyes,
Exert thy power quell every hostile band,
An equal measure mete to every man.

The cause support for which our fathers bled,
The storm-avert now pendant o'er thy head,
Lest the same hand that thou dost foster now,
Smite thee in turn, and cause thee low to bow.

Rouse from thy dreams and open now thine eyes;
Ere vengeance dread, shall thunder from the skies,
And in thine ears announce thy fearful fate,
And break thy visions when it be too late.

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL TO HIS ARMY.

DECEMBER 4, 1783.

Can tyrants but by tyrants conquered be,
And freedom find no champion and no child;
Such as Columbia saw arise, when she Sprang forth a Pallas, arm'd and undefild?
Or must such minds be nourish'd in the wild,
Deep in the upturned forest midst the roar
Of cataracts, where nursing Nature smil'd
On infant Washington? Has earth no more Such seed within her breast, or Europe no such shore?

The revolution was over. The eight years conflict had ceased, and warriors were now to separate forever, turning their weapons into ploughshares, and their camps into workshops. The spectacle, though a sublime and glorious one,
was yet attended with sorrowful feelings;
for, alas! in the remains of that gallant army of patriot soldiers, now about to disband without pay, without support, stalked poverty, want and disease; the country had not the means to be grateful.

The details of the condition of many of the officers and soldiers at that period, according to history and the oral tradition were melancholy in the extreme. Possessing no means of paternal inheritance to fall back upon—thrown out of even the perilous support of the soldier at the commencement of winter, and hardly fit for any other duty than that of the camp—their situation can be as well imaginable as described.

A single instance, as a sample of the situation of many of the officers, as related of the conduct of Baron Steuben, may not be amiss. When the main body of the army was disbanded at Newburg, and the veteran soldiers were bidding parting farewell to each other, Lieutenant Colonel Cochran, an aged soldier of the New Hampshire line, remarked, with tears in his eyes, as he shook hands with the Baron:

"For myself I could stand it; but my wife and daughters are in the garret of that wretched tavern, and I have no means of removing them.

"Come, come," said the Baron, "don't give way thus. I will pay my respects to Mrs. Cochran and her daughters."

When the good old soldier left them, their countenances were warm with gratitude; for he left them all he had.

In one of the Rhode Island regiments were several companies of black troops, who had served throughout the whole war, and their bravery and discipline were unsurpassed. The Baron observed one of these wounded negroes on the wharf, at Newburg; apparently in great distress.

"What's the matter, brother soldier?"
"Why, Master Baron, I want a dollar to get home; with now the Congress has no further use for me."

The Baron was absent a few moments, and returned with a silver dollar which he had borrowed.

"There, it is all I could get—take it!"
The negro received it with joy, failed a step which was passing down the river-to New York, and as he reached the deck, took of his hat, and said—

"God bless Master Baron!"
These are only single illustrations of the conditions of the army, at the close of the war. Indeed, Washington had this in view, at the close of his farewell address to the army at Rock Hill, in November, 1783:

"And being now to conclude these, his last public orders, to take his ultimate leave in a short time of the military character, and to bid a final adieu to the armies he has so long had the honor to command, he can only again offer, in their behalf, his commendations to their country, and his prayer to the God of armies.

May ample justice be done them here,
and may the choicest of heaven's favors, both here and hereafter, attend those who, under divine auspices, have secured innumerable blessings for others.

With these wishes, and this benediction, the commander-in-chief is about to retire from service. The curtain of separation will soon be drawn, and the military scene to him will be closed forever.

The closing of this military scene, I am about to relate.

New York had been occupied by Washington on the 25th of November.
A few days after, he notified the president of Congress, which body was then in session, at Annapolis, in Maryland, that as the war was now closed, he should consider it his duty to proceed thence, and surrender to that body the commission which he had received from them more than seven years before.

The morning of the 4th of December, 1783, was a sad and heavy one for the remnant of the American army in the city of New York. The noon of that day was to witness the farewell of Washington—he was to bid adieu to his military comrades forever. The officers who had been with him in the solemn council, the privates who had fought and charged in the 'heavy fight' under his orders, were to hear his commands no longer—the manly form and dignified countenance of the 'great captain,' was henceforth to live only in their memories.

As the hour of noon approached, the whole garrison, at the request of Washington himself, was put in motion and marched down Broad street to Francis's Tavern, his head quarters. He wished to take leave of private soldiers alike with the officers, and bid them all adieu. His favorite light infantry were drawn up in line, facing inwards, through Pearl street to the foot of Whitehall, where a barge was in readiness to convey him to Powles Hook.

Within the dining-room of the tavern were assembled the general and field officers to take their farewell.

Assembled there were Knox, Greene, Steuben, Gates, Clinton, and others, who had served with him faithfully and truly in the 'tented field,' but alas! where were others, who had entered the war with him seven years before. Their bones crumbled in the soil, from Canada to Georgia. Montgomery had yielded up his life at Quebec, Wooster at Dun-bury, Woodhull was barbarously murdered whilst a prisoner, at the battle of Long Island, Mercer fell mortally wounded at Princeton, the brave and chivalric Laurens, after displaying the most heroic courage in the trenches at Yorktown, fell in a trifling skirmish in South Carolina, the brave but eccentric Lee was no longer living, and Putnam, like a helpless child, was stretched upon the bed of sickness. Indeed, the battle-field and time had thinned the ranks which had entered with him in the conflict.

Washington entered the room—the hour of separation had come. As he raised his eye, and glanced on the faces of those assembled, a tear gouted down his cheek, and his voice was tremulous as he saluted them. Nor was he alone.
Men.

"Albeit unused to the melting mood," stood around him, whose uplifted hands to cover their brows, told that the tear which they in vain attempted to conceal, bespoke the anguish which they could not hide.

After a moment's conversation, Washington called for a glass of wine. It was brought him; turning to his officers, he thus addressed them: With a heart full of love and gratitude, I now take my final leave of you. I most devoutly wish your latter days may be as prosperous and happy as your former ones have been glorious and honorable." He then raised the glass to his lips, drank, and added: I cannot come to each of you to take my leave of you, but shall be obliged to you if each of you will take me by the hand."

General Knox, who stood nearest, burst into tears and advanced, incapable of utterance, Washington grasped him by the hand and embraced him. The officers came up successively and took an affectionate leave. No words were spoken, but all was this 'silent eloquence of tears.' What were mere words at such a scene? Nothing. It was the feeling of the heart, thrilling, though unspoken.

When the last of the officers had embraced him, Washington left the room followed by his comrades, and passed through the long line of light infantry.
His step was slow and measured—his head uncovered, and the tears flowed thick and fast as he looked from side to side at the veterans to whom he now bade adieu for the last time. Shortly an event occurred more touching than all the rest.

A gigantic soldier, who had stood by his side at Trenton, stepped forth from the ranks and extended his hand.

"Farewell, my beloved General, farewell!"

Washington grasped his hand in convulsive emotion, in both of his. All discipline was now at an end; the officers could not restrain the men, as they rushed forward to take Washington by the hand, and the sobs and tears of the soldiers told how deeply engraven upon their affections was the love of their commander.

At length Washington reached the barge at Whitehall, and entered it. At the first stroke of the oar, he rose, and turning to the companions of his glory, by waving his hat bade them a silent adieu; their only answer was in tears; officers and men with glistening eyes watched the receding barge, till the form of their noble commander was lost in the distance.

Contrast the farewell of Washington to his army at Whitehall, in 1784, and the adieu of Napoleon and his army at Fontainbleau, in 1814. (The one had accomplished every wish of his heart; his noble exertions had achieved the independence of his country, and he longed to retire to the bosom of his home—his ambition was satisfied. He fought for no crown nor scepter, but for equality and the mutual happiness of his fellow-beings. No taint of tyranny, no breath of slander, no whisper of duplicity, marred the fair proportions of his public or private life—but "He was a man, take him all in all,

We need shall look upon his like again."

The other great soldier was the disciple of selfish ambition. He raised the iron weapon of war to crush only that he might rule. What to him were the cries of the widows and orphans? He passed to a throne by making the dead bodies of their protectors his stepping stones. Ambition, self, were the gods of his idolatry, and to them he sacrificed 'hecatombs' of his fellow-men for the aggrandizement of personal glory. Enthusiasm points with fearful wonder to the name of Napoleon, while justice, benevolence, freedom, and all the concomitants, which constitute the true happiness of man, shod almost a dizy halo round the name and character of Washington.

EXPERIMENTS WITH GUANO.

As this fertilizing agent is attracting a great deal of attention in this country—we may say, more than its share—the following report of some experiments, given by the Liverpool Times, will no doubt prove acceptable to our agricultural readers:

At a late meeting of the Isle of Man Agricultural Society, the following statement was read of some experiments which had been made with guano by Mr. Lyle, of the Kirk Onchan Nursery. On a light and poor soil were two plants of grass; one of Stuckney's rye grass, mixed with small quantities of holcus lanatus and poa trivialis; the other of Italian ryegrass. A space was measured off from each of these patches, and on the 12th of May last, both the spaces were top-dressed with guano, at the rate of three cwt. per acre. On the 20th of June, one square yard of the dressed and undressed spaces, taken as fairly as possible, was cut and carefully weighed, when the following were the results: The produce from one square yard of Stuckney's ryegrass, dressed with guano at the above rate, weighed 7 1/2 lbs.; while that which had not been so treated weighed but 2 3/4 lbs. The Italian rye-grass dressed with guano, weighed 10 1/2 lbs.; whereas that which had not received any, weighed only 4 3/4 lbs. Guano was also applied on the 12th of May, at the same rate, to a row of young elms; and on the 20th of June, this row could be distinguished, even at a considerable distance, from the others, by its deep and healthy green, and more vigorous growth.

A row of larches was dressed in like manner with precisely similar effects, the neighboring rows decidedly partaking of the benefits of the application. On a row of strawberries, and upon those adjoining, effects similar to the last were produced.

KING LOUIS PHILIPPE.

Louis Philippe, who is expected in this country about the 9th of next month, will be the first French Sovereign who has visited England in peace. King John of France was taken prisoner by the Black Prince, carried to London, and lodged in the Palace of the Savoy. Francis the First promised a visit to Henry the Eighth, and Henry the Fourth held out the same hopes to Elizabeth; but obstructions, intentional or unavoidable, intervened.

Neither Louis XVIII. nor Charles X. were kings—they were refugees—and we may safely say England, never till now, had the honor of a friendly visit from a king of France. This is a new feature in the history of this remarkable man, and the skill which he has displayed in preparing the scene for his reception only gives a higher idea of his comprehensive mind, and the skill with which he can render events favorable to his cause. But a month ago war seemed almost inevitable between France and England; the affair of Otaheite and the affair of Morocco exhibited almost insuperable difficulties. The French Republican and Legitimist journals proclaimed that the visit would not take place; the passions of the two nations were too much excited;
neither England nor France could yield;
and the only chance of Louis Philippe visiting Queen Victoria was by a terrible collision between the two countries, in the course of which the French Sovereign would land at Portsmouth with an immense steam flotilla in his rear, march on to London, and dictate peace at St.
James's. The 'King of the Barriades,' however, had no such intention. He seriously contemplated, as a gallant Frenchman, a return to the compliment paid to him by our Queen. He could do nothing less. He and Lord Aberdeen, by mutual consent, threw Pritchard and D'Aubigny overboard—the Prince de Joinville was allowed to batter down the mud fortresses of the Moors—glory was obtained for the son—and no compensation was demanded for the expenses of the war. No town on the Morocco coast was occupied; no indemnity was asked—the district opposite Gibraltar was regarded as sacred ground—and France, to her honor, re-stated satisfied with the conditions proposed in her first ultimatum. No period, therefore could be better chosen for the arrival of the King of the French. But the incident is in keeping with the whole of his history. Never was there a man so prudent, so industrious, so deep in his designs, and so successful. At the outbreak of the French Revolution he sided with the Republicans, he fought at Genappes, and Demouriez says he decided the battle. Banished from his native country, without money or credit, he worked for his daily bread; he taught the youth of Switzerland geometry and mathematics. When driven, from that hospitable region he travelled to America, came to England, returned to France in the train of Louis XVIII., took up his quarters in the abode of his father at the Palais Royal, lived in obscurity, never forgetting the education of his children.—
He kept on good terms with the Royal Family of France, was chief mourner at the funeral of the Duke of Berry, retired to the country when the fatal ordinances of July were issued, in a few days was installed Lieutenant of Royalty; and in a few days more mounted the throne. He has kept it hitherto—he has preserved the peace of Europe—he has raised France to a pitch of commercial industry unknown in that country; and, in the seventy second year of his age, is now about to throw himself unprotected among a people called the natural enemies of France. These natural enemies will do him justice. Soul, though so well acquainted with the English character, was astonished at his reception, and, if we mistake not, the feelings of our countrymen, they will equally astonish the humble exile who once lived at Twickenham.

Three Hundred Spinning Wives in operation on Boston Common.—In an address delivered before the Caledonia (Vt.)
Agricultural Society, by Henry Stevens, Esq., in which the importance of affording suitable encouragement to domestic manufactures is very forcibly set forth, the author says: 'We find in the American Annals, an account of the anniversary of a society for encouraging industry, held 1783, on which occasion Boston Common presented a novel sight.—
In the afternoon, about 300 young female spinners, decently dressed, appearing on the Common at their spinning wheels were placed regularly in three rows, and a female was seated at each wheel; the weavers also appeared cleanly dressed in garments of their own weaving. One of them working a loom on a stage, was carried on men's shoulders attended with music; an immense number of spectators were present at this interesting spectacle.
The Rev. Dr. Cooper preached a discourse, and a collection was made for the benefit of the institution. Ladies of Boston whirling three hundred spinning wheels! These were afterwards the matrons who refused British tea, and who never saw a piano. Wonder if a thousand delicate ladies could not be seen in the city, at their pianos, where one old fashioned racy dame could be found at the healthy exercise of the spinning wheel?

Mr. Stevens adds:—The woman who manufactures for her own household, and on a piece of goods to sell, does more to retain the solid coin in our State, than all the banks or the greatest financiers.'

Horrible Affair.—The following extract of a letter from Linnai gives an account of a most horrible occurrence which recently happened at a neighboring island, dated March 22:—You will have heard from Capt. Green, of the Ontario, that three men deserted from him last Friday night. To-day two of them returned; they were brought to the U. S.
Consulate Agency, and made one of the most horrible statements I ever heard.
They, as they say, hired a boat of three natives on Friday evening, and started for Hawaii. There were three in the boat, viz: Walter G. Pike of New Windsor, Orange County, N. Y.; Robert McCart, New York City, and Jacob Von Clief, belonging to Middletown Point, N. J.—the latter a colored man. They pulled all Friday night, Saturday, Sunday, and their nights, and became exhausted, and were unable to pull any longer. On Tuesday they drifted on the rocks at Linnai, and, having been without food or fresh water the whole time, and having drank salt water, they were in a state of starvation. They were not able to get up the pali (precipice) and agreed to cast lots to see who should die for the benefit of the other two. The lot fell on Von Clief, who was killed by blows on his head with a stone. They then cut his arm and throat, and drank his blood after which they cut a piece from his right arm and ate it. After they became strengthened, they got up the pali, and met with some natives who gave them food, and brought them across the island, and to this place in canoes. The natives have been examined, and confirm the statement made by the men. The dead body was found as they described, and buried by them. The Governor will send to Linnai to-morrow for the women they first saw after landing, and for the remains of the boat.

Another letter states that these men were tried for murder, and acquitted, and subsequently tried for stealing the boat, and fined $80 and costs. Having no means of paying the fine, they were working out on the public roads.—N. Y.

CHINESE AGRICULTURE.

We passed the batteries which had so recently been the scene of such dreadful slaughter, and stemming the strong current, proceeded rapidly up the river.—
The country through which it winds its way is a perfect flat as far as the eye could reach, and in as high state of cultivation as the market-gardens round London. Small farm houses stood in every direction, neatly encircled with flower gardens, the whole presenting a perfect picture of wealth, fertility, industry, and comfort; and when we were informed (a circumstance we had every reason to believe perfectly true,) that the same state of things existed, not only throughout the whole of this, but of all the neighboring provinces, any one of which, as regards extent would make a handsome kingdom for a European potentate, some slight idea may be formed of the endless internal agricultural wealth of the Chinese empire, and the little concern the Emperor of this mighty country has been accustomed to bestow on foreign nations, their commerce trade, or anything else concerning them. Numerous implements of agriculture, which we supposed only to be known to the most scientific and highly instructed European nations, were discovered in great numbers, and in constant use among them, from the plough and common harrow to the winnow and thrashing-machine with which scarcely any farm-house, however small, was unprovided. Added to which, for the purpose of irrigation, scarcely any considerable field that did not possess its chain pump, for the purpose of irrigating their crops, by drawing the water from the lower levels, with comparatively small labor to themselves; from which I have not the least doubt that those at present in use in our navy or merchantmen were taken.—Recollections

Doings in Wisconsin.—The last number of the Lancaster (Grant County) contains a long account of some transactions which closely resemble an attempt at lynch-law, by what that paper calls substantial farmers and order-loving citizens.
One John Thompson, formerly a man of wealth and influence, has recently become obnoxious to his neighbors, between whom and himself various disputes have arisen. Several barns were destroyed by fire, and the acts were attributed to Thompson. He was arrested, and not giving bail was committed to prison, and after remaining there for several months, made his escape before trial. A few weeks ago another barn and a number of large stacks of wheat were destroyed, the latter being the property of a man to whom Thompson owed an inveterate enimity; this, connected with other circumstances, led to the belief that he was the author of the fires, and in a short time, scores of armed men were scouring the country in search of him. For two or three days the search was ineffectual, but yet it was thought they had traced him to where he had encamped and drawn up his canoe on the east bank of the Mississippi. The discovery or something else, led to further search in that quarter, and his arrest by the Sheriff the same evening on an island in the river. As soon as it was known that he had been arrested, forty or fifty of the settlers, all armed, attempted to take summary vengeance upon him. The Sheriff sent an express for aid, which came in time to protect his prisoner, who was lodged in jail and the illegal assemblage dispersed.

Interior of a Harem at Damascus.—
The possessor of this harem is by no means enviable. The ladies and their attendants had a most negligent, uncleanly, and altogether unprepossessing appearance, looking as if they had slept in their daily dress, as is the fashion here, and that for more than one night. They screamed, laughed and made all sorts of rude noises about me, stared at me, and seized my hand. The savages of the South Sea Islands could not be ruder in their curiosity. And this was the harem of a wealthy and respectable man!

Certainly the harem makes its prisoners coarse-minded and stupid. What there was between the behavior of these women and that of the fair Jewesses who, like them, are natives of Syria, and equally uneducated! I felt very uncomfortable within the walls of this harem, and was glad when I got out and joined my attendants. To see such a company of rude women was revolting. The harem degrades woman to a mere animal. Men who take the liberty to write about things of which they know nothing have often asserted that these Oriental women do not feel unhappy in the harem. So much the worse for them! Did ever a cow feel unhappy in a green meadow?

What a happiness that I should belong to the old so-called barbarians, to the German race, with whom, even from the oldest times, woman has held her due place. Polygamy is a wall of separation between Christianity and the Eastern people.—Countess Hahn Hahn's Oriental Letters.

A Missionary Killed.—The New Bedford Mercury gives the following painful intelligence: Jane 20th, the natives assembled at Point Venus, this being too near the Bay of Papeete, for general safety, the French Governor again, at the head of 400 troops, marched upon them.
The natives received intelligence of his approach, and placed themselves in ambush.
The natives allowed the main body to pass,
but as the rear guard was passing in front of the English Mission House, they opened their fire in a direct line with the house. Mr. Kean, one of the missionaries who was walking on the veranda, was struck by a ball, and killed instantly.

For Liberia.—The emigrant vessel of the Maryland Colonization Society takes her leave of Baltimore to-day, with a goodly number of emigrants. The departure of the expedition has been delayed from the first of the month, for the purpose of carrying out thirty-seven persons set free by Mr. Wilson, of Kentucky provisions for whose transportation are made by the Pennsylvania Colonization Society. To this number will also be added, twenty-seven, manumitted by Harriet P. Tompkins, of Virginia; arrangements for whose transportation being provided by the executor of her will

LEGISLATURE.

On Monday the 2d inst., the Legislature of this State convened at Springfield, and elected Col. W. A. Richardson of Schuyler county, Speaker. After filling the offices of Clerks, Door Keepers, &c., it received the Governor's Message.

Fellow-citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

It is with pleasure, that I again meet the representatives of the people, to consult for the welfare of our common constituents; and I am happy to announce to them, that it has pleased an all-wise Providence to continue to us, as a nation, the blessings at home and abroad; the enjoyment of liberty, property, and happiness, secured to us by our venerated republican institutions; and in our own State, an ample sufficiency of the fruits of the earth for general comfort.

If there be any thing to detract from the brightness of the picture which might be presented of individual and general prosperity, it is, that for the last two seasons, the crops have not been so abundant as usual; considerable amounts of property have been destroyed by high waters, the prevalent sickness has been severer than common the present year; and the people are oppressed with the apprehension of evil from the magnitude of the State debt; but with these abatements, our condition, as a people, might be advantageously compared, with that of many other nations of the earth, whose starving & over-wrought inhabitants are suffering from hunger, war, pestilence, famine, or unprofitable toil; and last, though not least, from the oppression of arbitrary and unequal laws, which crush one portion, and that the largest of the people, to make them subservient to a favored few. Indeed, if discontent and repining, should exist amongst us, they could not spring from a state of actual want; but rather from the lack of those superfluities and luxuries, which are less necessary to a comfortable existence, than to please a corrupted imagination.

Since the adjournment of the last General Assembly, the pecuniary affairs of the people, have improved in the most satisfactory manner. The immense amount of private debt, contracted in consequence of an unsound and redundant paper circulation, has been mostly liquidated. A depreciated currency, then universally prevalent, has been withdrawn, and gold and silver, and the paper of solvent banks, has been substituted in its place. Indeed it is highly satisfactory to observe, the great amount of the precious metals, which has been added to the general circulation; thereby giving stability to the currency, and a security to the value of property and labor, unknown for many years before. The exchanges, have never been so well regulated in the palmiest days of the United States Bank; and this result has been brought about by the natural laws of trade, unimpeded by mischievous legislation.

The several acts, putting our local banks into liquidation, by removing an artificial and mischievous system of currency, have greatly contributed to these results. The great scarcity of money, which was experienced at first, promoted economy in private life. It abolished the system of private credit, which had prevailed, to the ruin of thousands, under an expanded paper circulation. These acts, also caused the banks to disgorge their specie, which for many years before, had been withheld from the business of the country. And, more than all, these acts, have demonstrated to the people, that a currency which is depreciated may be withdrawn from circulation, and a sound one substituted, not only without inconvenience, but with general benefit to all. They have also demonstrated the grand truths, which have been doubted by many, that banks are wholly unnecessary to supply a local currency; that money, while in the main, exist and circulate in every country, in proportion to its exchangeable property; and that local banks, in fact, impede the equalization of the currency, and manifestly tend to derange the exchanges.

Whether local banks are necessary and expedient, in highly commercial countries, where they can be managed with integrity and ability, and where strict punctuality in the payment of debts, prevails amongst all classes of people, is a question which I do not propose to discuss. But if former experience, is to be any guide for the future, we must be satisfied, that we in the State of Illinois, are better without them, than with them.

We tried the system, under our Territorial Government. It was a failure. In 1821, we tried a State Bank, under the management of officers appointed by the legislature. It resulted in a loss to the State of about one hundred thousand dollars; and for the space of four or five years the depreciated paper of the bank supplied our circulation to the exclusion of all other money. We tried the experiment again in 1835, by chartering the late banks, with no better success. And we ought now, to be satisfied, that without a greater and more general punctuality, in the payment of private debts, it will ever be impossible to administer the affairs of a bank with safety to the people. If the debtors and customers of the bank do not pay, it will be impossible for any institution, with the wisest management to maintain specie payments for any great length of time. It is perhaps unnecessary to discuss the subject further. The people of the State, have become so thoroughly satisfied of the evils of the system, that if we obey the will of our common constituents, no effort will be made to re-charter any of the existing banks, nor to create new ones.

It will be proper that the representatives of the people, should make a thorough examination into the state of these banks, and if they have violated any of the provisions of existing law, apply such remedy as may be needful; if their affairs have been managed prudently and honestly, suffer them to wind up and quietly out of existence, according to the terms of the acts providing for putting them into liquidation.

The State property, directed to be sold, by the "Act to provide for the sale of public property, and the payment of the public debt, approved March 4, 1843," has all been appraised, advertised, and offered for sale, according to the provisions of that act.

Sales were not effected so readily as was anticipated. The railroad from Springfield to Mercedosa, remains undisposed of, and without more repairs than I can recommend to be made on it, at the expense of the State, must become useless in a few years. I submit to the wisdom of the General Assembly, in case it cannot be sold during the session, to derive some mode of disposing of it, so as to continue its use to the country.—Of the two hundred and ten thousand acres of land, donated by Congress, under the distribution law; and the forty-two thousand acres purchased by the State, under the provisions of the law to establish a system of internal improvements, only seventeen thousand, six hundred and twenty-four acres, and ninety-seven hundredths of an acre, have been sold, up to November 11th, 1844.—These lands were mostly sold to persons who were, or intended to be, actual settlers; and produced the sum of sixty-five thousand thirty-one dollars and twenty-seven cents, principal and interest, in internal improvement bonds and a scrip. A general account of the sales of this and other property will be furnished to the General Assembly.

At the time this law was passed, the scrip and bonds of this State, were selling in the market at the rate of about eight cents on the dollar. Soon after the adjournment of the late General Assembly, the bonds of the State, rose in price to be worth from forty to forty-six cents on the dollar; which, I have no doubt, was the true cause why no more of the public property was sold. Whether it would be better to continue the sale of these lands, and thereby continue a faint effort to extinguish a portion of the public debt; or whether it would be better to hold them up from sale, until the settlement and improvement of the country shall create a greater demand for them, and enhance their value; are questions which I submit to be determined by the legislature.

On the one hand, if these lands are continued subject to sale, the people who want them for settlement, may be accommodated, the settlement of the country may be promoted, and they would, the sooner become taxable. On the other hand, if the price of bonds should fall, these lands may all be purchased upon speculation, and if they should be withdrawn from the market I have no hesitation in believing that they will increase in value much faster than the State debt will increase by the accumulation of interest on such part of it, as these lands will extinguish, at present prices.

There has been no revision, or republication of the general statute laws of the State since the year 1833. Since that time one-third of the State which was then a wilderness, has been populated.

This portion of the people has never been supplied with the statutes, and in many of the older counties the copies of the revision in 1833, are becoming scarce and almost out of print. There is, perhaps, nothing more imperatively demanded of the legislature than a thorough revision and republication of the statute laws. Most of the standard laws, I apprehend, will require but little revision. They were drawn by the judges of the supreme court, with great care, and are as near perfection as they could probably be brought during the hurry of a session of the legislature. There are, however, occasional laws passed since, which might be amended with advantage; and such amendments would seem to be required before a general republication shall be authorized.

In pursuance of authority granted to me by the latter part of the 21st section of an act entitled "An act to provide for the completion of the Illinois and Michigan canal, and for the payment of the canal debt," I appointed Michael Ryan and Charles Oakley, commissioners on the part of the State, to proceed to the Eastern cities, and to Europe with instructions to open a negotiation with the holders of Illinois bonds; and authorized them to pledge the canal, canal lands and other property pertaining to the canal fund, for a further advance of one million six hundred thousand dollars to complete the canal; and I, also, advanced to each of them, to defray their expenses, the sum of fifteen hundred dollars, from the moneys received by me from the United States, under the act of Congress, entitled "An act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and to grant pre-emption rights," this being the only money, at the time belonging to the State, and there being a sufficiency besides, to pay the entire interest on the school fund due for the year 1842.

At one time great hopes were entertained of a successful negotiation.—The bondholders in Europe and America agreed to advance the sum of four hundred thousand dollars, to be expended on the canal in the year 1844, upon certain conditions. One of which was, that it should be proved, by the examination of competent agents, to be appointed by them, that the representation made by Messrs. Oakley and Ryan, in reference to the canal, the amount of the canal debt and the value of the property proposed to be pledged, should turn out to be correct. Accordingly Governor Davis and Capt. Swift, of the State of Massachusetts, two gentlemen of high standing for integrity and talents, were appointed by the authority of the bond holders, to make the required examinations. These gentlemen did make an elaborate examination and report, highly favorable to the statements of Messrs. Oakley and Ryan; and the bondholders themselves acknowledged that all the conditions, on the part of the State had been complied with.—The security offered by the State was found to be sufficient; but owing to some cause, at present unknown to me, the money has not been paid; subscriptions have not been made up, and the negotiation may possibly fail.

Great hopes were entertained, that by means of this law, without further pledging the faith of the State, or borrowing any more money, the bondholders would take the canal property and complete the canal. This property honestly belongs to our creditors, for money already advanced. It would, however, be of but little value to them, in the present unfinished condition of the canal. If the law had simply proposed to turn the property over to them in its present condition, without power to finish the canal, I apprehend that we should have done both them and the State the greatest injustice. It was sincerely believed that the provision for finishing the canal, was no less beneficial to them than to us; as it provided for increasing and giving an active value to the pledge, for the payment of precedent debts.

The probable failure of the negotiations under this law, will leave us in a condition in regard to the canal, in which it will be easier to foresee the failure, than to predict the success of any new project.

Some persons have proposed to solicit another donation of land from the General Government; others an appropriation of money direct from Congress, and others again rely upon the distributive share of the State in the proceeds of the public lands. To all which plans there seems to me, to be insuperable objections.

The choice lands of the State have already been selected. The 210,000 acres selected in 1842, are better in quality than any which could now be selected.—These lands have been in market since April last, on favorable terms, and but few of them have been sold; thus demonstrating that the sale of such lands is so tardy as to afford but little encouragement to contractors to undertake and progress with the work. The distributive share of the State in the proceeds of the sale of the public lands will be but a small sum at first, compared with the sum demanded for the work, and must necessarily decrease in amount every year as the lands are sold. The sum thus to be raised, if expended directly on the canal, would not complete it in less than sixteen years; and if offered as a security for the payment of interest on a new loan, the very uncertainty of the existence of such a law, being liable at all times to be repealed, or continued at the pleasure of Congress, together with the certainty that the amount to be derived therefrom, must annually diminish, will render the offer of no avail. It cannot be imagined that capitalists would lend money on such security.

There are also objections to a direct appropriation of money, by Congress.—It is true that Congress is bound, by compact with the State, to make the National road, and if money could be appropriated to this, and some few other objects of great national importance, such as the Illinois and Michigan canal, harbors on the great Northern lakes, the Mississippi river, and its great tributary streams; if every other portion of the Union would not call for similar and greater appropriations; if no reckless and extravagant expenditures should be made, merely to secure the local popularity of members of Congress; the principal objections would be obviated. But if there be anything to be feared, more than another, it is that Congress some time or other will enter into a general, wild, and extravagant system of internal improvements, by means of which, if the log-rolling system of some of the States shall be introduced, the General Government would soon be as much crippled with debt as are those unfortunate States. We may rely upon it that whenever this system shall be again revived in Congress the members there will be as much devoted to its diffusion all over the country, as were the members of our own legislature. Each one will desire to do as much for his constituents as he can, not only as an act of patriotic devotion to their interest, but more frequently, to enhance his own popularity. Each one would append his own little neighborhood river or road, and all would be ashamed to return to their constituents without a share in the general scramble.

During the administration of one of our Presidents, a survey was ordered, and a system projected, involving an expenditure of upwards of one hundred millions of dollars. If this had succeeded, it would have been added to from time to time, until the whole United States would have been as irretrievably ruined as our own State is supposed to be. Fortunately, however, for the country this most dangerous system was successfully counteracted and overthrown by a succeeding administration; I call it dangerous because it manifestly tends to the creation of a large national debt; a debt which, whenever contracted, will paralyze the financial energy of the whole nation, and throw it "manacled and handcuffed at the mercy of foreign powers."

In forming an opinion on this subject, it is all the time to be remembered, that the confederacy alone, is charged with the war making power, and with the general defence against foreign aggression. The States, separately, cannot make war, nor defend the country. They may be solvent, but their financial ability, can not be used for general defence. The common government is our only reliance for this, and if this government, being alone charged with the common defence, is to be crippled and ruined with debt, whether by squandering its revenues, by a distribution of the proceeds of the public lands, by assuming the State debts, or by a ruinous system of internal improvements, we will make ourselves the easy victims of the nations of Europe; and we will be sure to see them on every occasion of difference, sending their fleets to our coasts, to bombard our cities, and drive us into dishonorable treaties, as they have often done with the weak governments of Mexico, and the imbecile Republics of South America.

We have these instances, and many others of weak nations, as standing examples of what would be done to us by the proud, overbearing and unjust nations of Europe, with whom might constitutes right, if we thus impair the national strength of our country.

It is true that a national debt existed during the last war with Great Britain. We had then, however, the public domain almost unimpaired by previous sales.—Many millions of it were granted as military bounties for the enlistment of soldiers, and all of it was pledged for loans to carry on the war. This was a rich and ample resource. It infused power into weakness, and saved a resort to high taxation. Since that time the most valuable of the public lands have been sold, and the sales must necessarily decrease for the future, making it more than ever necessary to abstain from the creation of new debts.

It is also true, that Great Britain has a great national debt, which does not seem to impair her ability to prosecute most extensive wars. But there is a difference between this government and that. Hers is a government of force at home and abroad, sustained by the bayonets of a mercenary soldiery, by which she is enabled to ravish from the mouth of starving poverty, the last morsel of its bread, in the shape of the most odious and extravagant taxes, with which a nation was ever afflicted. Ours is a government of opinion, founded upon the principle of voluntary submission to the laws. We are a free people, who will never submit to such burdens as long as our liberties endure. If we follow the example of England, in the creation of a great national debt, we would be compelled to follow her example in her system of government. For nothing short of a monarchy, sustained by the bayonets of a hired soldiery, could ever wring such taxes from the free people of these United States.

All of these measures, are liable to the common objection which arises from the uncertainty and dictatorial nature of the action of Congress on such subjects, and upon the whole, I think I may venture to assert that none of them will do to rely on. As for myself, I have no new measure to propose, but it will afford me great pleasure to concur with the General Assembly in any measure which will really conduce to the accomplishment of this great work.

The subject of common school education must necessarily attract your attention. It is one of the utmost importance to the well being of the people; the due provision for which is essential to the perpetuity of enlightened republicanism, and absolutely necessary to a proper and just administration of our democratic institutions. No system on this subject has yet been adopted, which has been satisfactory to the people; or which has been executed with efficiency in all parts of the State. But little statistical or other information of the actual operation of existing laws on this subject, has yet been collected to enable the General Assembly to legislate upon it with an enlightened judgment. Some means ought to be adopted, to collect this information; and I can think of none better than the appointment, by your honorable bodies, of an agent, at once faithful and competent to the task; whose duty it would be to travel into every county, and if possible, every neighborhood; and by a careful inspection and examination, collect this information for the use of the Legislature; and by lectures and every other means in his power, endeavor to impress upon the people the overwhelming importance of the education of their children. Such an agent ought to be a rare man; endowed with talents, zeal, and discretion of the highest order. Money expended on such an agency, if ably, faithfully and zealously executed, would be approved by the people, as being a mere for the benefit, than any other appropriation whatever. And if taxed for it, they would feel that they had been taxed for a purpose of the highest utility.

During the last summer, serious disturbances occurred in the county of Hancock. The causes and consequences of those disturbances, and the history of the several transactions to which they gave rise, will be laid before you in a special report.

My proceedings as ex-officio Fund Commissioner, in settling, collecting and paying debts due to and from the State, and the general management of the State property, will likewise be laid before you in a special report.

The companies chartered, at the last session to complete the Central railroad, and the Northern Cross railroad from Springfield to the eastern boundary of the State, have not as yet complied with any of the terms of the several laws by which they were created.

The act also to settle the account of Macanister and Seebins has not been complied with by them; and it is now pretty certain that they never had, and never will have the ability to comply with its terms. The bonds which they proposed to return, were not and have not been subject to their control. It will be recollected that these bonds were hypothecated to them, upon which the Fund Commissioner received the sum of two hundred and sixty-one thousand dollars, to pay the semi-annual interest on the State debt, due on the first of July, 1841. These bonds were immediately re-hypothecated by them, to raise the money advanced to the Fund Commissioner; and have ever since remained beyond their control. The money is due to the holders of the bonds in proportion to their advances. They have not, however, seen proper to present them for payment, according to the terms of the above recited act; and many of them have been thrown into the market and sold, from time to time, at other bonds.

The present judiciary system, has been found to be insufficient for the due administration of justice in some parts of the State, and particularly in the county of Cook. The city of Chicago, situated in that county, has so increased in population and business, as to require a court to be in session the greater part of the year. The county of Cook is now the component part of a circuit of seven counties. Chicago is a city of some twelve thousand inhabitants; being situated on Lake Michigan. Its business is of the character and importance of a seaport town; it is the thoroughfare for travelling by land and water, to and from the northern part of this State, the southern part of Wisconsin, and a part of Iowa Territory. In such a place, there must be a greater amount of litigation; and a larger number of criminals committed, than could be expected amongst the same number of people, differently situated.—And so it is, with all thriving and populous cities. The city of St. Louis, containing less than three times the number of inhabitants, has three courts sitting nearly all the time for the despatch of business; and the judiciary there, is no more than a pledge to the wants of the people. I respectfully recommend the establishment of a separate court in the county of Cook, and city of Chicago, with a jurisdiction concurrent with the circuit court. The present system has operated to the people there, for years past, as almost a denial of justice. Prisoners have suffered long and vexatious imprisonment, before they could be tried for offences, of which they were accused, and the county has been put to an expense in maintaining them, unknown to other counties.

There may be other parts of the State suffering in a somewhat similar way. If so, the fact will be known to the General Assembly, and the evil ought to be removed by the establishment of such additions to the judiciary system, as will meet the wants of the people.

The revenues of the State for the year 1844, are estimated, by the Auditor, at the sum of $150,000, no part of which has yet been collected. There is also due, for arrearages of previous years the sum of $59,304. The probable cost of assessing and collecting, what is now due to the State is estimated at about $18,000; and of the whole sum now due, amounting to $103,304, the sum of $100,000 may be collected and paid in by the first of May next. This revenue will be increased for the years 1845, and 1846, about $5,000 each year.

On the 31st of October last, there were warrants on the Treasury on standing to the amount of $22,832; and on the same day, there was an unexpended balance in the treasury of $1,173,63.

The sum now on hand, and that due, and expected to be collected, will be scarcely more than sufficient, by the strictest economy, to pay the current expenses of the State Government, the interest on the school fund, and the expenses of this General Assembly.

As to the extraordinary debt of the State, contracted for the canal and other internal improvements, no interest has been paid on it, which has accrued, since the first of July, 1841, and no provision of law has been made, for such payment. The magnitude of this debt, compared with the resources of the State, has been a continual terror to the people. They have lived in expectation of oppressive taxes. The same has been anticipated, by all who would otherwise emigrate to the State. The popular vote at the last election, shows that our population has been increased but little since 1840; and it is a fact, too notorious to be concealed, that nothing but the utter impossibility of selling real estate, prevents the rapid decrease of our numbers. The adjacent territories are filling up with inhabitants at our expense. The high and palmy days have departed, when we doubled our population in a few years; when, if a citizen owned more land than he wanted for cultivation, or if he wanted to leave the country, or remove from one part of the State to another, he could sell his land for cash. What has produced this state of things? Has it been high taxes? No, it has been the fear of them only. It is because money has been drawn from our pockets, as a tax upon our industry? No. Not one cent has yet been paid by taxation. On the contrary, our taxes for State purposes are three times less than they are in the great and flourishing State of Ohio. Nevertheless, Ohio is advancing to greatness, with unparalleled rapidity; whilst we are paralyzed with the toad fear of evil only, when no such evil really exists.

The fancies, the fears, the imaginations of men hang like an incubus, upon our prosperity. The reality whenever it comes, can never be so terrifying, as alarming, as the undefined and dreamy imaginations of men, conjured up by the mere expectation of an unknown and uncertain evil.

If something could be done, to define the extent of this evil, to dissipate imaginary terror, and to create a confidence in the public mind, here and all over the world, that justice will be done, and no oppression attempted, we may reasonably look for a return of prosperity. Our own people would pursue their industry with liberty and increase their improvements with confidence; strangers from abroad would be attracted to the State, and property would be doubled in value in a very short time. But without something of this kind shall be done, the terrors of the people will drive them away, as fast as they can dispose of their property, and all substantial inhabitants, who might be expected from abroad will avoid us, for some of the territories. Indeed, if we might expect any increase, it would most likely be composed of the refuse population of other States; men, who would have every thing to gain and nothing to lose, who, having but little respect for their own private character, would be indifferent to the honor and credit of the place selected for their residence.

The more apprehension than of high taxes, and not of their actual existence, constitutes our only embarrassment. How necessary then, is it, that the whole height and depth, length, breadth, and thickness of the apprehended evil should be defined and settled immediately, and that forever.

Whatever is done ought to be in conformity to the great principles of natural justice. It ought not to involve a tax, which would be oppressive. If a fund shall be established, it ought to be so constituted, as to increase with the future prosperity of the country, and although it might be small at first, a probability ought to appear that, within a reasonable time, it will increase to such an amount, as will answer the purpose intended, it ought to be such a measure, as the people will be satisfied with, and cheerfully submit. It ought to appear, that it will not be made a political hobby hereafter. No antagonistic measure of party ought to be arrayed against it. In a word, whatever is done, ought to be a complete and permanent settlement of the question; and it ought to appear that no new agitation will grow out of it to endanger the measure, as the settled and permanent policy of the country.

In the first place, this question can never be settled by denying the debt. It is too notorious that we have had the money of our creditors, and they have had nothing in return. The sense of the universal world is, and always will be, that we owe them. This is an imperishable fact, which can never be forgotten. The question will always arise at every succeeding session of the Legislature. We may deny the debt—we may plead non est factum to our bonds, but like the rogue, who seeks to cheat his creditor in private life, we will still owe the money; the benumbing consciousness of which, being registered on our hearts, will stick to us to plague us forever.

The question cannot be settled by asking and receiving a distributive share of the proceeds of the public lands. A fund so constituted will not amount to more than $90,000 at first; and must annually diminish as the lands are sold. Such a measure would give no confidence that a provision had been made for the ultimate payment of either principle or interest of the debt.

The question cannot be settled by an assumption of the State debts by the United States, without doing as much injustice to some of the States, as would be done to our creditors by open and avowed repudiation. Several of the States have no debt to pay, and yet their citizens, equally with ours, would be taxed to pay money which they have never enjoyed or contracted. It would be as honorable and honest, to cheat our creditors out of their interest as to bring it from others, who are under no obligation morally or legally to pay it. A law involving such monstrous injustice, can never be passed or sanctioned by the American people.

The truth is, we will have to rely on ourselves, upon our own exertions. We contracted the debt ourselves, and ourselves will have to pay it. We need look to no foreign aid. We must make bare our own right arm, and come up to the work, upholding as it looks, like men.

This is a subject which has common and my most anxious attention. I have looked to this session of the General Assembly, and have fondly hoped that the fears of the people, and the high influence of an uncertain position, might now be put at rest forever.

It will be impossible to raise money enough by taxation to pay the entire interest; still, something may be done. I would not propose a high nor an oppressive tax. I know too well the misfortunes and calamities of the people, to believe that a tax could be collected. At the last session, an increase of taxation was impracticable, on account of a total want of money in the country. The same cause still lingers to some extent in some of the interior counties. The partial failure of crops for two years, the sickness of the last season, the floods and high waters in some places, it must be acknowledged, will present obstacles against doing as much as could be desired.

It is hoped, however, that these partial impediments may not be considered insuperable. There is no other practicable mode of settling this great question than by increasing the revenue. The additional burden will not have to be paid until the latter end of the next year, and the beginning of the year following. In the meantime, relief might be given to the sufferers by high water, by extending the time for payment of the present taxes, and if the Constitution presented no barrier, releasing them entirely. In a year or so more, by the time such taxes will become due, it is hoped that a total recovery will be wrought in the pecuniary circumstances of the people.

In the year 1827, a portion of the land tax was first given to the counties. They were then universally in debt, and all of them needed an increase of their revenues for the erection of court-houses and jails. These have been built long since, and most of the counties could have been free from debt, with proper economy. With them, a large revenue or a small one would answer the same purpose. A small one would be sufficient, and a large one is squandered to no useful purpose.

This land tax ought to be resumed by the State treasury. Frequent attempts have been made to effect this, but without success. The objection has always been that there was more land taxable in the old than in the new part of the State, and that the measure would be unequal. This objection is now lost to its force, and no longer presents any obstacle to this measure of true justice and economy.

I would recommend that the additional revenues thus derived, and such additional tax as the Legislature in their wisdom will provide for, be formed into a fund, the proceeds and increase of which shall be sacred, and dedicated to the extinction of a portion, however small at first, of the interest on the public debt.

Whatever we do in this way, ought to have the greatest permanency. There ought to exist no very considerable dissatisfaction in the public mind, and the nearer unanimous we all are upon it, the more permanent the measure would be. We ought to make it known to the whole world, that whatever may be done in this way, is all that ever will or can be done. Thus, by showing our willingness to contribute according to our ability, by making that our permanent policy, not to be added to or subtracted from in future, and by thus setting a limit to the fears and imaginations of men, in relation to the huge phantom of expected taxes, we might reasonably calculate to restore ourselves in the estimation of mankind, turn the tide of emigration again into our country, accompanied by wealth and intelligence. Land again would become of some value. There would be a demand for it at once, and our condition would be improved in every respect.

Every man of property in the State, and all have less or more, ought to desire the speedy and permanent settlement of this question. His property is of but little value, whilst the fears and terrors of high taxation prevail on one side, or unblinking, impudent repudiation stares him in the face, on the other.

May the Supreme Ruler of the universe enlighten our understandings, to see what is best to promote the true interests of our constituents, and nerve our arms and hearts with the courage to do it.

THOMAS FORD,
Springfield, Dec. 3, 1844.

Loss of the ship Alabama.—The ship Alabama, Capt. Bunker, which cleared from New York on the 21st ult., with an assorted cargo, went ashore and was wrecked on the 29th ult., at 3 P. M., on the Ginger-bread Ground, 3 miles to the eastward of the East Rock. The vessel a total loss—the cargo saved, and all that portion between decks without damage. The captain and crew went over to Nassau in a wrecker. The ship was insured, but to what amount we did not learn. The ship Pangor, Capt. Odum, which arrived yesterday, went to the assistance of the A. and was detained there 11 days. The passengers of the A., viz: Rev. Mr. Ogden, of Miss; Rev. Mr. Williams, do; Mr. E. Mallard, N. O.; Mr. E. Rowe, N. Y.; Mrs. Eastern; Mrs. Holden, of N. O., and 34 stowage, arrived here yesterday on board of the Bangor.

[N. O. Bul., 16th inst.]

Awful Waterspout.—Matanzas papers state that at Yabu, during a late hurricane, a tremendous waterspout passed through the place, doing much damage. It was about twenty feet wide. In its course, it passed over two houses, driving the roofs through, and entirely destroying one. Five children were killed in one of the buildings. The effects were the same as if a violent river had run through the town, leaving a kind of channel. Trees, grass, and every thing that came in its way were torn up.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 11, 1844.

Several communications are unavoidably crowded out in consequence of the length of the Governor's message.

Fencing.—Mr. H. Stanley, a gentleman recently from the north, is now in this city giving instruction in the art of Fencing to such as wish. His skill and moderate terms, render the opportunity highly favorable to such as wish to manœuvre in the cuts, thrusts, and salutes, with grace, precision, and dexterity. As he will continue through the winter till that wish to improve the chance, will have time.

Wonder.—It will be a wonder if some of the elders don't pay a fine of twenty dollars, for omitting to make their marriage returns to the city Recorder.

Conviction.—Geo. Reader, was recently convicted of passing counterfeit money in St. Louis, and sent to the Missouri penitentiary for five years.

THE HEATHEN AT OUR OWN DOOR.

If we cannot feel for them, we have no heart to feel for the heathen abroad. Otherwise it is all sentimentality, all fictitious philanthropy, mere missionary romance, and anxiety for the heathen. The Christian that cannot feel for his suffering brother at home, and desire that he may be raised from a condition of suffering, degradation, and sinfulness, to happiness on earth, and glory in heaven, has no heart to feel for the suffering abroad. True piety sympathizes with the suffering of all climes, and generally first with those at her own door.—Christian Politician.

Very true: "The heathen are at our own door!" The voice of the people at home; the voice of strangers abroad; the voice of government throughout the world, and the voice of Jehovah, will sanction such doctrine.

The voice of blood from the Cilly duel, and many others; the voice of blood from the riots of Philadelphia; the voice of blood from lynching men to death at Vicksburg; the voice of blood from burning a negro alive in St. Louis; the voice of blood from the murdered Lovejoy at Alton; and the voice of blood from the martyred Joseph and Hyrum Smith in Carthage jail, all cry for vengeance, and witness to an anxious and insulted world, that the heathen are at our own doors!

Every city in the United States, save Nauvoo, by its grogshops and brothels, filled with vulgar, profane, and wretched vagabonds, speaks with a voice like thunder, that the heathen are at our own doors!

The gambling, the profane swearing, the dissoluteness and vulgarity of that portion of community not "having a form of godliness," the levity, pride, and unfaithfulness of what are styled Christians; and the irreverence, and what may justly be called the popular profanity of the official elite, and fashionable portion of the nation, publish like the voice of an angel, that the heathen are at our own doors!

"Fictitious philanthropy," truly to talk about the moat in our brothers' eye, when a beam so large in our own, hides God from us!

The truth is, Mr. Christian Politician, there is nothing but Mormonism will save this generation from wretchedness and ruin. Now mark it; if fifty years find this nation prosperous without Mormonism, Joseph Smith was a false prophet, and there is no God! Watch, therefore.

MEETING OF THE MORMONS LAST THURSDAY.

Agreeably to an announcement in the papers, Elder Winchester, one of Sidney Rigdon's men, addressed a meeting of the Mormons of this city, last Thursday, in their hall, corner of Hudson and Canal streets. The attendance was very slim, only about thirty persons, being present, two-thirds of whom were females.

After a long rambling, and rather incoherent narration, descriptive of the early part of Joe Smith's career at Nauvoo, the Elder went on to speak of a "vision" which Joe had ten days before his death. He and Hyrum went out, he said, to the prairie to call on the name of the Lord, and then Joe beheld in vision the tragical scene in which he was soon to take a part at Carthage jail. From that moment Joe was an altered man—he lost all spirit, and as the Elder said, "his countenance fell" from that moment. The Elder went on to argue that Joe's death was ordained of the Lord, on account of Joe's transgressions—that he did not apostatize, but he wrought abominations, and was therefore deemed unfi-to direct "the Kingdom," and share in its triumphs. The transgression was in introducing the "spiritual wife system." On this subject it was expected that the Elder would have gone into the details, and exposed it fully. But he contented himself with a general denunciation of it, said that it was universally prevalent at Nauvoo—and that it was to free the church from that evil, that Sidney Rigdon had taken a separate stand. Elder Winchester called on all the faithful to come out and separate themselves at once from their corrupt brethren at Nauvoo, which was, he said, doomed to destruction, and was fast falling into decay on account of its iniquities.

Altogether the Elder's speech was rather tame, and did not present any point of novelty or especial interest. It is quite evident that the death of Joe Smith has given a fatal blow to this delusion.—N. Y. Herald.

Mormonism of itself, is a living miracle, and the world, aside from the members of the church, is the witness, and the above proves it. Whenever a person is cut off from communion with the saints, his power of the spirit, the simple Mormon spirit, is gone and all flesh notice it. Apostates may preach, but God only gives power; and they worm themselves into notice, but the word of the Lord, that they shall be cursed with the heaviest of all curses, will follow them in this world and the world to come, while the faithful bear the gospel whisper, "peace."

PRISONERS AT VAN DIEMAN'S LAND.

To the Editor of the Tribune: Herewith is transmitted to you a notice in reference to a number of individuals who were included with the American captives in Canada in 1839, which, on the score of justice and benevolence, I ask you to give publicity to in the columns of your paper.

Of the destiny of the men whose names are given in the list below, I have been able to obtain no certain information; but I am made certain of the fact that there are now 42 American citizens imprisoned at Van Dieman's Land by the British Government on account of their part which they took in the revolutionary movement in Canada in 1838—and these unfortunate men, who were of humble stations, have been allowed to live along in their miserable condition of common felons, while the influence of our Government has since their imprisonment been several times exercised to procure the liberation of other citizens of the United States, who had become prisoners under precisely the same circumstances in Mexico. Without reference to the merits of either the cause of Canada or Texas, I would ask, is this just? Say what you please on the subject, I assert that the conduct of the Government of the United States towards the American captives at Van Dieman's Land, when viewed in comparison with the conduct of the Government towards American prisoners in Mexico, is a scandal and a disgrace to Republicanism.

Very respectfully,

TH JEFFERSON SUTHERLAND.

I feel an earnest desire that no individual who was concerned in the late unfortunate attempt at revolution in Canada, whom I may claim as my countryman, and who has been numbered among the captives, should be forgotten and left to suffer as a prisoner, however humble may have been his condition of life, and however destitute of friends he may be which I believe every true hearted American will adjudge a reasonable one for me; and therefore I solicit of the said Postmasters, that they will make diligent enquiry for the above named persons in their several towns, and if any of the individuals named in the above list have resided therein at any time, and the fact and present whereabouts of such person can be ascertained, that they will give me information immediately, by letter addressed to Th. Jefferson Sutherland, New York, by postage free.

LATER FROM MEXICO.

We copy the following from the N. O. Picayune of the 11th inst.

Indian Disturbances in the North.—We had an arrival yesterday from Tampico, bringing dates to the 26th ult. The most important intelligence which we gather from the papers before us relates to a severe contest between the Mexicans and the Comanche and Tlahuacan Indians.

The latter would appear to have made an incursion among the Mexicans and carried off a large number of women and children. We have not the particulars of this fight unfortunately, but it must have been very severe, as we have a list of the names of forty-six Mexicans killed upon the field, and twenty-two wounded. This fight occurred some time prior to the 9th of October, near the Paso de los Moros, in the district or precinct of Reynosa. Contemporary with this, at the rancho of los Moros, twenty-two were shot or burned in the house attached to the rancho, and many women and children carried off captives.

On the 17th of October another engagement took place. There were, according to Mexican accounts, upwards of four hundred Indians engaged in this. The affair lasted over two hours, a lively fire being kept up all the while. The Indians then abandoned the field, giving up the fifty-five Mexican women and children, whom they had previously carried off captives, a quantity of fire arms, and some horses which they had stolen. Twenty of the Indians were left dead upon the field, while many more were believed to have been carried off in the flight, according to Indian usage, both dead and wounded. On the side of the Mexicans nine were killed and thirty-four wounded. Immediate steps were taken by the sub-prefect of Reynosa to raise a sufficient force to cut off the retreat of the savages, who retired by the way of the North. The Mexican editors pretend that upon several of the Indians killed in the fight were found medals of silver, with the bust of Mr. Van Buren upon them, and on the reverse the arms of the United States. This they imagine to be a sign of the utmost significance of the hostile designs of this country upon their town.

Atlantic and Pacific. San Juan Canal.

—This lake, Nicaragua, the waters of which rise and fall with the wind, is surrounded on all sides by high mountains and volcanoes; amongst the former may be remarked the Orizaba of nine thousand feet in height, the Volcan of eight thousand six hundred feet, the Mombi Zombi, the Madraza, the Reys, and the Alta Gracia. The depth of the lake varies from six to fifteen fathoms; its surface is one hundred and sixty-eight feet above the level of the Atlantic, and one hundred and fifty-six feet above that of the Pacific ocean. The distance from the lake mouth of the San Juan to the town of Nicaragua, situated one hundred feet above the lake, is estimated at fifty-eight miles, and from this town to the Pacific ocean at seven miles, in all one hundred and sixty-nine miles; one hundred and eleven, which to be canalized. But the seven miles from Nicaragua to the Pacific ocean, present far greater difficulties than the canalization of the San Juan river; since, in that extent, it is necessary to overcome a fall of one hundred and fifty-eight feet, and to excavate a terrible rock for three miles in length. It would extend the article to too great a length to attempt a detailed description of the construction of such a work, which is doubtless possible but necessarily attended with immense difficulties and expense. There is another difficulty, or less present importance, it is true, but which may become serious hereafter—New Granada claims the river San Juan as her ancient boundary belonging to the empire of the ancient vice royalty of New Granada. The title bay of Cagola, lying a day's march from the lake is the nearest point of the great ocean, but if even a canal could be constructed from the lake to this point, there is here no suitable anchorage. Three miles for her south there is another little bay called Port San Juan, which is equally incapable of furnishing anchorage to a sufficient number of vessels. The rise and fall of the tide at this port is only twelve feet. The undulations of the waters of the lake resemble those of the sea in miniature, and are often very dangerous in severe storms. If the volcanoes, situated in the centre of the lake, have a fine effect from their singular and extraordinary character, they also offer occasion fearful and wide spread destruction.

The Republic of Central America, like Panama, has two distinct climates; the western portion on the Pacific ocean is much cooler than the portion on the Atlantic. The dry and rainy seasons also occur at different periods on the two oceans. The rainy season on the Pacific commences from May to November; on the Atlantic, from November to May. During the six months of the rainy season, it usually rains only twice a week, and always about four or five o'clock in the afternoon. It is towards midnight that those great storms occur in the tropical zone, mingled with frightful peals of thunder. The rainy season at Panama, like that at Port San Juan, is also the hottest—yet the thermometer never rises above 28 degrees of Reaumur, and usually during all this time is about 25 degrees of Reaumur. During the dry season it only rains about once a week for an hour or two, and the thermometer does not rise above 20 degrees of Reaumur, and often falls in the morning to 14 degrees. Very violent north winds blow this season over every month, and last from twenty-four to twenty-eight hours. It is also during this season that earthquakes occur most frequently in the neighborhood of Nicaragua.

So much for this project, proposed to the government of the United States by the republic of New Granada, long before the idea of canalizing the San Juan river had been abandoned by the King of Holland and his associates, on being informed that it would require an expenditure of about forty-four millions of dollars to construct said canal.

Matilda Queen.—This woman is not as fortunate in this world's blessings as her name would indicate—no rank adorned her, no power is wielded by her, save the power of woman's tears; but in her case there was a barrier to the full effect. When handsome women cry they will almost always produce sympathy, but an ugly woman may cry on until the man in the moon comes to town, and that is all the good it will do. Matilda, we should think, will learn this ere long. She was yesterday convicted of vagrancy, by the Mayor, and sent to jail for fifteen days. She says she once knew all the joys of wealth, but those happy days are gone, and crime and poverty stepped in. Alas for humanity. [Bulletin.]

Gunpowder Nullified.—It is a singular fact that a French officer has discovered a method of taking away the explosive properties of gunpowder, to be restored at pleasure. It is merely to mix the powder with finely powdered charcoal or black lead, filling up the interstices between the grains; and if in this state it is set fire to, it merely fuses, but does not flame. In a recent experiment, two barrels of the powder thus mixed, were placed one upon each other, and the lower lighted. It burnt in about twenty minutes, but the color developed had so little force, that the upper barrel was but lightly charred, and its contents uninjured. The powder is at any time rendered serviceable by sifting it.

Writing Paper from Mulberry Bark.

—Dr. B. Stabbins, of Northampton, has succeeded in making writing paper from the bark of the mulberry tree. The first experiment produced a very colored, but smooth paper; the last is very white, glossy and stout, but not quite free from spots.

The cost of Fashion.—From a pamphlet sent us, says the Evening Mirror, we learn that five hundred millions of dollars are spent annually in the United States for such articles of dress as are subject to the fluctuations of fashion. Of this it is computed that 16 millions are spent for hats, probably about 20 millions for caps and bonnets, and for other articles of dress not less than 400 millions. So that not far from a million and a half dollars are spent daily for clothing; of which if the cost of Fashion claim but ten percent, (but probably she receives double the sum) one hundred and fifty thousand dollars are sacrificed daily at the footstool of the fickle goddess, by the enlightened citizens of the United States!

ASSESSORS AND COLLECTORS NOTICE.

Quackster from China.—This metal, so extensively employed in medicine, in the amalgamation of the noble metals, in water gliding, the making of vermilion, the silvering of looking-glasses, the filling of barometer and the thermometer tubes, &c., has hitherto been imported chiefly from Spain, Germany and Peru. Now, however, there is a prospect of its being obtained from China—some of the provinces of which have been long known to yield it in considerable abundance. One of the main novelties in the Chinese import consists in the mode of packing, the metal being simply poured into a piece of bamboo about a foot long and three inches thick, having each end firmly closed with resin. This rude form of package is found quite as serviceable as the iron bottle in which mercury is usually brought, while it is lighter, and in every way more convenient for shipment. Specimens were recently shown in the London market, and from the remunerating prices which they brought, it is expected that renewed shipments of the article to Europe will take place on an extensive scale.—Wall St. Reporter.

After mature and careful deliberation, I am fully and satisfactorily convinced that Mr. Sidney Rigdon's claims to the presidency of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, are not founded in truth. I have been deceived by his specious pretences, and now feel warned every one over whom I may have any influence to beware of him, and his pretended visions and revelations. The Twelve are the proper persons to lead the church.

LIFE IN PARIS.

Historical ruins abound in this country and serve as an object to one's promenade. The bathers of Dieppe, after having visited the curiosities of the city, go to the castle- D'Argues, and the field that celebrated battle where the brave Crillon was not. Cruel disappointment for a hero, but which nevertheless, does not appear sufficient to make him hurt himself notwithstanding the counsel which his good master gave him. In the environs of Trouville, the promenade offers remembrances not less curious which attach themselves to the ruins of the castle of Bournville, Viliers and Lassay. The Marquis de Lassay was one of the wisest men, and one of the boldest braggarts of his time. Attached to the house of Orleans, and courtier of Allee de Montpensier, the Marquis used to talk incessantly of the magnificent castle which he possessed in Normandy, not far from the sea coast. At every turn he brought

By his entreaties had no success. Princess came not, and the Marquis, tired of a boast which he had dearly bought, died of vexation in his fine castle of Lissay. This magnificent habitations received afterwards some amiable visits. The castle became the property of the Count of Lourengais, the brilliant gentleman who gave to Sophie Arnould, worth 50,000 livres, about 80,375 livres, and who versified against Madame Du Barre's epigrams of a much less considerable value. Exiled for his poor verses, Count was consoled for his fine dame by Sophie Arnould made the opera physician order sea-bathing for her, and she used to pass her holidays at the Castle de Lissay. Afterward M. de Lourengais, in his peace with the favorite, who, in place this full reconciliation, came to seal the dance at the Castle, having made the King's physician bring her to the salt-water baths. Doctor said the waters have always been the residence of sensible women. It is true that the Castle de Lissay was visited by two Princesses instead of one, it is true that the sea shore of Trouville received the imprint of the four prettiest feet of the 18th century; delicate feet, which skipped so lightly on the boards of opera, unruled feet, which tripped gracefully on the crown of France. Then came the Revolution, and the Castle de Lissay, built in three months, was demolished in three hours. The part of so much splendor, there remains only a part of a wall and a ruined staircase. But from the top of the hill the view is magnificent. It was at the Castle de Bonneville that William of Orange held counsel with his barons and enabled his vassals to go to the conquest of England. Sea-bathing places have peculiar physiognomy, quite different from Baden, Ems or Spa. You find here as there a mixture of

COMMUNICATIONS.

MR. EDITOR:—I have just taken a glance at the 2nd number of Sidney Rigdon's paper. He tries to show that a division of the church was predicted by the Savior in the parable of the ten virgins; but his logic will all fall on this point. He will never get one half of the church. Consequently the division which he has caused is not predicted of, neither alluded to in the Scriptures which he quotes. But that he is a branch spoken of, none I presume will deny. The Book of Mormon speaks of some bitter branches that were to be cut off, and I am free to confess that he is one of them, and has been legally cut off by the authorities of the church. He tries however to show that Joseph was cut off for his transgressions; yet when he came here first from Pittsburgh, he said that God had shown him that a guardian must be appointed to the church to carry out the measures of Joseph, and he offered himself as the guardian, but was rejected. And now he says to carry out the measures of Joseph would be death.

Mr. Rigdon, do you not remember how you came into a certain council about the 1st of April or latter part of March last, that had been organized by Joseph Smith; and as how you danced and shouted, and threw your feet so high that you came well nigh falling backwards upon the stove? Certainly you must remember this; for you frothed at the mouth like a mad man, and gave glory to God so long and loud that you became entirely hoarse and exhausted. Your song was, "Glory to God and the Lamb that I have lived in this time, Hallelujah to Jesus that mine eyes have seen this day, and thanks to him brethren that I have been permitted to enter here, for of a surety God is with you in power and glory." Do you not recollect, Mr. Rigdon, saying to me a day or two after, at your own house, when you were standing in the door and I just without, that every body might know that God was there. "I know that he was there," said you, "even in that council." Now you say that Joseph was a bad man, and has been for a long time. You say that all the authorities here are base and wicked. But you did declare here that if ever a man died a martyr to the cause of God, Joseph Smith did; and that he went to Heaven holding the keys of the kingdom, and that the kingdom must be built up unto him (Joseph Smith). You also said that you had seen Joseph in a vision, and that he occupied this important station. You declared that God had shown you these things, and you need not attempt to deny it; for there are thousands of witnesses here of both male and female that heard you. And why are you now prating against him and the church, giving yourself the lie and red-dressing yourself in a burlesque upon all honesty, integrity, consistency and uprightness.

Your face, sir, is about run; and unless you speedily repent, the hand of God will soon be heavily upon you. And if you do repent and eat your own words, that will damn you in the eye of reason and justice; so you are bound to come to naught, and that speedily, turn which way you will or go forward in your present course. If you go forward in your present course, you will waste your strength and spirit and God will condemn you. But if you repent, you are only damned for this world in the eyes of men, and you may get salvation at last.

The Editor of Mr. Rigdon's paper is very sure that Nauvoo is doomed to be overthrown. I would say, don't be so fast. Nauvoo will live to preach the funeral sermon of the present "Branch," and her daughters shall requit. When the memory only lives to be a stink in thy nostrils, and also in the nostrils of God and his people, when thou art as powerless as John C. Bennett, or Judas Iscariot, then know that you have fought against Jehovah, and lied in his holy name.

ORSON HYDE.

Nauvoo, Nov. 29, 1844.
MR. TAYLOR:—Sir—I have attempted in the following communication, to give you a few thoughts upon education, which if you would be so kind as to give an insertion in your valuable paper, you would much oblige. Yours respectfully,

J. M. MONROE.

We have been commanded by the Lord, "to seek wisdom out of the best books;" but from the best understanding I can give of the matter, I am rather of the opinion that this command has been to a great degree neglected. Indeed, some of the elders seem to think that there is no necessity for studying, and increasing their stores of wisdom, by reading and research; for, say they, when asked the reason, "The Lord inspires us with matter, and puts words in our mouths," therefore there can be no necessity for our puzzling our brains with study. I do not, by any means, intend to deny that the Lord will even in these days, inspire the hearts of men with matter, such as may be for the benefit and salvation of this generation: I do not deny but that he will bestow a great portion of his spirit upon his servants, to enable them to explain the principles of salvation to mankind. But I do deny that he will inspire unlearned, illiterate ignorant men to become learned and intelligent. As well might we ask God to give us our bread and butter already spread. It is entirely contrary to his manner of procedure in any age of the world.

He gives us the means, and we must make use of them; he gives us the use of the hand, the regular changes of the seasons, night and day, rain and sunshine, and every thing necessary to make our grain grow; but, if we are so foolish, as to suppose that he will feed us without any exertion upon our part, we should soon starve to death. Unless we plant we never can gather; unless we sow we never can reap.

Just so it is with education. The Lord has given us our mental faculties; but, unless we make use of them, we never can become intelligent. We might pray all the days of our life, for the Lord to enable us to speak and write correctly; but, we never could do it without some knowledge of the principles of Grammar. The generality of our elders are proverbial for their talents and learning; but there are others who are unlearned and illiterate, who go out preaching, trusting in the Lord (as they say) to supply them with every thing needful. And what is the result? They very seldom are the means of bringing any well educated individuals into the Church. And why? because the learned of the Gentiles will not believe that the ignorant uninformed Mormon elders are capable of teaching them any thing; and generally will not go to hear them. I do not wish to be understood, as repudiating the idea of trusting in the Lord, as I conceive it all important; but the manner of delivery is your own; the words are of your own choice. You may try it wherever and whenever you please; you will find that how much soever of the spirit of God a man may possess; if he in general makes use of bad Grammar, he will do so still; if he generally is vulgar in his comparisons and expressions, he will remain so. It must be well known to most of our elders that the manner is more than the matter, with this generation.

When the natural weight of truth is connected with a beautiful style of delivery, it will much more readily find its way to the hearts of the public. Therefore, in order that we "may become all things to all men," that we may be instrumental in the hands of God of doing more good, and that we may be obedient to all the commands of God, let us do every thing in our power to become more learned and intelligent. We have been too long asleep to the necessity of education; we have been so much occupied with the stirring events, the wars, persecutions, and murders, which have followed each other in such rapid succession for the last few years, that we as a people, have too much neglected the education of ourselves and our children. Let us now awake to a sense of its importance.

One of the most necessary points of education for our young men, is Grammar; that they may be enabled to express their thoughts either in speaking or writing, correctly. It is absolutely indispensable for any one who has any ambition to become a good speaker, to speak grammatically. It also often happens that we are called upon to express our thoughts in writing, either in letters for private perusal, or for publication; need I say how necessary in the latter case is a knowledge of Grammar and Composition.

I have just opened an evening school, purposely for the benefit of such individuals; and intend to pursue a course, by which they will be enabled to write and speak correctly; and be prepared for the actual business of life. The two great difficulties which assail any individual, on attempting to speak and write an essay are, the want of ideas, and the power of expressing them justly. These are the difficulties which I shall endeavor to enable my pupils to overcome. Grammar is generally thought to be a dry difficult study; but by explaining its use and bearings, illustrating it by familiar examples, and making the students apply it immediately to writing, I hope to render it beautiful, easy and pleasing. The writing of Compositions is also thought to be one of the most difficult arts to be acquired by the student; but by pursuing a gradual course, and leading them on from one thought to another, increasing step by step, they will soon be surprised at the ease with which they can communicate their thoughts on paper.

I am aware that there is a false feeling of pride or shame existing in the minds of many young gentlemen and ladies, which hinders them from acquiring knowledge. They are ashamed to let their teachers and fellow students know the extent of their ignorance. I hope to see this false feeling cast away, as unworthy of our characters. We must remember that we are not to blame for our ignorance inasmuch as we have made use of our opportunities, that we are never too old to learn, and that we never can learn younger. I have put my terms so low that they are within the compass of almost every one; and I presume that a better opportunity for acquiring some knowledge of the important points of education I have named will never occur.

The young ladies may think that all this has no reference to them; but, if they ever expect to become companions to men of intelligence; it will be necessary to get some education that they may become more worthy of their situation. Let the young ladies get knowledge, that Nauvoo may be as far famed for its wisdom, as it is now for its beauty. J. M. M.

IMPORTANT ARTICLE TO SUBSCRIBERS BY FEVER AND AGUE.

[A very learned medical friend has taken the pains to copy for us, from a late work, not republished in this country, the following important observations on this subject of general sympathy.]

MALARIA

Consists in certain invisible effluvia or emanation from the surface of the earth, which were formerly called Marsh Miasmata, but to which it has, of late years become fashionable to apply the foreign term malaria.

Malaria is a specific poison, producing specific effects upon the human body. In its medical sense, it is not simply bad air. Thus we hear of the Malaria of large cities, but argue when it occurs in large cities, is very seldom the growth of such places. The impure air incident to large cities and populous towns is prejudicial enough to health, but it does not generate fever—neither continued fever nor intermittent.

The effluvia which thus forms the sole exciting cause of intermittent and remittent fevers proceed from the surface of the earth, and are gaseous or aeriform, or at any rate they are involved in the atmosphere; but they are imperceptible to any of our senses. Of their physical or chemical qualities we know nothing. We are made aware of their existence only by their noxious effects, and the inference that they exist, was not made till within the last century and a half. To the deleterious agent, a certain degree of temperature seems necessary. It does not appear to exist within the arctic circle, nor does it manifest itself during the colder seasons of more temperate climates. The nearer we approach the equator, the more abundant, virulent, does the poison become, wherever it is evolved at all.

Another condition of the development of the poison—it requires a certain degree of moisture. Not only a certain degree of heat and a certain degree of moisture, but the presence of all the four elements of the ancients, would appear to be requisite for the production of the poison. The water of the marshes has been examined under the microscope, analyzed again and again with a view to the discovery of this pestilential agent, but in vain. A more likely way to detect the noxious material, would seem to be by examining the air of the malarious districts, and this has been done repeatedly by expert chemists, and with the same want of success—the poisonous principle eludes the test of the most delicate chemical agents.

Where there is much heat and much moisture, there we usually find, also, much rank vegetation and much vegetable dissolution and decay. The belief was natural, therefore, as it has been general, that the putrefaction of vegetable matter was somehow or other requisite to the formation of the poison that exists so commonly in swampy situations. This belief obtains almost universal acceptance, yet very strong facts have been adduced to show that the decomposition of vegetable substances, is only an accidental accompaniment of the malaria, and not by any means an essential condition of its evolution. The decomposition of vegetable matter goes on abundantly without the production of Malaria. The rotting cabbage leaves of Covent Garden, and those which taint the air of the streets during the hot weather of summer, give rise to no ague, neither are marshes necessary to produce Malaria; but Dr. William Ferguson, a physician who has had, and who has well used, very sufficient opportunities of investigating the question, shows that vegetation is not necessary, that the peculiar poison may abound where there is no decaying vegetable matter to decay.

Now these facts, and facts like these, seem to prove that the Malaria, and the product of vegetable decomposition, are two distinct things; they are often in company with each other, but they have no necessary connexion. In producing Malaria it appears to be requisite that there should be a surface capable of absorbing moisture, and that this surface should be flooded and soaked with water and then dried, and the higher the temperature and the quicker the process, the more plentiful and the more virulent,

The putrefaction of animal matter is sometimes spoken of as an element in the formation of the malarious poison; but evidence refutes this supposition as completely as it excludes the alleged necessity of vegetable decay. It can be proved that neither animal nor vegetable decomposition is sufficient to generate fever of any kind.

There is good reason for believing that in all cases the poisonous emanations proceed from parts of the surface that have been flooded and the dried, rather than from parts that are still wet and putrid, and this elucidates a circumstance very often noticed, viz: that neighboring places, especially high and low lands lying near each other, change their character in respect to salubrity, upon the occurrence of rains. The low grounds which had previously been dangerous, become healthy when they are flooded over, and the higher lands which are made wet and which rapidly dry again, produce the Malaria abundantly. In the same reason, the edges or borders of swamps are more unsafe than their centres. The drying and half dried margin of the putrid streams may be prolific of the evil, when from the want of confining banks, those margins have been flooded by the rising of the waters. There is no observation more general, than that in malarious places, agues and remittent fevers abound more in hot and dry years, than in those which are cold and moist. And this influence of temperature it is, which mainly determines the differences observable in regard to these fevers at different elevations and in different seasons of the year. In the higher grounds agues occur; as you descend, and the mean atmospheric temperature increases, remittent are met with; and in the lowest and hottest parts, fever becomes continued. When the Malaria prevails, it produces its peculiar consequences, chiefly in certain seasons, and it is in Autumn, especially, that agues and aguish fevers occur—that is to say, after the heats of summer; and the hotter and drier the preceding summer, the more pregnant and fatal are the autumnal fevers.

No very certain or extensive observations have yet been made in respect to the kind of soil from which miasmata are most apt to be extricated. Such as is loose, penetrable, porous, and sandy, appears highly favorable to their formation; so are soils, which containing much clay, are very retentive of moisture.

All malarious districts are much more dangerous at night than in the day time. Whether the poison be then more copiously evolved, or whether it be merely condensed or concentrated by the diminished temperature, or whether the body is, at that time more susceptible of its influence; it certainly is more active and pernicious during the hours of darkness. The practical lesson to be derived from a knowledge of this fact, is obvious. In malarious countries, the open air must be avoided. "Early to bed," is always a good and wholesome rule, but the other half of the proverb, "early to rise," becomes, in such districts, an unsafe precept.

The Malaria loves the ground. It tends downwards. This may be one reason why lying down to sleep in the open air at night is so very perilous. The lower room of the same house may contain the noxious effluvia, while the upper are free.

The Malaria is movable by the wind. It is capable, therefore of being carried from the spot where it generated, and to other places which might else be free from it and healthy. In this respect, it is analogous to a heavy fog or vapor. The conveyance of the poison, like a cloud or fog, from one part of the surface of the ground to another, it is very important to attend to in all places, and especially in tropical climates; when the wind blows for a certain time from the same quarter. We are thus enabled to account for the apparent exception to the last mentioned property—its preference of low to elevated situations. It will be perceived how the Malaria may roll up, and hang accumulated upon the side of a hill towards which a current of air sets steadily from, or across, a neighboring marsh. The poison may thus be blown over a hill and deposited on the other side of it. As the wind may thus transport the Malaria to a distance, and thereby render a spot unhealthy, which, naturally, would not be so; so also it is of service in clearing the poison from other places and preventing its concentration.

It is a well ascertained fact, that Malaria is deprived of its noxious properties, by passing over even a small surface of water—probably they are absorbed by it—and this is another proof of their tendency downwards.

Another remarkable property of Malaria is its attraction towards, and its adherence to the foliage of lofty umbrageous trees, so that it is very dangerous, in malarious places, to go under large thick trees, and still more dangerous to sleep under them. But this property (to a source of peril to those who are ignorant of it,) affords, when known, and rightly made use of, a mode of protection and remedy against the influence of the miasmata. In the territory of Guinea, where large trees abound, the settlers live fearlessly and unhurt, close to the most pestiferous marshes, and to the leeward of them, provided a screen, or belt of trees be interposed.

It appears from the facts detailed, that dwellings unfortunately built in the vicinity of marshes, might sometimes be rendered safe and salubrious, by encircling, at a little distance, a hedge of trees, or perhaps even by drawing round them a broad moat of water. Such experiments deserve at least, a fair trial.

MILLERISM.

We several times proposed to make the delusion of "Millerism," as it is termed, the subject of an article in the Post, during its former paroxysms; but forbore, partly from a disinclination to meddle with the faith of any man or set of men, and partly because the delusion would, we thought, work its own cure, by the falsification of the prophecy, in the going by of the time at which its consummation was placed. And as that period passed, and the "world and all its iniquities" still remained firm and undestroyed, we looked to see the matter completely at an end, and people returning to their accustomed occupations, and to their sober senses.

But, to our great astonishment, we now find the delusion resuming its sway, with if not more general extent, more extravagance than ever. We learn not only in this city, but at other and distant points, the zeal of the pseudo-prophets has again blown up the excitement. We find the believers carried into the most strange conduct, and the most pitiable perversion of all the rules of duty, and of all the obligations, both of religion and of prudence. We hear of women arrayed in "ascension robes," deserting the care of their households, and sitting down in upper rooms, some even in unfinished garrets, to be as near heaven as possible, and there awaiting the "second Advent." We hear of such crowds besetting the places of evening meetings of the believers; that the arm of civil power is compelled to interpose, and close the places of meeting, to save the peace. We find the disciples of Mr. Miller and his followers closing their stores, giving away their goods, and pasting notices on their shutters, that their shops are closed to wait the coming of the King of Kings.

Painfully absurd as is such conduct, we have no disposition to make it the subject of ridicule, although the temptation to do it is strong, and although, perhaps, exposure of the absurdity of such conduct is the best argument against it. But we have collected to day a list of a few of the most prominent delusions of this nature in the history of the world, and present them as but a part of the experience of the past, in order to show the disappointed in their expectations, that they are not the first in the order of time, or the only ones, by many thousands, who have been carried away by such fancies.

Without referring to the delusions of the Jews, who looked for a temporal reign of Christ as an earthly potentate; or the mistaken among the early Christians, who confidently predicted the second advent of the Savior as to occur at the end of the Roman Pagan Empire, giving him also an earthly kingdom; or to the maniac in which the end of the crusades, and the victory of the Christian over the Moslem, would establish the kingdom—we will look to the later manifestations of the consequences of mistaking the promises of the gospel, and confounding things spiritual and temporal. It is sufficient to say that the later delusions are but a perpetuation of the error of those who, in early times, rose, and saying, "I am Christ," deceived many.

In the year 1212, it was predicted and promised that the Mediterranean Sea should be dried up, that believers should pass to Jerusalem on foot, there to build up a new city. After what we have seen in our own time, it will be readily credited that Italy was filled with pilgrims, waiting the drying up of the sea, to commence their journey; and the misery which these persons suffered, and which they inflicted upon their friends and dependents by their infatuation, will be easily imagined.

In 1521 John Stoforus, a mathematician and astrologer of Suabia, predicted a great deluge, and he was so far believed that those who owned lands near the sea sold out at great loss. Books were published giving cheap directions how to escape the inundation; and surveyors actually consulted the stars, and pointed out what places would be least exposed to the waters. Boats were built and placed on the tops of high pillars, in which the believers sat, with their families, waiting for the water to come up, and float them off. Many arches were contrived, with breathing holes in the top, in which men might live, with the waters around them, until the waters had passed away. The time fixed for the inundation proved a very dry season, and the water-proof contrivances were ruined by the continued draught. And notwithstanding the failure of this prediction, we find that Stoforus did not lose his faith; for he then set the final destruction of the world for the year 1588; and died prophesying it.

Merrill, Martin Stoforus predicted the end of the world to take place in 1583, giving the day and the hour. He was in his pulpit, preaching on the subject, when the time arrived, and his audience was waiting the consummation of all things, when a violent storm arose, and for a short time he and his people were full in the belief that all was over. The storm passed away—the sky was serene—the day was delightful—and the preacher was dragged from his desk and almost benten to death.

Wm. Hackett in 1590, predicted the destruction of England, and had not a few followers. He claimed himself to be Monarch of all Europe, and his followers proclaimed him. He was hanged for sedition—an argument which is not now used against error.

Walter Gostello, in 1558 foretold the restoration of Charles II., and the destruction of London. The first part of his prophecy being fulfilled, gave him some credit as a prophet. The second part, it is hardly necessary to say, is as yet unaccomplished.

Thomas Venner, who flourished about the same time, declared that earthly kings were impostors, and attempted with a crowd of his followers, to take actual possession of the earth, in the name of the Lord; they were opposed by the soldiery. They fought like tigers, believing themselves invulnerable, but were overpowered by numbers, and Venner with twelve others, were hanged.

There were several such prophets in France in the seventeenth century—but one of the most remarkable seers of that era, was John Mason, a minister of Water Stratford, near Buckingham, England. Mason believed himself to be Elias and announced that Christ was shortly to appear on earth, and fix his throne at Stratford. An immense concourse met at the appointed time, and with fiddles and other musical instruments, with dancing and other tumultuous signs of joy, awaited the coronation. Poor Mason died in 1697, a full believer in the delusion that he had frequent conversations with the Savior, and that his divine mission was confirmed.

Whiston, the mathematician, was a believer in the immediate approach of the millennium, and lived to see the failure of two predictions. Lord Napier, the inventor of the logarithms, also prophesied the end of the world, and out-lived its term, as he had set it. Dr. Lloyd, Bishop of Worcester, at ninety years of age, went to Queen Anne, and prophesied that at the end of four years, the King of France would turn Protestant; there would be a war of religion, and the papacy would be destroyed.

To come down to a later time, 1701, two learned men arrived at Cologne, who conversed with the Jesuits of that City in Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and Chaldaic. They gave out that they came from Damascus, and were seven hundred years old; and prophesied that Constantinople would be destroyed in 1707, that the whole world would be shook by an earthquake in 1770, that the sun, moon, and stars would fall in 1771, that the world would be burnt in 1772, and the general judgement take place in 1778.

In 1772, a hermit frightened the inhabitants of Trieste into the belief that the destruction of that city was immediately to take place, and so general was the belief with which his predictions were received, that the city was absolutely deserted to escape the destruction. But the day passed off without any calamity to any one, except the unlucky prophet; for when his disciples returned to resume their business, they found the predictor of destruction had realized it in his own person. He was hanged by the proper authorities.

Towards the close of the seventeenth century, the whole court of France was thrown into terror, and people who had never prayed before began then, in the belief that the immediate destruction of the world was at hand. As the event did not verify their fears, and the world continued to stand, they made up for temporary self-denial by plunging anew into the worst excesses. The reaction made them infinitely greater sinners than they were before.

We have quoted these facts—few, indeed, among very many which might be adduced—to remind the reader that it is no new thing under the sun. We are inclined to think that with the failure of this list, as fail it must, for people's expectations cannot be kept up forever, delusions of this particular description will cease, and men will no longer strive to be wise above what is written. Whether the end of the world occurs sooner or later is of little individual consequence to any one of us; for death must happen at some time, and is as likely to occur soon as late, and death to the individual is an end of the world so far as he or she is concerned. We do not think of preparing for that by waiting in idleness—nor should any think to prepare for the end of all things in any other way than by a continuance of the performance of our duties to our Maker, fellows, and to ourselves.

Since we wrote the preceding, the following eloquent passage from Mosheim, relative to the state of the Christian world in the tenth century—a period previous to those in which the instances we have quoted above occurred—has fallen under our eye:—

"Among the opinions which took possession of the minds of men, none occasioned such a universal panic, nor such dreadful impressions of terror and dismay, as a notion that now prevailed of the immediate approach of the day of judgment. This notion, which took its rise from a remarkable passage in the Revelations of St. John, and had been entertained by some teachers in the preceding century was advanced publicly by many at that time, and spreading itself with amazing rapidity through the European provinces, it threw them into great consternation and anguish. They imagined that St. John had clearly foretold that after a thousand years from the birth of Christ, Satan was to be let loose from his prison, Anti-Christ to come, and the destruction and the conflagration of the world to follow those great and terrible events. Hence prodigious numbers of people abandoned all the civil connections and their paternal relations; and giving over to the monasteries all their lands, treasures, and worldly effects, repaired with the utmost precipitation to Palestine, where they imagined that Christ would descend from heaven to judge the world."

Others devoted themselves by a solemn and voluntary oath to the service of the churches, convents, and priesthood, whose slaves they became in the most rigorous sense of the word; performing daily heavy tasks; and all this from a notion that the Supreme Judge would diminish their sentence, and look upon them with a more favorable and propitious eye, on account of their having made themselves slaves of his ministers. When an eclipse of the sun or moon happened to be visible, the cities were deserted, and their miserable inhabitants fled for refuge to caverns, and hid themselves among the craggy rocks, and under the bending summits of steep mountains. The rich attempted to bribe the Deity, by rich donations conferred on the sacerdotal and monastic orders, who were looked upon as the immediate viceroy of heaven. In many places, temples, palaces, and noble edifices, both public and private, were left to sudden decay; they were deliberately pulled down, from a notion that they were no longer of any use, since the final dissolution of all things was at hand.

In a word, no language is sufficient to express the confusion and despair that tormented the minds of these miserable mortals on this occasion. The general delusion was, indeed, opposed and combated by the discerning few, who endeavored to dispel these groundless terrors, and to efface the notions from which they arose in the minds of the people. But their attempts were ineffectual; nor could the apprehensions of the superstitious multitude be entirely removed before the end of this century. Then, when they saw that the so much dreaded period had passed without the arrival of the great calamity, they began to understand that St. John had not foretold what they so much feared."

EXTRACTS FROM THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

President Tyler really is gratified that 20,000,000 of people have elected the president this year "without committing any acts of violence!" The murder of one of the candidates (Gen. Smith,) for the high office, and the "Philadelphia riots," are not considered "acts of violence." We unto the scribbles, paraphrases, hypocrites!

MESSAGE.

To the Senate

and House of Representatives of the United States:

We have continued cause for expressing our gratitude to the Supreme Ruler of the Universe for the benefits and blessings which our country, under his kind providence, has enjoyed during the past year. Notwithstanding the exciting scenes through which we have passed, nothing has occurred to disturb the general peace, or to derange the harmony of our political system. The great moral spectacle has been exhibited of a nation, approximating in number to 20,000,000 of people, having performed the high and important duty of electing their Chief Magistrate for the term of four years, without the commission of any acts of violence, or a manifestation of a spirit of insubordination to the laws. The great and inalienable right of suffrage has been exercised by all who were invested with it, under the laws of the different States, in a spirit dictated alone by a desire, in the selection of the agent, to advance the interests of the country, and to place beyond jeopardy the institutions under which it is our happiness to live. That the deepest interest has been manifested by all our countrymen in the result of the election, is not less true than highly creditable to them. Vast multitudes have assembled, from time to time, at various places, for the purpose of canvassing the merits and pretensions of those who were presented for their suffrages; but no armed soldiery has been necessary to restrain, within proper limits, the popular zeal, or to prevent violent outbreaks. A principle much more controlling was found in the love of order and obedience to the laws, which, with mere individual exceptions, everywhere possesses the American mind, and controls with an influence far more powerful than hosts of armed men. We cannot dwell upon this picture without recognizing in it that deep and devoted attachment, on the part of the people, to the institutions under which we live, which proclaims their perpetuity.

The great objection which has always prevailed against the election by the people of their chief executive officer, has been the apprehension of tumults and disorders, which might involve in ruin the entire government. A security against this, is found not only in the fact before alluded to, but in the additional fact that we live under a confederacy embracing already twenty-six States—no one of which has power to control the election. The popular vote in each State is taken at the time appointed by the laws, and such vote is announced by the electoral college, without reference to the decision of other States. The right of suffrage, and the mode of conducting the elections, are regulated by the laws of each State; and the election is distinctly federative in all its prominent features. Thus it is that, unlike what might be the results under a consolidated system, riotous proceedings, should they prevail, could only affect the elections in single States, without disturbing, to any dangerous extent, the tranquillity of others. The great experiment of a political confederacy—each member of which is supreme as to all matters appertaining to its local interests, and its internal peace and happiness; while, by a voluntary compact with others, it confides to the united power of all the protection of its citizens in matters not domestic—has been so far crowned with complete success. The world has witnessed its rapid growth in wealth and population; and, under the guidance and direction of a superintending Providence, the developments of the past may be regarded but as the shadowing forth of the mighty future. In the bright prospects of that future we shall find, as patriots and philanthropists, the highest inducements to cultivate and cherish a love of union, and to frown down every measure or effort which may be made to alienate the States, or the people of the States, in sentiment and feeling, from each other. A rigid and close adherence to the terms of our political compact, and, above all, a sacred observance of the guarantees of the constitution, will preserve union on a foundation which cannot be shaken; while personal liberty is placed beyond hazard or jeopardy. The guarantees of religious freedom, of the freedom of the press, of the liberty of speech, of the trial by jury, of the habeas corpus, and of the domestic institutions of each of the States—leaving the private citizen in the full exercise of the high and ennobling attributes of his nature, and to each State the privilege, which can only be judiciously exerted by itself, of consulting the means best calculated to advance its own happiness—these are the great and important guarantees of the constitution, which the lovers of liberty must cherish, and the advocates of union must ever cultivate. Preserving these, and avoiding all interpolations by forced construction, under the guise of an imagined expediency, upon the constitution, the influence of our political system is destined to be as actively and as beneficially felt on the distant shores of the Pacific, as it is now on those of the Atlantic ocean. The only formidable impediments in the way of its successful expansion (time and space) are so far in the progress of modification, by the improvements of the age, as to render no longer speculative the ability of representatives from that remote region to come up to the capitol, so that their constituents shall participate in all the benefits of federal legislation. Thus it is, that in the progress of time the inestimable principles of civil liberty will be enjoyed by millions yet unborn, and the great benefits of our system of government be extended to now distant and uninhabited regions. In view of the vast wilderness yet to be reclaimed, we may well invite the lover of freedom, of every land, to take up his abode among us, and assist us in the great work of advancing the standard of civilization, and giving a wider spread to the arts and refinements of cultivated life. Our prayers should evermore be offered up to the Father of the Universe for his wisdom to direct us in the path of our duty, so as to enable us to consummate these high purposes.

There has been no material change in our foreign relations since my last annual message to Congress. Since the close of your last session, a negotiation has been formally entered upon between the Secretary of State and her Britannic Majesty's minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary residing at Washington, relative to the rights of their respective nations in and over the Oregon territory. That negotiation is still pending.

It will afford me the greatest pleasure to witness a happy and favorable termination to the existing negotiation, upon terms compatible with the public honor; and the best efforts of the government will continue to be directed to this end.

It would have given me the highest gratification, in this, my last annual communication to Congress, to have been able to announce to you the complete and entire settlement and adjustment of other matters in difference between the United States and the government of her Britannic Majesty, which were adverted to in a previous message. It is so obviously the interest of both countries, in respect to the large and valuable commerce which exists between them, that all causes of complaint, however inconsiderable, should be with the greatest promptitude removed, that it must be regarded as cause of regret that any unnecessary delays should be permitted to intervene. It is true that in a preliminary point of view, the matters alluded to are altogether insignificant in amount, when compared with the ample resources of that great nation; but they nevertheless (more particularly that limited class which arise under seizures and detentions of American ships on the coast of Africa, upon the mistaken supposition indulged in at the time the wrong was committed, of their being engaged in the slave trade,) deeply affect the sensibilities of this government and people. Great Britain having recognised her responsibility to repair all such wrongs, by her action in other cases, leaves nothing to be regretted upon this subject, as to all cases prior to the treaty of Washington, than the delay in making reparation in such of them as plainly within the principle of others, which she has long since adjusted. The injury inflicted by delays in the settlement of these claims, falls with severity upon the individual claimants, and makes a strong appeal to her magnanimity and sense of justice for a speedy settlement. Other matters, arising out of the construction of existing treaties, also remain unadjusted, and will continue to be urged upon her attention.

We continue to receive assurances of the most friendly feelings on the part of all the other European powers: with each and all of whom, it is so obviously our interest to cultivate the most amicable relations. Nor can I anticipate the occurrence of any event which would be likely, in any degree, to disturb those relations. Russia, the great northern power, under the judicious sway of her emperor, is constantly advancing in the road of science and improvement; while France, guided by the councils of her wise sovereign, pursues a course calculated to consolidate the general peace. Spain has obtained a breathing spell of some duration from the internal convulsions which have, through so many years, marred her prosperity; while Austria, the Netherlands, Prussia, Belgium, and the other powers of Europe, reap a rich harvest of blessings from the prevailing peace.

I am happy to inform you that Belgium has, by an "arrete royale," issued in July last, assimilated the flag of the United States to her own, so far as the direct trade between the two countries is concerned. This measure will prove of great service to our shipping interest—the trade having heretofore been carried on chiefly in foreign bottoms. I flatter myself that she will speedily resort to a modification of her system relating to the tobacco trade, which would decidedly benefit the agriculture of the United States, and operate to the mutual advantage of both countries.

No definitive intelligence has yet been received from our minister, of the conclusion of a treaty with the Chinese empire; but enough is known, to induce the strongest hopes that the mission will be crowned with success.

With Brazil our relations continue on the most friendly footing. The commercial intercourse between that growing empire and the United States is becoming daily of greater importance to both; and it is the interest of both that the firmest relations of amity and good will should continue to be cultivated between them.

The republic of New Granada, still withholds (notwithstanding the most persevering efforts have been employed by our charge d'affaires, Mr. Blackford, to produce a different result) indemnity in the case of the brig "Morris." And the Congress of Venezuela, although an arrangement has been effected between our minister and the minister of foreign affairs of that government, for the payment of $18,000 in discharge of its liabilities in the same case, has altogether neglected to make provision for its payment. It is to be hoped that a sense of justice will soon induce a settlement of these claims.

In my last annual message, I felt it to be my duty to make known to Congress, in terms both plain and emphatic, my opinion in regard to the war which has existed between Mexico and Texas; which, since the battle of San Jacinto, has consisted altogether of predatory incursions, attended by circumstances revolting to humanity. I repeat now, what I then said,—that, after eight years of feeble and ineffectual efforts to recover Texas, it was time that the war should have ceased. The United States had a direct interest in the question. The contiguity of the two nations to our territory was but too well calculated to involve our peace. Unjust suspicions were engendered in the mind of one or the other of the belligerents against us; and, as a necessary consequence, American interests were made to suffer, and our peace became daily endangered. In addition to which, it must have been obvious to all, that the exhaustion produced by the war subjected both Mexico and Texas to the interference of other powers; which, without the interposition of this government, might eventually in the most serious injury to the United States. This government, from time to time, exerted its friendly offices to bring about a termination of hostilities, upon terms honorable alike to both the belligerents. Its efforts in this behalf proved unavailing. Mexico seemed, almost without an object, to persevere in the war; and no other alternative was left the Executive but to take advantage of the well known dispositions of Texas, and to invite her to enter into a treaty for annexing her territory to that of the United States.

Since your last session, Mexico has threatened to renew the war, and has either made, or proposes to make, formidable preparations for invading Texas. She has issued decrees and proclamations, preparatory to the commencement of hostilities, full of threats revolting to humanity; and which, if carried into effect, would arouse the attention of all Christendom. This new demonstration of feeling, therein too much reason to believe, has been produced in consequence of the negotiation of the late treaty of annexation with Texas. The Executive, therefore, could not be indifferent to such proceedings; and it felt it to be due, as well to itself as to the honor of the country, that a strong representation should be made to the Mexican government upon the subject. This was accordingly done as will be seen by the copy of the accompanying despatch from the Secretary of State to the United States envoy at Mexico. Mexico has no right to jeopard the peace of the world, by urging any longer a useless and fruitless contest. Such a condition of things would not be tolerated on the European continent. Why should it be so here? A war of desolation, such as is now threatened by Mexico, cannot be waged without involving our peace and tranquillity. It is idle to believe that such a war could be looked upon with indifference by our own citizens inhabiting adjoining States; and our neutrality would be violated, in despite of all efforts on the part of the government to prevent it. The country is settled by emigrants from the United States, under invitations held out to them by Spain and Mexico. Those emigrants have left behind them friends and relatives who would not fail to sympathize with them in their difficulties, and who would be led by those sympathies to participate in their struggles, however enervate the action of government to prevent it. Nor would the numerous and formidable bands of Indians, the most warlike to be found in any land, which occupy the extensive regions contiguous to the States of Arkansas and Missouri, and who are in possession of large tracts of country within the limits of Texas, be likely to remain passive. The inclination of those numerous tribes leads them invariably to war whenever pretexts exist.

Mexico had no just ground of displeasure against this government or people for negotiating the treaty. What interest of hers was affected by the treaty? She was despoiled of nothing, since Texas was forever lost to her. The independence of Texas was recognised by several of the leading powers of the earth. She was free to treat—free to adopt her own line of policy—free to take the course she believed was best calculated to secure her happiness. Her government and people decided on annexation to the United States; and the Executive saw, in the acquisition of such a territory, the means of advancing their permanent happiness and glory. What principle of good faith was then, violated? What rule of political morals trampled under foot? So far as Mexico herself was concerned, the measure should have been regarded by her as highly beneficial. Her inability to conquer Texas had been exhibited, I repeat, by eight (now nine) years of fruitless and ruinous contest. In the mean time, Texas has been growing in population and resources. Emigration has flowed into her territory, from all parts of the world, in a current which continues to increase in strength. Mexico requires a permanent boundary between the young republic and herself. Texas, at no distant day, if she continue separate and detached from the United States, will inevitably seek to consolidate her strength, by adding to her domain the contiguous provinces of Mexico. The spirit of revolt from the control of the central government has, heretofore, manifested itself in some of those provinces; and it is fair to infer that they would be inclined to take the first favorable opportunity to proclaim their independence, and to form close alliances with Texas. The war would thus be endless; or, if cessations of hostilities should occur, they would only endure for a season. The interests of Mexico, therefore, could in nothing be better consulted than in a peace with her neighbors, which would result in the establishment of a permanent boundary. Upon the ratification of the treaty, the Executive was prepared to treat with her on the most liberal basis. Hence the boundaries of Texas were left undefined by the treaty. The Executive proposed to settle these upon terms that all the world should have pronounced just and reasonable. No negotiation upon that point could have been undertaken between the United States and Mexico, in advance of the ratification of the treaty. We should have had no right, no power, no authority, to have conducted such a negotiation; and to have undertaken it, would have been an assumption equally revolting to the pride of Mexico and Texas, and subjecting us to the charge of arrogance; while to have proposed, in advance of annexation, to satisfy Mexico for any contingent interest she might have in Texas, would have been to have treated Texas not as an independent power, but as a mere dependency of Mexico. This assumption could not have been acted on by the Executive, without setting at defiance your own solemn declaration that that republic was an independent state. Mexico had, it is true, threatened war against the United States, in the event the treaty of annexation was ratified. The Executive could not permit itself to be influenced by this threat. It represented in this the spirit of our people, who are ready to sacrifice much for peace, but nothing to intimidation. A war under any circumstances is greatly to be deplored, and the United States is the last nation to desire it; but, if, as the condition of peace, it be required of us to forego the unquestionable right of treating with an independent power of our own continent, upon matters highly interesting to both, and that upon a naked and unsustained pretension of a claim by a third power to control the free will of the power with whom we treat,—devoted as we may be to peace, and anxious to cultivate friendly relations with the whole world, the Executive does not hesitate to say that the people of the United States would be ready to brave all consequences, sooner than submit to such condition. But no apprehension of war was entertained by the Executive, and I must expressly frankly the opinion that had the treaty been ratified by the Senate, it would have been followed by a prompt settlement, to the entire satisfaction of Mexico, of every matter in difference between the two countries. Seeing, then, that new preparations for hostile invasion of Texas were about to be adopted by Mexico, and that these were brought about because Texas had adopted the suggestions of the Executive upon the subject of annexation, it could not have passively folded its arms, and permitted a war threatened to have been accompanied by every act that could mark a barbarous age, to be waged against her, because she had done so.

Other considerations of a controlling character influenced the course of the Executive. The treaty, which had thus been negotiated, had failed to receive the ratification of the Senate. One of the chief objections which were urged against it, was found to consist in the fact that the question of annexation had not been submitted to the ordeal of public opinion in the United States. However untenable such an objection was esteemed to be, in view of the unquestionable power of the Executive to negotiate the treaty, and the great and lasting interests involved in the question, I felt it to be my duty to submit the whole to Congress, as the best exponents of popular sentiment. No definite action having been taken on the subject by Congress, the question referred itself directly to the decision of the States and the people. The great popular election which has just terminated, afforded the best opportunity of ascertaining the will of the States and people upon it. Pending that issue, it became the imperative duty of the Executive to inform Mexico that the question of annexation was still before the American people, and that, until their decision was pronounced, any serious invasion of Texas would be regarded as an attempt to force all their judgement, and could not be looked upon with indifference. I am most happy to inform you that no such invasion has taken place; and I trust that, whatever your action may be upon it, Mexico will see the importance of deciding the matter by a resort to peaceful expedients, in preference to those of arms. The decision of the people and the States on this great and interesting subject has been decisively manifested. The question of annexation has been presented nakedly to their consideration. By the treaty itself, all collateral and incidental issues, which were calculated to divide and distract the public councils, were carefully avoided. These were left to the wisdom of the future to determine. It presented, I repeat, the isolated question of annexation; and in that form it has been submitted to the ordeal of public sentiment. A controlling majority of the people, and a large majority of the States, have declared in favor of immediate annexation. Instructions have thus come up to both branches of Congress, from their respective constituents, in terms the most emphatic. It is the will of both the people and the States, that Texas shall be annexed to the Union promptly and immediately. It may be hoped that, in carrying into execution the public will, thus declared, all collateral issues may be avoided. Future legislatures can best decide as to the number of States which should be formed out of the territory, when the time has arrived for deciding that question. So with all others. By the treaty, the United States assumed the payment of the debts of Texas, to an amount not exceeding $10,000,000 to be paid, with the exception of a sum falling short of $400,000, exclusively out of the proceeds of the sales of her public lands. We could not with honor take the lands, without assuring the full payment of all incumbrances upon them.

Nothing has occurred, since your last session, to induce a doubt that the dispositions of Texas remain unaltered. No intimation of an altered determination, on the part of her government and people, has been furnished to the Executive. She still desires to throw herself under the protection of our laws, and to partake of the blessings of our federative system; while every American interest would seem to require it. The extension of our coastwise and foreign trade, to an amount almost incalculable—the enlargement of the market for our manufactures—a constantly growing market for our agricultural productions—safety to our frontiers, and additional strength and stability to the Union—these are the results which would rapidly develop themselves, upon the consummation of the measure of annexation. In such event, I will not doubt but that Mexico would find her true interest to consist in meeting the advances of this government in a spirit of amity.

Nor do I apprehend any serious complaint from any other quarter; no sufficient ground exists for such complaint. We should interfere in no respect with the rights of any other nations. There cannot be gathered from the act any design on our part to do so with their possessions on this continent. We have interposed no impediments in the way of such acquisitions of territory, large and extensive as many of them are, as the leading powers of Europe have made, from time to time, in every part of the world. We seek no conquest made by war. No intrigue will have been resorted to, or acts of diplomacy essayed, to accomplish the annexation of Texas. Free and independent herself, she asks to be received into our Union. It is a question for our own decision, whether she shall be received or not.

The two governments having already agreed, through their respective organs, on the terms of annexation, I would recommend their adoption by Congress in the form of a joint resolution, or act, to be perfected and made binding on the two countries, when adopted in like manner by the government of Texas.

In order that the subject may be fully presented in all its bearings, the correspondence which has taken place, in reference to it, since the adjournment of Congress, between the United States, Texas and Mexico, is herewith transmitted.

The amendments proposed by the Senate to the convention concluded between the United States and Mexico, on the 20th of November, 1841, have been transmitted, through our minister, for the concurrence of the Mexican government; but, although urged thereto, no action has yet been had on the subject; nor has any answer been given, which would authorize a favorable conclusion in the future.

The decree of September, 1843, in relation to the retail trade, the order for the expulsion of foreigners, and that of a more recent date in regard to passports—all of which are considered as in violation of the treaty of amity and commerce between the two countries—have led to a correspondence of considerable length between the minister for foreign relations and our representative at Mexico, but without any satisfactory result. They remain still unadjusted, and many and serious inconveniences have already resulted to our citizens in consequence of them.

Questions growing out of the act of disarming a body of Texan troops under the command of Major Saavedra, by an officer in the service of the United States, acting under the orders of our government; and the forcible entry into the custom house at Payson's landing, on the Red river, by certain citizens of the United States, and taking away therefrom the goods seized by the collector of the customs, as forfeited under the laws of Texas, have been adjusted, so far as the powers of the Executive extend. The correspondence between the two governments, in reference to both subjects, will be found amongst the accompanying documents. It contains a full statement of all the facts and circumstances, with the views taken on both sides, and the principles on which the questions have been adjusted. It remains for Congress to make the necessary appropriation to carry the arrangements into effect; which I respectfully recommend.

The greatly improved condition of the treasury affords a subject for general congratulation. The paralysis which had fallen on trade and commerce, and which subjected the government to the necessity of resorting to loans, and the issue of treasury notes to a large amount, has passed away; and after the payment of upwards of $7,000,000 on account of the interest, and in redemption of more than $5,000,000 of the public debt, which falls due on the 1st of January next, and setting apart upwards of $2,000,000 for the payment of outstanding treasury notes, and making an instalment of the debts of the corporate cities of the district of Columbia, an estimated surplus of upwards of $7,000,000, over and above the existing appropriations, will remain in the treasury at the close of the fiscal year. Should the treasury notes continue outstanding, as heretofore, that surplus will be considerably augmented. Although all interest has ceased upon them, the government has resources within itself, which render it independent in time of need, not only of private loans, but also of bank facilities.

In referring you to the accompanying report of the Postmaster General, it affords me continued cause of gratification to be able to advert to the fact, that the affairs of the department for the last four years have been so conducted as, from its limited resources, to meet its large expenditures. On my coming into office, a debt of nearly $500,000 existed against the department, which Congress discharged by an appropriation from the treasury.

I cannot too strongly urge the policy of authorizing the establishment of a line of steamships regularly to ply between this country and foreign ports, and upon our own waters, for the transportation of the mail. The example of the British government is well worthy of imitation in this respect.

Order and efficiency in each branch of the public service have prevailed, accompanied by a system of the most rigid responsibility on the part of the receiving and disbursing revenues of the government, amounting in the last four years to upwards of $120,000,000, have been collected and been disbursed, through the numerous governmental agents, without the loss by default of any amount worthy of serious comment.

Under these circumstances, and with these anticipations, I shall most gladly leave to others, more able than myself, the noble and pleasing task of sustaining the public prosperity. I shall carry with me into retirement the gratifying reflection, that as my sole object throughout has been to advance the public good, I may not entirely have failed in accomplishing it; and this gratification is heightened in no small degree by the fact, that when, under a deep and abiding sense of duty, I have found myself constrained to resort to the qualified veto, it has neither been followed by disapproval on the part of the people, nor awakened in any degree their attachment to that great conservative feature of our government.

JOHN TYLER.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the Britannia we have received our regular files of European papers, and by them we perceive that the "Antennal Gales," were, if any thing, more severe along the eastern coast of the Atlantic, than on the western. The destruction of Marine property was immense.

The Queen continues to visit;—has been to the Isle of Wight, and will go among the Irish.

The "Infant" Queen of Spain, is married.

Winter.—There is something in thought of winter, which, to a contemplative mind, awakens sensations, more acutely felt than described. Whether clouds and storms, snow and frost, gloomified the garden of Eden, has never been recorded for the contemplation of the succeeding generations; and should we here assert that the promise of "winter," was made after the flood, thus ends the matter, because there is no proof farther back.

At present, we can say the weather is cold and the river has been frozen over.

The Thermometer has not ranged lower than zero.

Betting on Election.—The practice of betting upon the future result of any thing is wrong, but especially upon elections. Gambling, horse racing, and betting for money or property, leads to evil, and that country is on the broad road to ruin where no preference is made to virtue over vice.

Thou shalt not covet any thing that is thy neighbor's.

We notice that several shocks of earthquakes, have been felt at different Islands of the sea. The question is, why are the Islands of the sea, more subject to eruptions, &c., than the main land?

POLICY.

There appears to be a great deal of bad policy in vogue at the present time. Every party uses a kind of policy to bring to pass an ascendancy; and, like two armies, the greatest skill is practised, to ambush each other. If there be more than two parties engaged, these promises, offers, and all manner of bargains are as lawful as bank bills. All this is wrong in any government, and tends to corrupt the minds of the people. If a party has not virtue enough in its principles, and wisdom enough in its leaders, to give it triumph, it ought to fail and go into the tomb of the Capulets.

Our country is certainly coming to a crisis, greatly to be dreaded. The animosity, stratagem, and policy, good, or bad, which, like a tornado, sweeps through the nation before and in the great national elections, do not hush into a calm, when the conflict is over; oh no! fresh strength animates fresh opposition, fresh fraud begets fresh friends; and from all appearance, there is no discharge in the war.

All republics have found an incurable malady in party factions; ambition and revenge, will triumph over patriotism and generosity; and then anarchy and confusion, generally sweep the country of liberty and right, and barbarity, degradation, ruin, and wretchedness ensues.

From all appearance, the United States has seen its best days. The friendly spirit that fell on all parts of the country, after the election of a Washington, an Adams, or a Jefferson, like a honey dew, is now banished from the "asylum of the oppressed," by a sort of hocus pocus, kept up by political gypsies. And mark the curiosity, every party has their jugglers, and arts of legerdemain. Ruin, depression of business, no confidence in the government, are the outcries, or symptoms; and then the fortune tellers' skill meets your eye in every paper; and in every breeze; and so bewitching are the ecstasies of "glory that might be," that unless your mind is strong enough to bear up an elephant, you will certainly be led to believe that the sun is a large gold button, and that the moon is, factotum, a Connecticut green cheese.

Now this is all stuff and stuffing, and unless the people turn back, to the good old principles of "seventy-six," and honor that liberty which cost some of the best blood of the eighteenth century, they will soon have to mourn over the tomb of independence, and weep among the brambles where freedom once was.

TRADES MEETING.

At an adjourned meeting of the several Trades, held in the basement of the Masonic Hall, Nov. 26th, 1844, President Taylor being absent, Phineas Richards Esqr. took the chair.

Prayer being made by D. M. Repsher. The chair called for the reading of the report of the committee on charter.

Mr. Orson Spencer, Esqr. rose, and stated that he was not specifically prepared to make a report; but from his knowledge, he could say, that the charter granted to us a privilege of making any terms we choose. That to petition the Legislature to grant us a new charter, would be virtually to curtail our own privileges. That the charter was made wisely with a view to make us a great and privileged people. God had moved not only upon this people to prepare a charter, but upon the Legislature to grant it. They have conferred upon us such acts and privileges as they themselves possess, and have given us all they could give. Were the City Council to grant a special charter it would not be more responsible than the Legislature, it could do no wrong in granting a charter inasmuch as it would not be repugnant to the Constitution of this State and of the United States. Some men want to put a misconstruction upon our charter, and would say that when the charter read "not repugnant to the Constitution of the State and of the United States," would have us think it meant laws of this State and of the United States, but we must not be intimidated by the numerous expositors of the charter. We must abide under its "broad shadow." We ought to incorporate it we please for any purpose connected with the peace and prosperity of this City. The gentleman gave a neat speech strongly pleading with the citizens meeting to improve their privileges.

Mr. Hunter, one of the committee, stated that the charter already gave us the privilege to enter into a body to sue and be sued, and carry it on with propriety.

P. Richards, Esqr. said that he had not lately perused the charter, but well recollect what his impression was, when he read the charter; he was fully convinced that every privilege connected with any branch of mechanism was therein appended to us, if we curtail any privilege granted us therein, we are unworthy as citizens to hold any privileges under such a charter.

Mr. Roberts enquired, whether the Legislature had expressed any dissatisfaction to our charter.

O. Spencer, Esqr. remarked that the Legislature had never complained that we had infringed the limits of our charter, but that a jealousy existed in reference to the charter.

Mr. D. M. Repsher remarked that there was one exception wherein our charter was no broader than those of Springfield, Alton, and other places; and that was relative to "Agriculture and Manufactures." Mr. R. further enquired of the committee for that part of the report relative to the building of a factory, whether by joint stock or otherwise.

Mr. Hunter said that he was not aware that this was one point to be investigated.

O. Spencer, Esqr. asked for further time to consider the question.

Mr. Repsher gave an outline of the report of a former committee.

P. Richards, Esqr. moved that the committee have another week to report, which was carried.

Mr. Roberts made some remarks as to the uses of the building, whether it could not be appropriated to carriage making and other kinds of business, as well as manufacturing clothes.

P. Richards, Esqr. said that he had made several calculations upon carriage and harness making and a cotton factory. He believed that they would soon bring an immense sum of money to our city—at a moderate calculation each of the above branches, would bring from 50 to 100,000 dollars to this city. We want a paper mill, the paper would have a ready market here and elsewhere. A stove factory is wanted. He believed the time is not far distant when we shall have a packing house, when pork will be brought to town instead of being carried to other markets.

Mr. Roberts went further into details relative to carriage making.

Messrs. Repsher and Roberts made several other remarks.

Mr. Hunter asked if any of the gentlemen engaged at Kimball's furnace were present; he said he wished common courtesy to be extended towards them, and hoped they would be encouraged. He said we should encourage our own manufacture. He went to planting corn but made nothing. He has made plows which he sells at 7 dollars each, such has been sold here for ten dollars. He pays good wages.

P. Richards, Esqr. said that patriotism is one of the most available means of helping us, and cited an instance of John Hancock's noble deed of expelling the common enemy of English encroachment, at the sacrifice of all his property, and remarked if we would live we must help one another; if we act upon this principle we shall prosper.

The meeting adjourned to meet on Tuesday 2nd December.

PHINEAS RICHARDS,

Chairman.

ROBERT CAMPBELL, Sec pro.

REMEMBER!

Let a delinquent remember that they must attend to paying their taxes or their lands may be sold. You must go to Carthage and cash over and save yourself expense and trouble. Let it not be forgotten. The sooner it is done, the better.

When this is attended to, let this good wealth be spent in preparing fencing stuff to repair fences in town and on the prairie, that when the Spring opens, farmers and gardeners may be ready for early and active operations.

In England, men will give thirty dollars per acre rent annually for ground, then go to work and spend it up by hand because they may not be able to get a team to plough it with. They will raise enough to pay this enormous rent and support themselves also. Now that land is not so good as our prairie soil; and why not every man that cannot employ himself to better advantage, take his spade (when the frost is out), and turn over a few acres of land? Better do this than be idle; and then you may put in your seed as early as the season will allow, and not be dependent upon any one. There are many thousands of acres of land on the prairie under fence, but not cultivated. This can afford no profit to the owners. They would much rather it would be cultivated and do somebody good, and at the same time improve the condition of the land, than to let it remain in an uncultivated state.

Let not the complaint be heard, "I have nothing to do." Let those who have more land than they can cultivate themselves give their poor brethren a liberal chance. We are placed here to help one another, and to do good, and things should be so arranged that every one who wishes to work may have a proper chance, and those who want work when able, should not eat. If the system were adopted to set every one to work who may seek charity, and make him earn what he receives before he gets it, it would stop much idleness, and lessen the number of applicants for charity.

My counsel would be that whenever a person applies for help, that he be set to work immediately by the person to whom the application, and if he has no work to be done, let him take his application to some bad place in the street and let him repair it, if he be an able-bodied man. Avoid, by all means, feeding and pampering idleness. But the sick must be remembered at all hazards. If therefore any one has any thing to spare, let him not withhold it by saying, I have no work to be done. You must employ him if you have any thing to give him.

I want to see our tanners enlarging their works so as to be able to manufacture all the leather we want ourselves. The way it now is, our hides are sold and taken away, and the labor of tanning them is given to somebody else. Then they are brought back to us again in boots and shoes, and we must pay the dealer for all this labor with a heavy per cent. profit also. This is bad policy and must not be.

More on these matters anon. O. HYDE.

NOTICE.

Persons wishing to pay their State and County taxes, can leave the amount at the Printing Office within one week of this time, and we will take them to Carthage and obtain receipts for them; as we have business there it will save them the trouble of going.—[En.]

Terrible Steamboat Explosion.—Loss of Life.—We regret to learn that on Wednesday afternoon last, whilst the span-tow-boat Tiger was towing over the bar at the S. W. Pass the barque Marcella, she burst all her boilers, six in number, making a perfect wreck of the boat, even to the rigging, and killing three persons and wounding three more slightly. The Marcella was bound for Boston, and we do not learn that she was in any way injured.

The reason why no more were killed, was because all hands had been called off a short time before the accident to haul in the spring cable.—Captain Crowell, the master, was uninjured.

The following are the names of the killed:—Capt. Daniel B. Clark, pilot of this city; David Brown, 1st engineer, of New York; A. Snyder, 2d engineer, of Canada. The remains of the two latter were recovered and buried at Hinchliffe Island.—Clark's body was seen flying in the air at the explosion, and had not been recovered. Such are the particulars so far as we could learn them. The Tiger was owned by Mr. Joseph Clark of this city.—N. O. Picayune, Nov. 16.

FOREIGN RELATIONS—THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

The National Intelligencer concludes the extracts from papers laid before the British Parliament in respect to the suppression of the Slave Trade. These occupy six columns of that paper. Mr. Everett transmits to Lord Aberdeen the letter of P. J. Farham, of Salem, (Mass.) owner of the barque "Jones," seized by a British armed vessel at St. Helena, asking him to urge a settlement of that matter. In Lord Aberdeen's answer, this statement of the case of the Jones is made. The commander of H. B. M. brig Dolphin, Lieutenant Littlehales, suspecting that the presence of this vessel in British waters was a contravention of British law, demanded to see her papers; this was refused. She was searched, some slave iron found, and a letter making an agreement, as it appeared to Littlehales, for the purchase of slaves. The Jones then was seized, (14th September, 1840,) sent to Sierra Leone, and tried. The Judge found that, as the master of the Jones would not show his papers to the searching officer of the Dolphin, thereby resisting the inquiry which the officers of Her Majesty in commission have a right to make into the character of any mercantile vessel found within British jurisdiction and suspected of being implicated in the Slave Trade, he must pay the costs. The vessel and cargo were sold on the 4th of February, 1843, no claimant appearing before the Court, for the vessel and cargo. With regard to the claim for compensation, Lord Aberdeen justifies Lieutenant Littlehales in his conduct, saying further that the owners of the Jones had their remedy in appeal from the decision of the Court, of which they did not avail themselves. An extract from a letter of Lieut. Littlehales follows, to the Secretary of the Admiralty, denying any use of violence while seizing the Jones; denying also that the master had offered to show his papers. Then follows Mr. Everett's second letter, dated May 18, 1843. This case of the Jones was committed to the consideration of Viscount Palmerston by Mr. Stevenson on the 16th of April, 1844; it was not till March 2, 1843, that the American Government received an explanation of the seizure.—Mr. Everett denies in toto the right of search in this case, except by obtaining a regular search-warrant from a magistrate. Instead of this, the only legal and equitable mode, Lieut. Littlehales took forcible possession of a regularly entered vessel; refused to inform her master on what grounds he proceeded; and then sent her to the Coast of Africa. The Court, instead of protecting the Jones, as they should have done by their showing, threw the costs on the owners, amounting in fact to a confiscation, only $8,000 remaining above them from the sale of a valuable vessel and her cargo. As to the matter of papers, the search was made without resistance. The Jones was an American ship, had an American crew, had actually been searched before by the Water witch, and permitted to proceed on her voyage. Her papers had been exhibited to the proper authorities, and were actually on deposit at the office of the American Consul; the Captain offered to show them, but was twice prevented by an armed guard from going on board the vessel. This case presents features quite as extraordinary as those of the John A. Robt. and Mr. Everett concludes with the remark that he attaches as an importance to the final decision of Her Majesty's Government far beyond the value of the interests directly involved in the case of the Jones; and that he cannot but fear that, if no further relief is afforded to the owners of that vessel than that which is tendered by Lord Aberdeen's note of the 2nd March, a degree of discontent will be produced on the part of the Government and the People of the United States of a character greatly to be deprecated.

FROM AFRICA.

The U. S. Brig Porpoise arrived off late at New York, from the west coast of Africa.

The famous Spanish slave brig Bolla quo was captured by H. B. M. brig Albatross, on the 16th of August in the Neighborhood of Galinas. She has made 22 or 23 successful voyages, and during that time has been captured three times, each time condemned and sold, and every time bought by the slavers. She was built at Bombay, and sent from that port to the colony of Liberia with emigrants and sailed for Havana with a cargo of slaves. Her sailing qualities were so remarkably good that nothing along the coast in her shape of sailing vessels could overtake her, and so highly was she prized by her owners that every successful voyage she made she was newly coppered and rigged. (She had been rebuilt and most of her upper works were made of mahogany. Consequently her capture has caused more excitement on the coast than the capture of any other vessel for many years.

The Porpoise brings home five American distressed seamen, from the Cape de Verdes, left there by American whalers.

LATEST FROM TEXAS.

Our dates from Galveston are up to the 2nd inst. The report is confirmed published some weeks since of the descent of about five hundred Comanche Indians, headed by the noted chief Santa Anna, upon a rancho near Guerrero, called La Patria, which they completely destroyed, killing over sixty persons. It is stated that the Indians were afterwards attacked by the troops of Miller and Guerrero, but they defeated the troops, killing about forty, and taking one piece of artillery, which they threw into the Rio Salado. They then continued into the interior, killing and taking prisoners until they reached China, 150 miles from the Rio Grande, there destroying the Rancho Ramiras.—They were attacked by 600 troops, who defeated the Indians and took from them near 200 prisoners which they had taken. The loss on the side of the Indians is about 30, among whom is their chief Santa Anna. The Mexicans at our latest dates were still in pursuit of the red skins.

Accounts from Corpus Christi state further that Arista is in command of the northern frontier, and it is reported that Well had half way proclaimed against the Government.

Dorr of Rhode Island.—A late Providence paper says, Gen. Fessenden, from Maine, is in town, endeavoring to do something for the liberation of Mr. Dorr, upon a writ of Error, and Habeas Corpus. We learn that he yesterday made an application to have an interview with the imprisoned man, through the Mayor of the city, Mr. Dorr can only be liberated by a change of rulers. We learn that the application was denied. We do think that the imprisonment of Thos. W. Dorr in a Louisiana state prison is the greatest stain ever inflicted upon the citizens generally of this Republic. We cannot express the deep feeling that pervades our bosom whenever we see his name in print. It may be that we are wrong, but if so we are honest in it. We have no very high opinion of Mr. Dorr, but that a man should be imprisoned in this country of all others, for striving to extend the right of suffrage to native citizens, is too galling to think of. We would glory in seeing that state prison emptied of its prisoners, and used to light the path of the following midnight!

Gale at Jamaica.—The gale of the 5th of October was peculiarly severe at St. Ann's Bay, Jamaica. All the vessels in the harbor, fourteen in number, were driven ashore, and most of them totally lost. All the wharves were beaten down by the tremendous sea, and considerable other damage was occasioned by the storm.

To and from Texas.—The Clarksville (Texas) Standard states, that two gentlemen from Missouri had arrived there, for the purpose of selecting locations, who counted all the emigrant wagons as they passed, between Fayetteville, Ark., and Donkville, some coming and some returning from the Trinity country; that there were 225 wagons going to, and 75 returning from Texas—the latter complaining bitterly of the privations which they had undergone. The Van Buren (Ark.) Intelligencer, of the 10th instant, makes the number of emigrants much larger—estimating the wagons at 700 or 800, and the whole number of souls at 5,000.—Even now, says that paper, four wagons are passing the office, from Green county Illinois, with "POLK and DALLAS, Oregon and Texas," on their covers!

Destructive Fire in Boston.—Faneuil Hall in Danger.—On Tuesday morning a fire broke out in the extensive drug establishment of Mr. Edward Brinley, Nos. 2 and 4, south side of Faneuil Hall, Boston, and the entire stock of goods, amounting in value to from $50,000 to $60,000 destroyed. The fire broke out in the back part of the store—cause unknown—and the owner was only able to secure his books and papers.

Faneuil Hall, on the south side was much scorched and charred, as also several stores. Mr. Brinley was insured for $10,000—but his loss will probably be considerable more than this amount.

MARRIED.—In this City, on the 12th instant, by Elder B. Young, Mr. Wm. Pitt to Miss Cornelia Malvina Devine, all of Nauvoo.

There it is again: a splendid loaf of cake from the hands of a once lovely Devine being; but alas! she has (by the aid of a spiritual guide) walked into a Pitt, (not of despair,) but one of endless felicity, where, we hope, that

THE BRAVE BOY.

Two boys of my acquaintance were one day on their way from school, and as they were passing a corn-field in which there were some plum trees full of ripe fruit, Henry said to Thomas, "Let us jump over and get some plums. Nobody will see us, and we can scud along through the corn and come out on the other side."

Thomas said, "I cannot. It is wrong to do so. I would rather not have the plums than steal them, and I guess I will run along home."

"You are a coward," said Henry, "I always knew you were a coward, and if you don't want any plums you may go without them, but I shall have some very quick."

Just as Henry was climbing the fence, the owner of the field rose up from the other side of the wall, and Henry jumped back and ran off as fast as his legs would carry him.

Thomas had no reason to be afraid. So he stood still, and the owner of the field, who had heard the conversation, between the boys, told him he was very glad to see that he was not willing to be a thief; and then he asked Thomas to step over and help himself to as many plums as he wished! The boy was pleased with the invitation and was not slow in filling his pockets with the ripe fruit.

Which of these boys was brave, the one who called the other a coward, but ran away himself, or the one who said it was wicked to steal, and stood his ground?

EXPEDITION TO AFRICA.

The brig Chipola, chartered by the Maryland Colonization Society, left this port on Monday afternoon, with about seventy emigrants for Cape Palmas. Thirty-seven of them were liberated by Mr. Wilson, of Jefferson Co. Kentucky, who, accompanied by his wife, was present to witness their departure; twenty-seven were manumitted by the will of the late Miss Harriet B. Thompson, of Mathews county, Va.; two of them were freed by Rev. Henry B. Goodwin, of Charles Co. Md., who liberated a large portion of the emigrants who sailed in the Latrete last year. There were also several on board who had voluntarily offered themselves to the society as emigrants. Owing to the inclement weather, the usual religious ceremonies upon such occasions were omitted; yet it was altogether an interesting scene.

The Connecticut Historical Society has recently come into possession of the identical deal chest, formerly owned by Elder Brewster, the celebrated companion of Rev. Dr. Robinson and the rest of the Pilgrims who landed at Plymouth in 1620. The chest was brought over in the May Flower, and is identified not only by its original marks, but by other satisfactory testimony. It has always remained in possession of the lineal descendants of the Elder. It passed from him into the hands of his son William Brewster, thence into the possession of his grandson Joseph Brewster, and afterward into the possession of his great-grand daughter Ruth Brewster, who married William Sampson, and removed to W. Springfield in Massachusetts, where she died, a few years since, at a great age, in the family of Henry Day, from whom Dr. Robbins procured it. It is made of Norway Pine, and was probably procured in Holland.

Glass Bottle Factory.—There is now in operation at Pittsburgh a black Glass Bottle manufactory, owned by a Mr. C. Ihmsen, which supplies all the markets in the West and South with wine and porter bottles, demijohns, acid jars, flasks, &c. Orders for wine and porter bottles are frequently filled, it is stated, for Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and other markets Eastward. The demijohns are of 6, 5, 4, 2, 1 and 1-2 gallon capacity, and are covered with basket work of willow, at the factory, by girls belonging to the families of the blowers. The willow is brought from Germany in large bundles, which cost $1.25 each in the East.

Poultry over the Stonington Railroad.—42,951 lbs. from Western, 3,700 lbs. from Richmond, 20,463 lbs. from South Kingstown, 2,300 lbs. from North Kingstown, were brought up this morning. The whole goes to Boston this afternoon to supply our Massachusetts friends for Thanksgiving. The whole number of lbs. is 69,919. There will be about 5,000 lbs. over the same road for Boston on Monday.—Providence Transcript.

Wool-growing in North Carolina.—A gentleman much experienced in this business, who has traveled over the Western States, having had his attention drawn to the Western part of North Carolina, is about to transport his flock of sheep, purchased chiefly in Western Pennsylvania, to Asheville, North Carolina. This move, if successfully followed, will produce great results in that unproductive region.—Raleigh Register.

Safe mode of Blasting.—It is known to many individuals, though not to the public generally, that rocks may be blasted without ramming down pounded brick on the charge. Put a rye straw into the hole; if one be not long enough, use two, running the top of one into the other, tying paper around the joint. Then put in the charge of powder and prime the straw, and then fill up the hole with fine dry sand, without ramming. Nothing more is necessary preparatory to touching the match.—Boston Cultivator.

Remarkable destruction of Fish.—The New London News mentions a remarkable fact, which is asserted by fishermen who had just arrived, after an unsuccessful excursion. In returning along the South shore of Long Island, their attention was attracted to the beach, which was literally strewn with the bodies of dead fish, just washed up by the sea. Black fish, conners, lobsters, and crabs, and many other species which inhabit our shores at this season, lay promiscuously on the sand. On examining the well of the smacks, it was discovered that the fish they had taken were also dead. Another smack reports the same singular fact. It is conjectured that there has been a volcanic eruption at sea to cause this general destruction.

Important.—Treaty ratified.—By our latest news from the interior of Texas, we learn that the long talked of Treaty with the Comanches and ten other tribes of wild Indians has been ratified. The Vindicator, published at Washington, says:—

"The consummation of this treaty, if kept sacred by both parties, will do more to advance the true interests of the West, than a dozen companies of mounted men. Our prospects are indeed brightening, and if our people will only curb their martial spirit and turn their attention to the soil, our only true source of wealth, Texas must prosper. It is industry alone that makes us happy and contented; and this treaty is, in our opinion, as even that of annexation."

Mexican Steamers.—The steamships, says the New York Express, which came in here for repairs some months since, still remain snugly moored off the Navy Yard, and on Friday night, the 8th inst., a sloop of war of the same nation arrived and anchored near by the steamers. There are various rumors touching the detention of these vessels here, but one plausible one is the danger of being taken prisoners by some Texans, who they fear are on the watch for them, under some naval marauder.

The Commercial Advertiser says: The detention of the Mexican steamers has been solely on the part of their commanders and the Mexican consul, until they received a sum of money to defray the expenses of the extensive repair, both of the Guadalupe and Montezuma; and adds that the Santa Anna, which arrived on Saturday, from Vera Cruz, had brought the money for that purpose.

MAHOMEDANS IN TRINIDAD.

Among others who came to see us was a Mahomedan priest, named Emir Samba Makumba, with whom we had an interesting interview, and obtained from him a brief history of himself and his people now resident upon this Island, where they continue to worship after the manner of their fathers according to the precepts of Koran.

He is about sixty-six years old, his hair and beard, which he has allowed to grow long, are white. He wore the hab it of his order, a flowing white tunic.—Samba could speak several languages; he addressed us in Arabic, pronouncing the benediction of the Mahomedans on those they esteem as people of God. Afterwards he conversed in French, and our friend H. L. Jobity interpreted for us. His countenance was remarkably serene, and although he had been a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, yet his face was lighted with a smile.

He was by descent a chief and a priest among the Mandingoes in Africa, but in early life was taken captive in one of those intestine wars which are unhappily occasioned among the native tribes in Africa by the slave trade. He belonged to the tribe Fulaah Tauru, which engaged in a war with six other tribes in Africa to prevent them, as he said, from carrying on the slave trade.

The Mahomedans are forbidden to make slaves of those of their own faith, and when any of their people are concerned in this traffic, they believe their religion requires them to put a stop to it by force. It was for this purpose a war was commenced by the Fulaahs against these other tribes, and in this war Samba was taken prisoner and sold as a slave. He was brought to this Island at the age of twenty-one years, and was purchased from a slave ship by a French planter, who gave him the name of Simon Boissere. Possessing a superior mind, he was soon placed by his master as superintendent of his plantation. Laboring faithfully, and opportunities being afforded him, he soon earned a sufficient sum of money to purchase his freedom. Instigated by his example and advice, others of his countrymen also succeeded in securing their freedom. They then formed themselves into an association to maintain their religious profession, Samba acting as their priest. Their next effort was to purchase small tracts of land, upon which they erected habitations, and were thus enabled by the produce of their gardens, &c. to support themselves respectably. Having secured comfortable homes they turned their attention to their suffering brethren in captivity. Liberal subscriptions were made among them for this benevolent object, and when a slave ship arrived at the colony, Samba and his friends were the first on board to inquire for Mandingoes, and if there were any among the captives they ransomed them immediately. Up to the time of the declaration of freedom they had released from bondage upwards of five hundred in Trinidad alone. Their operations were also extended to other islands. There are several hundred of them at present in this Island, and although they continue their form of faith and worship, they are noticed for their habits of temperance and exemplary deportment. In this respect they have been as lights to their professing Christian neighbors.

The old man said he mourned over the condition of the Christian world; he regretted that their youth were in danger of being drawn away by the evil practices of the Christians. He thought it was safe to judge people by their actions, and when he saw the Christians holding those of their own faith in slavery, engaging in wars with members of their own church, and addicted to habits of intemperance, all of which the Koran forbids, he thought it was sufficient evidence that the religion of Mahomet was superior to the religion of Anna Bissa, (Jesus Christ.)

We told him we understood the religion of Jesus as forbidding all these practices, but the professors of the religion of Christ did not live up to his precepts.—He inquired "have you any slaves in your country?" to which we replied nearly three million. At this information he gave a look of astonishment and indignation.

We asked him if he believed the great God who had made all things had placed a witness of himself in the hearts of all men, to teach them what is right and what is wrong; to which he replied, "Yes, certainly; God has placed his Spirit in man to show him good and evil, and man ought to obey it, for by so doing he would please his Maker, and be accepted of him." He further remarked, "It is by listening to evil suggestions that he becomes very wicked." He thought the Christians degraded themselves by selling the Bible, which they consider a standard of religious faith. "You ought not to sell your religion," meaning the Bible, or take pay for expounding it, meaning for preaching. We told him we did not do it; we came out of love and good will to see the people of these islands, that we might encourage them to love and good works. "Then," said he, "you are men of God, and I hope the Lord will bless your labors, and make you useful in spreading his truth in the world."

It was a pleasure to be with this benighted individual, who may be looked upon as one of the brightest philanthropists of the age. When we consider the humble sphere in which he has moved, and the limited means at his command for accomplishing a benevolent scheme which had for its object the emancipation of all his countrymen in captivity, (the Mandingo slaves,) and contemplate the success which has attended the labors of Samba and his coadjutors, this brief account of him will be esteemed worthy of record.—Narrative of a visit to the West Indies.

The Pyramids.—Mr. Gliddon, in his lectures on Egypt, says the three Pyramids of Gheizeh alone represent an amount as follows:

1st,	Tons	6,848,000
2d,	"	5,309,000
3d,	"	702,400
		12,859,400

Mr. Gliddon introduced a series of diverting and curious statistical comments, remarking that the Great Pyramid, converted into brick, would build up the whole city of Philadelphia—that the granite contained in it would construct all the churches and public buildings of the same noble city of the Keystone State—and that the 12,859,400 tons of these three Pyramids, would suffice to build every public dwelling, every church, every public edifice, at this day, comprised in the statistics of the entire state of Pennsylvania.

The New Orleans Crescent City records another steamboat accident. On the 13th inst., at 3 o'clock A. M., as the towboat Tiger was taking the ship Marcia Cieves, bound for Liverpool, from this port, over the S. W. bar, she burst all her boilers, six in number, destroying everything over the bows. Three men were killed instantaneously, and three others were badly wounded by the shock. All the hands on board were fortunately stationed aft at the time, about to haul in the spring cable, otherwise, the number of sufferers would have been much greater. The following, as near as we can learn, are the names of the killed:

Daniel B. Clark, pilot, of this city; David Brown, 1st engineer; Abram Brown, second engineer; the remains of the two latter were found and have been interred on Hitchcock Island near the S. W. pass.

The McMinnville (Tenn.) Gazette announces the death of JOHN A. MURREL, the notorious land pirate. He died at Pikeville, in Bledsoe county, on the 1st inst., confessing before his death, that he had been guilty of almost every crime save murder.

FIRST EMIGRATION OF FOREIGNERS TO NEW ENGLAND.

New England was settled by puritans, and from its earliest hour, it has retained much of the spirit, and sturdily maintained the leading principles of its founders. The puritans, it will be recognized by the student of history, were the same men to whom England owed her first emancipation from the tyranny of the Stuart family—the same men whose political principles, sternly asserted, led to the revolution of 1688, and thus gave to our transatlantic progenitors whatever civil freedom they now enjoy—the same men whose descendants took the lead in the American revolution of 1776, and thus set an example, whose influence after overturning many ancient dynasties and changing the whole political aspect of Europe, is still felt in the more silent but certain progress of liberal principles, and the wider diffusion of equal rights.

In the year 1610, a congregation of these people, expelled by royal and ecclesiastical tyranny from their native country, England, had removed to Leyden, where they were permitted to establish themselves in peace under the ministry of their pastor, John Robinson. This excellent person may be justly regarded as the founder of the sect of Independents, or as it is customary to call them in New England, Congregationalists. The most important feature in their ecclesiastical system is the independence of each church or congregation, of all bishops, synods, or councils, and its direct dependence on the head of the Christian church himself. The preaching of such a doctrine could not but offend the government of England. It drew upon the devoted heads of its disciples the most determined persecution from Elizabeth and James, and exasperated the civil war, which, terminating in the dethronement of Charles I., finally gave the ascendancy to the puritans.

It was to avoid the persecution of James that the English exiles composing Mr. Robinson's congregation, remained for ten years at Leyden. But, at the end of that period, the same pious views which had originally prompted their departure from England, incited them to undertake a more distant migration. The manners of the Dutch, and especially their neglect of a reverential observance of Sunday made them apprehensive that the lapse of a single generation would obliterate every trace of the puritan character among their descendants. It was determined, therefore, to seek a new home in some foreign dependency of England. They at first cast their eyes upon Guinea, but which Raleigh had given a glowing description; but subsequently decided to seek an establishment in Virginia. Agents were despatched to England to obtain permission from the king, James, although desirous to promote the increase of the colony which had been planted under his auspices, was unwilling to sanction their religious opinions by taking them under his protection. The utmost he would promise was, to connive at their practices and refrain from molesting them. After accepting this precarious security, the puritans, the Plymouth Company a grant of a tract of land, lying, as was supposed, within the limits of its patent, a partnership or joint stock company was formed, on disadvantageous terms, with certain merchants in London, in order to raise the funds necessary to defray the expenses of emigration and settlement. Two vessels were obtained; the Speedwell of sixty and the Mayflower of one hundred and eighty tons burthen; in which a hundred and twenty of their number were appointed to embark from an English port for America. These were to act as the pioneers of the whole congregation. They were destined to figure in the world's history as the celebrated Pilgrims of New England.

They sought retirement—isolation—an opportunity of founding a small community of puritans, where, apart from all the world, their peculiar doctrines could be transmitted from father to son, without attracting the notice of king or bishop. But they had a higher destiny. They were, in fact, to become the most efficient among the founders of a great empire, in which their own principles should flourish for ages after, and a moral system of religious freedom should be learned and taught by their descendants.

All things being prepared for the departure of this detachment of the congregation from Delt haven, where they took leave of their friends, for the English port of embarkation, Robinson and his people devoted their last meeting in Europe to an act of solemn and social worship, intended to implore a blessing from heaven upon the enterprise in which they were about to engage.

The pilgrims sailed from Delt haven on the 22d of July, 1620, for Southampton, whence, after remaining a fortnight, they sailed for America; but they were compelled by the bad condition of the Speedwell and the treachery of its captain, to put back twice before their final departure. The Speedwell was abandoned; a portion of the company who were dismayed at the evident dangers of the voyage, were dismissed, reducing their number to one hundred and one, including women and children. This company were all crowded into the Mayflower, which set sail from Plymouth on the 6th of September, 1620, bearing the founders of New England across the Atlantic. Never did so frail a bark carry so precious a burden.

The voyage was long and boisterous, and the captain of their vessel, through ignorance or treachery, instead of landing them at Hudson's river, whither they were bound, carried them to the north as far as Cape Cod, where they arrived on the 11th of November. This district was not included in the patent which they had obtained in England; and to supply the want of a more formal title, they composed and signed a written constitution of government, recognising the authority of the English crown, and expressing their own combination into a body politic (November 11th), and their determination to enact all just and necessary laws, and to honor them by due obedience. They then proceeded to elect John Carver for their governor, to serve for one year.

The selection of a spot for their settlement was attended with considerable difficulty and delay. On the 11th of November, some men were sent on shore to obtain wood and make discoveries; but they returned at night, without having met with any person or habitation. On the 15th, Captain Miles Standish, the military leader of the colony, landed for the purpose of exploration with sixteen armed men, observed and followed some Indians without overtaking them; but coming upon a deserted village, they found and examined some graves, but left the arms and implements, which they found in them, undisturbed, because they would not be guilty of violating the repositories of the dead. But when they found a cellar, carefully lined with bark and covered with a heap of sand, in which four bushels of seed corn were well secured, after reasoning on the morality of the action, they took as much of the corn as they could carry, intending, when they should find the owners, to repay them to their satisfaction. This intention was subsequently fulfilled, and to the providential discovery of this seed corn, they attributed the ultimate preservation of the colony. During the absence of this exploring party, the wife of William Wylite, gave birth to a son, who, from the circumstance of his birth, was named Peregrine. He was the first Anglo-American born in New-England.

On the 6th of December, Carver, Bradford, Winslow, and Standish, with some sailors, embarked in a shallop and sailed round the bay in search of a place for settlement. On landing they were saluted with a flight of Indian arrows; but a discharge of musketry speedily dispersed the assailants. A storm came on. The shallop lost its rudder, and was nearly shipwrecked. Reaching an island on the 9th, they reposed themselves and kept the Christian Sabbath with the usual solemnities. The next day a harbor was found, which they deemed commodious, and the surrounding country was pleasant and well watered. They returned with the agreeable intelligence to their friends, and the ship was brought into this harbor on the 15th. The 18th and 19th were passed in exploring the land; and on the 20th, after imploring the divine guidance and protection, the people landed and commenced the settlement. This day is still celebrated by the descendants of the pilgrims as the anniversary of New England's birth.

They gave the town the name of Plymouth, in remembrance of the hospitalities they had received at the last port in England from which they had sailed. Their first operations consisted in measuring out the land to the different families, laying a platform for their ordnance and erecting habitations. It was not till the 31st of December, that they were able to celebrate the Sabbath, with its appropriate exercises, in a house on shore.

The hardships undergone by the people in exploring the bay and effecting a landing, sowed the seeds of fatal disease; their provisions were scanty; the winter was severe; and the Indians, remembering the kidnapping exploits of Hunt and others, were hostile. More than half the colonists including John Carver, their governor, died before spring. Those who retained their strength were hardly sufficient to minister to the urgent wants of the sick and dying. In this employment, no one distinguished himself more than Carver, the governor. He was a man of fortune, who had spent all in the service of the colony, and readily sacrificed his life in discharging the humblest offices of kindness to the sick. He was succeeded by William Bradford, who was re-elected for many successive years, notwithstanding his remonstrance, that if this office were an honor, it should be shared by his fellow citizens, and if it were a burden, the weight of it should not always be imposed on him.

It appears that previous to the arrival of the pilgrims in New England, a sweeping pestilence had carried off whole tribes of natives in the region where they had now settled. The traces of former habitation were apparent; but no Indians were found residing in their immediate vicinity. The spring, which restored health to the colonists brought them also an agreeable surprise, in the visit of some Indians whose disposition was friendly. The visit of Samoset, whose previous intercourse with the English fishermen enabled him to salute them with 'Welcome, welcome, Englishmen!' was followed by that of Massachusett, the principal sachem of the country, with whom the celebrated treaty was concluded, which was inviolably observed, for more than fifty years, and contributed, during that period, more than any other circumstance, to secure New England from the horrors of Indian warfare.

Robinson, although originally a follower of Brown, afterwards expressly disclaimed the name of Brownist for himself and his people.

PROSPECTIVE GRANDEUR OF AMERICA.

The future population, strength, and resources of this country have been subjects of speculation with statisticians and poets. Calculation and rhapsody have been wanting to determine or foreshadow its destiny. But neither the one nor the other, as far as we have seen, has adequately compassed the prospective grandeur of America. The calculations have fallen short of what might be anticipated; and the prophetic imaginings have been too vague to convey any definite impressions of absolute results. This, however, is a question which statistics can exemplify, and in such a manner as to render a prospective fact more brilliant and marvellous than the widest range which imagination has taken in regard to it. We shall endeavor to explain our views on this subject, confining ourselves to rigid calculations and fair deductions.

In the increase of population in this country, two things are remarkable, its rapidity, and its uniformity. Nearly a century ago, Franklin stated that population nearly doubled itself once within every twenty-five years. The process of reduplication has been going on ever since; and according to the last census, it appears that it is now doubled in about every twenty-two years. This is an important fact, and renders the calculation of the population for future exact periods a thing of clear certainty.

Where a population has doubled itself so rapidly for such a length of time, it is evidence of the working of a principle. It ceases to be accidental, and hence uncertain in its nature. The population of France has doubled itself within a hundred and twenty years, and that of England in sixty. Either period is so long in itself, and the anterior periods required for the reduplication of the population of each of those countries so uncertain, that a satisfactory statement of their future increase of population may hardly be afforded. But, for the reasons we have stated, no such impediments to reasonable calculation on the subject applies to this country.

The results of continuing the calculation of the increase of population in this country, in geometrical ratio, are so vast, and of so distant a period, that it would seem safe and prudent not to venture stating them exactly. It would appear that Chancellor Kent must have been under the influence of this sober feeling when he spoke of their being three hundred millions of people in it in the course of ages. So far from many ages being required for this, the child is now born in this country who will see in it a population of more than three hundred millions. It may be argued that population here ceases to double itself at its present rate, when it reaches a high point—suppose one hundred millions. But this consideration is of no avail. For if we look at the means of the increment of population production, we shall find that it goes beyond numbers, the Malthusian theory to the contrary notwithstanding. Two things establish the argumentation of population, a liberal form of government and national integrity being always secured. Those things are improving agriculture and mechanics. Now it is ascertained that agriculture has just begun to improve. It is a fact not less memorable than disgraceful, that agriculture has remained stationary from the age of Augustus Caesar almost to our own immediate time. Eighteen hundred years had not mended its rules or practice. Any one who will read Virgil's Georgics, and compare it with ordinary farming practice, will satisfy himself of this. Though gunpowder and inquisitorial tortures, heraldry and alchemy, cruelties and follies, occupied men's minds; though printing had been long discovered, and society had taken a civilized character, yet strange to say, the fundamental art, the great necessity, the support of life, the production of food, was left rude as antiquity had known it. Had agriculture been as glorious as war, it would long since have fructified the four continents. But this great art is now rendered susceptible of indefinite improvement. Chemistry, the creation of a few years, analyzes soils and their productions—their distinct characters and mutual adaptabilities. With a beauty and certainty that exhaust admiration, it places agriculture beyond the evils of ignorance and waste, and displays a sublime economy in its operations. Machinery, with ingenious forms, and thundering prowess, comes to supersede or fortify human hands. These united agencies will give to the science and practice of agriculture a magnificent scope and effect, a perennial power of life sustenance, that surpass alike the bounds of sober consideration or rhapsodical fervor. The genius of mechanics, which has been started into new proportions by the liberal touch of the age, whose stature literally reaches to the clouds, has independently, the second great effect on national destiny. Like the whirling spheres, it multiplies forms infinite in numbers and beauties. It begins with necessity and ends with luxury, it embraces every ministration to bodily comfort, every artifice to extend spiritual cultivation. These two great forces, which have just had their new birth, are in the hands of posterity for development.

Their influence will be to quicken the growth of nations—not to retard them; at this or that point of numerical strength. We cannot then admit that there is going to be any retardation in the increase of population up to that period when it surpasses the supply of food—a period not necessary for us to anticipate; and whose difficulties it will be competent for our enlightened successors in the world's business to manage. The great science of the wealth of nations, as discovered by Adam Smith, being developed abroad, will react on the prosperity of this country, accelerating its ratio of production, and consequently of increase of population. Immigration, which up to this time has merited consideration in these calculations, for the future need not be minded, the doubling process being so vast in its results as to diminish the force of such influence.

If then, it be allowed that population will go on to double itself for many years, as we have endeavored to show, it will produce much greater results than are anticipated. This will appear evident from the following statement:

The population in the United States was, in 1840, 17,000,000; in 1862 it will be 33,000,000; in 1884, 72,000,000; in 1906, 144,000,000; in 1928, 308,000,000; in 1950, 616,000,000; in 1975, 1,200,000,000.

It is not necessary to extend this calculation. We have not yet ascertained the limits of this country; we do not know its resources in all the arts which contribute to the support of life. But with such a population, all national and municipal efforts and achievements would be of corresponding extent. Cities, whose grandeur and glory defy parallel, will be spread over it. Design, aided by intellect and wealth, fortified by every conceivable means and working for the highest ends of communities, will take the place of accident, poverty and ignorance, which now rule. Magnificence and economy of plan, rapidity of creation, immensity of detail and aggregated splendor of multimodal combination, will mark public or municipal works. Millions of men, with hearts bent on some good and great purpose, can at once be concentrated. Aided by incalculable riches, enthusiastic efforts, and the assurance of experience, they may set our precedents at defiance in the same way we set at defiance those of the first settlers. The wonderful silver lamp of the necromancer is but an allegory of the power of riches commanding great agents. The work of a century now can in the future be thrown into a few years. Great capital and their tributaries can then be reared by force, rapidly and certainly. A greater than ancient Rome, which took seven hundred years to build, can, ay, will be built in seven years. All sense and work being devoted to peace, intercourse, and production, society will be like the swelling ocean tide, casting up pearls on the shore. Its riches and beauties will surpass our circle of present inferences. We must take the principle of extension, and fearless of its results, we shall solve this problem.

The dogma of distance as it affects the mind, is already annihilated in the magnetic telegraph. An agent which circles the world several times each second, is now to be made the common carrier of thought. It neither sweats nor pants, breaks down, nor explodes, but like an ethereal spirit, it bears far and wide its immortal message. An empire of twelve hundred millions will be bound in such a chain of love and light.

EXECUTION OF A POOR GERMAN BOY FOR MURDER.

Mrs. Child, in her 'Letters from New York,' gives an account of a poor German emigrant who was executed, in that city and afterwards learned to be innocent. The case of the poor German is indeed very touching, and it is thus related by Mrs. C.:

A few years ago a poor German came to New York, and took lodgings, where he was allowed to do his own cooking in the same room with the family. The husband and wife lived in a perpetual quarrel. One day the German came into the kitchen with a clasp-knife and a pan of potatoes, and began them for his dinner. The quarrelsome couple were in a more violent altercation than usual, but he sat with his back toward them, and being ignorant of their language, felt in no danger of being involved in their disputes. But the woman, with a sudden and unexpected movement snatched the knife from his hand and plunged it into her husband's heart. She had sufficient presence of mind to rush into the street, and scream murder.

The poor foreigner in the meanwhile, seeing the wounded man reel, sprang forward to catch him in his arms, and drew out the knife. People from the street crowded in, and found him with the dying man in his arms, the knife in his hand, and the blood upon his clothes. The wicked woman swore in the most positive terms that he had been quarrelling with her husband, and had stabbed him with a knife he always carried. The unfortunate German knew too little of English to understand her accusation, or to tell his own story. He was dragged off to prison, and the true state of the case was made known through an interpreter; but it was not believed. Circumstantial evidence was exceedingly strong against the accused, and the real criminal swore that she saw him commit the murder.

He was executed notwithstanding the most persevering efforts of his lawyer, John Anthon, Esq., whose convictions of the man's innocence were so plainly strong, that, from that day to this, he has refused to have any thing to do with a capital case. Some years after this tragic event, the woman died and on her death bed, confessed her agency in the diabolical transaction; but her poor victim could receive no benefit from her repentance. Society had wantonly thrown away its power to atone for the grievous wrong.

Mrs. Child also gives the following affecting account of the execution of an innocent man in Missouri:

Tragic fate of Burton, in Missouri.

A young lady, belonging to a genteel and very proud family in Missouri, was beloved by a young man named Burton; but unfortunately her affections were fixed upon another, less worthy. He left her with a transient reputation. She was by nature energetic, and high spirited; her family were proud, and she lived in the midst of a society which considered revenge a virtue, and named it honor. Mistaken by this false popular sentiment, and her own excited feelings, she resolved to repay her lover's treachery with death. But she kept her secret so well that no one suspected her purpose, though she purchased pistols, and practised with them daily.

Mr. Burton gave evidence of his strong attachment by renewing his attentions when the world looked most coldly upon her. His generous kindness won her bleeding heart, but the softening influence of love did not lead her to forego the dreadful purpose she had formed. She watched for a favorable opportunity, and shot her betrayer when no one was near to witness the horrible deed.

Some little incident excited the suspicion of Burton, and he induced her to confess to him the whole transaction. It was obvious enough that suspicion would naturally fasten upon him, the well known lover of her who had been so deeply injured. He was arrested, but succeeded in persuading her that he was in no danger. Circumstantial evidence was fearfully against him, and he soon saw that his chance was doubtful; but with affectionate magnanimity he concealed this from her. He was convicted and condemned.

A short time before the execution he endeavored to cut his throat; but his life was saved for the cruel purpose of taking it away according to the cold blooded barbarism of the law. Pale and wounded he was hoisted to the gallows, before the gaze of a Christian community. The guilty cause of all this was almost frantic when she found that he had thus sacrificed himself to save her. She immediately published the whole history of her wrongs and her revenge. Her keen sense of wounded honor was in accordance with public sentiment; her wrongs excited indignation and compassion, and the knowledge that an innocent, magnanimous man had been so brutally treated, excited a general revulsion of popular feeling. No one wished for another victim, and she was left unpunished, save by the dreadful records of her memory.

A HEBREW GENTLEMAN.

The following is a beautiful account of a beautiful character. It is written by Col. Yeadon of Charleston, for the Charleston Courier.

Mr. Abram Levy is an honor to his tribe, and one of the worthiest and most esteemed citizens of Richmond. He emigrated from Amsterdam and arrived at Boston, in 1817, and some time after settled in Richmond, bringing with him a wife and eight children, his whole fortune consisting of twenty-three dollars worth of merchandise in a soap box. He is now 75 years of age, and is the ancestor of 8 children, 66 grand children, and 16 great-grand children, and 16 of his descendants are in Texas. By honest industry he has amassed a handsome independence, and makes a noble use of it. His whole life has been a series of noble charities, and his aims, like those of Cornelius, will certainly go up as a memorial to Heaven. He is wont to say that he made his money in Richmond, and Richmond is entitled to and shall always have its liberal expenditures. A short time since, although an Israelite, firm in the faith of his fathers, he bought up a large quantity of Sunday School Books at Auction, and distributed them among the Sunday Schools of Christian brethren, and his private benevolences are innumerable, as are also his ever ready contributions to works and enterprises of public benefit. In one instance, I learn, he bought at auction, for several thousand dollars, the residence of a merchant who had failed; and in remembrance and requital of some early kindness, said to the worthy gentleman, 'Don't move; remain in your house with your good family and repay me, without interest, when you are able.' It is really grateful to the American heart, to hear him descend on the blessings he enjoys in this land of liberty and equal rights, as contrasted with the oppression and hardships endured by the less favored inhabitants of European countries—it is enough to make one blush for those Americans, who speak of themselves as oppressed beyond endurance, and reduced to the condition of Russian serfs or Turkish slaves. He indulges occasionally in humor, &c. It was my good fortune to dine with him en famille, and he literally killed the fatted calf for me, giving me a sumptuous repast, and his family of the second and third generations, vying with him in kindness and attention, and one of his grand-daughters, a fit representative of Ivanhoe's Rebecca, regaling me with rich vocal and instrumental music. After our repast, I was much gratified with hearing him and his family pour out, in chant and recitation, their grace after meat, or return of thanks, in the Hebrew tongue.

The chant was as follows:

'There is none like our God! There is none like our Lord! There is none like our King! There is none like our Savior! Who is like our God? Who is like our Lord? Who is like our King? Who is like our Savior? We will give thanks to our God, We will give thanks to our Lord, We will give thanks to our King, We will give thanks to our Savior. Blessed be our God! Blessed be our Lord! Blessed be our King, Blessed be our Savior! Thou art our God! Thou art our Lord! Thou art our King! Thou art our Savior! Thou wilt save us! Thou wilt arise and have mercy on Zion! For the time to favor her, yea, the appointed time, approaches.'

From the beautiful and touching recitations, I gleaned the following: 'Thou openest thine hand and satisfiest the desire of every living thing! Blessed art thou O Lord! who givest food unto all, through thy abundant mercy.'

After dinner, the benevolent old gentleman took me to his chamber, which was enriched with a fine collection of paintings, rare old medals and coins, and ancient books—and among his paintings, with characteristic liberality, was to be found 'The Virgin and the holy Child.' Among the antiquities he showed me, were a medal in honor of Cicero, and a silver Shovel, 3300 years old; with the Hebrew inscription:—'The Holy of Holies—Jerusalem our Israel.' I took leave of the kind hearted old man and his interesting family, with the prayer, 'May the blessing of the God of Israel rest on you and your household,' and satisfied that I had met with an Israelite indeed, in whom there was no guile, and in whose bosom Christian charity burned with a living flame.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Byrdstown, N. J., Nov. 10th, 1844.

Dear Brother W. W. Phelps: I take this method of addressing you through the columns of the Prophet, as it will save postage and is not so liable to be misinterpreted; hoping that it will receive due and immediate attention.

Dear Brother:—Sitting as I am in this eastern land, and far from the great emporium of the west, (Nauvoo) and I might say my home, if there is any place on earth that I might with propriety call so. But, indeed, I can say with Abraham, I have no home this side the vale, but a pilgrim and sojourner here on earth; (not exactly in tents, as the good old Patriarch with flocks and herds) a stranger without purse or scrip among "strangers" to build up the kingdom of God, (a most unpopular theme) and bear some humble part of this last ministry to the nations of the earth?

Can you tell, dear brother, why it is, the saints of God in all ages, and especially in the last times, can have no more rest? persecuted as they are from city to city, and from place to place. I ask myself the question, is anything criminal in Mormonism—in the divine pretensions of the prophet? This cannot be, others have professed the same; there has been hundreds of prophets, true ones too, and men have declared that if they had lived in their day, they would not have killed them; and yet, what have they not done? ("for if th y will do the things in the green tree, what will they do in the dry?") But, they say, none of these signs have followed, and proven him a prophet, that followed and proved them of old. What say ye, can you answer this?

Tell us the crime, the time and place, when and where; was it finding the Nephite record; revealing to the world the origin of a lost and scattered people, a knowledge of which had been hid for ages in midnight darkness; lost from the deepest recess of mode n antiquarians. Was it for revealing to the world the knowledge of whose lands, and by whom the foundation of these mighty cities had been laid, and since discovered by Stephen and Catherine; this none will doubt, yet a knowledge of the fact of these cities being built by Ishmael hands, hundreds of years ago, written in the Book of Mormon would be a humbug?

These discoveries, made by these men, which are truly great and confirmatory of the truth of the Book of Mormon, and the inspiration of the prophet Joseph, was made since this book was found and published to the world in 1830; then the prophecy was made that the Indians were a remnant of the house of Israel, "had wandered through the wilderness, and came over the sea," inhabited North and South America, built large cities, and were a warlike people; that many had fallen in battle and cities had been destroyed, a remnant remained as the last vestige, to tell the sad tale and history of their fallen race. And who has proved this prophecy true? (Stephen and Catherine!)

You will bear in mind, also, that Joseph was but a youth at this time, without any possible means of knowing, as men naturally know of these things—a mere plough boy at the age of 17, 21 and 22; he never had by the aid of "government friends" or wealthy patrons, the means to climb the Alpine mountains of the east—to traverse the holy land, and in Central America, stand and gaze upon the richly wrought pyramids, and with wonder and amazement exclaim, whose hands have laid these cities and reared these mighty monuments? Yet God had given him this knowledge; read the Book of Mormon and it will tell you, mark, kind reader, that this book was published in 1830, and the discoveries and facts proved by Stephens and Catherine in 1837, proving to a demonstration on the inspiration of the prophet, and the divinity of the book.

But it is said in Mormonism there is a charm a mystery that the world cannot explain; I admit it; it has a charm more inviting than all the magicians and sooth sayers of Egypt, and a mystery that sectarians cannot unravel. Why? Because they have not the spirit of Christ which is the spirit of prophecy. Mormonism has inferior, but no superior; it acknowledges no twin-sister but heaven; no superior but God; no king but Jesus; with unparalleled rapidity it has rolled on, "out-vied the muttering crowd," and accumulated its thousands, who are now rejoicing in the fulfilment of the gospel revealed and brought to light by the prophet Joseph.

If it should be asked, then, is Mormonism true? a thousand intelligent voices reverberate yes! yes! yes! Again, who has gathered their thousands? built a city? two temples? and embodied a code of morals garbed with immortality, that has made its way to the imperial thrones of the earth, embosomed itself in the golden rays and unbounded glories of heaven, crowned with never fading laurels, (is it not Joseph?) Men of sound minds (not Millerites nor sects) of all ranks, from all societies, of all the intelligence of the earth; combined in one word, the cream and salt of the same? and virtue of heaven;—can this be, and Joseph Smith a false prophet?—again is heard from a thousand voices, yes! no!

Dear brother if the thousand and one testimonies, miracles, records, antiquities, facts, bible truths, knowledge, revelation, fulfilment of prophecy, God, men and angels do not prove anything but a fallen prophet, and Mormonism so far beneath the notice of the world be great and wise men of this age, I wish you would solve the mystery, for to me it is a mystery indeed.

And now, dear brother, I will come to the point, having done with my preliminaries. As many faint and incorrect descriptions have been given of Nauvoo and the temple, by travellers, passers-by, and others, until I have thought the temple built upon moonshine, and the city a barbarian—uly, formal with head and horns, and stuck into the northern corner of the universe, where none but Indians, Hottentots, Arabs, Turks, Willems and Mormons dwell; and if you can find time to reply, I wish you would give me an ungarished statement of facts respecting Nauvoo; its probable number of inhabitants, and finally, a graphic description of a whole place; give us the number of distilleries, liquor vendors, and what gross immoralities have corrupted Nauvoo, cured the city, the temple, the Twelve, &c., more the daughters of Zion with scabby heads, and numbered the thousands of saints (that have gathered there to hear the word of the Lord, and be taught in his way) with goats, and cursed them above all barked cattle. An answer to these unaccountable problems, will, no doubt be eagerly grasped after, and be very interesting to many in the east, as we have many braying animals which have become quite obnoxious to the quiet rest of the innocent, and bray to the discomfort of many, not on account of the soundness of their doctrine, but on account of blasphemy, the Twelve the temple, the church at Nauvoo, and the great body of saints, their moral men and women, the admirable lies they tell, make people nervous sometimes when they do not know how things are; men who were once men of apparent intelligence, make these statements. The place must have become materially changed in its morals since last spring, when I was there, a short time indeed for such a mighty change.

I did not intend to argue the question, what is the difference between Millerism and Mormonism now Millerism is dead. Please to answer how long the temple is to the east and top of steeples, (if any at all,) and how long, how many moons, suns, ears and heads, and what do they all represent, of what materials and workmanship, how antique and of what order the pillars and structure? Is it a pattern of church and priesthood? Show us the order, the font with the length, the breadth, and the height thereof; the unity of the saints; the proper age of my mother, and her birth-place, as that of my father and his age at the time of his death, and the number of the family, (which you can obtain from the family records in my mother's possession, embodied in one, in as concise a manner as possible. This will correct many errors, and confer a favor on your old and tried friend I must say. I wish I could think more of Nauvoo than I do, yet it is not Nauvoo for when I reflect that there lie the silver locks of an aged and martyred father, martyred by a Missouri persecution, in the grave, numbered with the dead; and four brothers, two of whom in my vision appear with mangled bodies, and garments red with crimson gore. Oh! the fatal and barbarous murder! Their blood is still unavenged, and the cruel murderers are lounging about seeking for more; what have others to expect? Yet Nauvoo contains almost all that is near to me. My poor old mother, almost worn out with years and trouble, and three sisters that remain, with myself, are all of the family, who were the founders of Mormonism and the church of Christ in these last days, through great persecution and trouble, having borne the heat of the day; and how long the rest may be spared, God only knows.

Brother Phelps, will you call and see my mother, and give her a word of consolation from me. I hope she will live till I can get to see her. She may live to see all her sons laid in the grave. Remember me also to my sisters Sophronia, C. Thelma, Lucy and their husbands, and the martyrs' widows—God bless them all for ever is my prayer. I wish also to be remembered to all the saints in Nauvoo, give them my prayer, that God may sustain them in all their trials, for truly they are great, and tell them to think of my brother in affliction, and my sick family, which has kept me from their society in this time of peril; and if the Lord does not interpose, they must long be numbered with the dead. Oh! that God would have mercy upon me and my sick family!

Will you pray for us, dear brethren at Nauvoo? Remember me to your family. Mrs. Smith sends her love to your wife, and wishes to be remembered to all her friends in at country, as it will be a miracle if she ever sees them again. Write to me in edictly.

With sentiments of respect and esteem I subscribe myself, your friend and brother in the gospel of Christ.

WM. SMITH.

THE ANSWER.

Remembered Brother William Smith: Up to the reception of your excellent letter to me, (dated at Byrdstown, N. J., Nov. 10, 1844 which you had the goodness to communicate through the columns of the "Prophet") since we have been members together in the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, I think it may be said, we have been in faith, one love, and one in friendship, and like the of one soul key, we have grown brighter and brighter, as we have performed the great service of opening and shutting the "book" on religious understandings. As Jeremiah said, say I: "The heritage of the Lord is like a lion in the forest; even, the heritage of the Lord is like a speckled bird." Every body is afraid, and every body is peering at us. A great time to be a member of salvation, and so I will not let a word go for questions.

You ask, why is it that the saints of the last times, have no rest? and I answer, because the world loves darkness rather than light, and their deeds are evil. (Popularly known and ever since the report was current, that upon his belly through the loss of his eyes, has been, and will be, the best kind of religion in use. Talk about holiness, morality, temperance, humanity, brotherly kindness and charity among the refined polite nations of the world: why ever since Cain built a city for the ungodly to revel in, for the polygamy of a Lamech; for the groving of a Jabal; for the music saloon of a Jubal; and for the brass and iron foundry, and bogus machine of a Tubal Cain, the majority of mankind, have made money their faith; popularity their works, and per se their sincerest devotion of moral greatness.

They that live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution, says Paul; and so it is—and it always comes first from him that professes godliness; Cain was a seceder and could not admit revelation and hear God say well, Abel I have accepted thine offering; and so he killed his brother because the devil rily whispered in his ear:—it is blasphemous to talk with God.

Now the next generation could discover the wickedness of Cain, and the holiness of Abel, but the same evil spirit whispered that was in a day when revelation was necessary, but there is no need of it now, and it is done away.

We have followed the rules and regulations of those good men, and O! if we had lived in their days, they should not have killed! but a for this fellow he is "unpopular;" he blasphemes our God; he ought to die, but we being compassionate and charitable, and feeling a warm desire for the great cause of religion will advise him to quit his folly, or delusion; and if he don't, we will punish him a little by stripes, sword, dangers, or banishment; and then if he does not stop, we will stop him!

O Lord God Almighty, when the prison doors of Tophet, hell, and the horrible pit are unlocked; and the entrance into outer darkness opened, to bring the damned before the bar of the Judge of all the earth for the final judgment, I think some few Christians in company with their father Cain and consins of "popular" priesthood, from that day down to the judgment trumpet, will "grin horribly a ghastly smile"—ye, we killed the prophets and executed the saints, because they were not "popular." Then your question will be answered.

As to the "crime, time, and place, &c., of finding the Nephite record," its revelation is the very thing that produces an earthquake to this generation. It explains the bible; it opens the vision of the prophets; it unravels the mystery who first settled this country, and shows the old path wherein if a man walk he shall live. It copies with the boasted knowledge of the world; it glitters through the combined fog of ages; shows that God who eat a calf with Abraham, will eat and drink again on the earth with his saints, when the wolf and the lamb, and the lion and the ox, will be as friendly as the saints and seraph, in the full fruition of bliss; it cuts the Gordian knot of priesthood, and reveals the priesthood of the Son of God, which is "without beginning of years or end of years;" whereby it shows the prophets were ordained in eternity, when the "morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy;" and it speaks from the dead, whereby the living can hear from their friends, who have fought the good fight of faith, and passed from life unto death, and from death unto life; and Stevens with his incense of travel in Central America; and others who are opening the bowels of the earth, and rolling "trains" into being; and ten thousand elders of Israel, filled with the Holy Ghost, declaring the everlasting gospel with irresistible power and economy; that surpasses understanding; the great persecutions and murders which are dealt out without measure to its believers; and the distress of nations and the signs that Jesus Christ said should be, like the sound of many waters, or of a great thunder, declare that it is eternal truth! and that your brother Joseph Smith was one of the Lord's apostles! That he now sits with God in the heavens, and laughs at the calamities that will speedily wrap the world in woe; and that he will mock when their fear seizes the last hope of a crude existence!

Joseph Smith was a Captain General and his world will be introduced to him as such, how the epitaph of its great men's greatness will be written within and without on the gates of the lower prison, and entrance to outer darkness: "we were, and are not, and yet are!" But I must not go to preaching to an apostle as I know you are, lest I enter into the rich treasure of knowledge too, and cause you to exclaim:—cast not thy precious jewels to strangers, lest greediness and covetousness seize them and they like the "treacherous steward" with his goose that laid a golden egg a day, all her in order to obtain the whole litter at once, and so destroy the fountain!

Mormonism is the wonder of this world, and the great leveling machine of creeds, constitutions, kingdoms, countries, divisions, nations, societies and novelties; and praise it, talk about it, be proud of it, exalt it, degrade it, blow it, sneer at it, fear it, love it, hate it, persecute it, or laugh at it, still it is Mormonism, true as heaven, powerful as Jesus, eternal as element, going on conquering and to conquer!

Have the mightiest men on earth reared monuments of grandeur; of glory; of duration; of splendor; of fame; of utility; or of admiration?—Joseph Smith has exceeded all this wisdom and greatness. He has brought back the past and rolled up the future, whereby the past, present, and future, exhibit their images like the skies over the ocean.

Mormonism! O Mormonism! Nimrod, Hamur, Pharaoh, Cadmus, Alexander, Nebuchadnezzar, Holofernes, Herod, Bonaparte, and an immense retinue of other dignities, who have burst into being with pomp and glory, and made a trembling world wonder at their cruel and cunning. Where are the pillars, the records, and the approvals of heaven, of all your greatness?

"A heap of dust alone remains of thee, 'Tis all thou art and all thou shalt be," while Mormonism, from an Abel, though dead, yet speaks; from an Elijah, though translated in a fiery chariot to heaven, yet returns in glory with Moses, and blesses Jesus at the transfiguration on the mount! O Mormonism! Thy father is God, thy mother is the Queen of heaven, and so thy whole history, from eternity to eternity, in the laws, ordinances and truth of the "Gospel"—embracing the simple plan of salvation, sanctification, death, resurrection, glorification and exaltation of man, from infancy to age, from age to eternity, from simplicity to sublimity: from faith, repentance, baptism, reception of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, to washing, anointing, holy conversation, baptism for the dead, to the presence of angels, the general assembly and church of the first-born; to the unspeakable glory of seeing God and the Lamb, and to spirits of just men, made perfect, and to be ordained unto eternal life!

And again, we exclaim, O Mormonism! No wonder that Lucifer, son of the morning, the next heir to Jesus Christ, purdest brother, should fight so hard against his brethren; he sought the glory, the honor, power, and dominion of a God; and the knowledge, spirit, authority and keys of the priesthood of the son of God!

Christ kept his first case and Lucifer lost his, by offering to save men in their sins on the honor of a God, or on his father's honor. Christ hated sin, and loved righteousness, therefore he was anointed with holy oil in heaven, and crowned in the midst of brothers and sisters, while his mother stood with approving virtue, and smiled upon a Son that kept the faith in the heart of all things! In fact the Jews brought so much of this coronation among Gods and Goddesses; Kings and Queens of heaven, that they broke over all restraints and actually began to worship the "Queen of heaven," according to Jeremiah.

Well, now, Brother William, when the house of Israel begin to come into the glorious mysteries of the kingdom, and find that Jesus Christ, whose goings forth, as the prophets said, have been from of old, from eternity; and that eternity, agreeably to the records found in the catacombs of Egypt, has been going on in this system, (not this world) almost two thousand five hundred and fifty millions of years; and to know at the same time, that deists, geologists and others are trying to prove that matter must have existed hundreds of thousands of years;—it almost tempts the flesh to fly to God, or muster faith like Frodo to be translated and see and know as we are seen and known!

O Mormonism! no wonder the earth groans with the blood of thy martyrs! But there is one sweet consolation: death hath power on a saint, but not on the righteous rise triumphant over death, hell, and the grave! The wicked, thanks be to God, have to go through the agonies of the grim monster, trier, and the "second death," will be long enough, excreting enough, and woful enough, to satisfy the "Germans," faithful, for murdering the Lord's anointed; and the punishment will be eternal.

But I must begin to talk about Nauvoo, for I think I have said enough to prove the "mystery," whether the perishing philosophy of the age credit it, or not; so you may set me down as a living monument of Mormonism, and with the Twelve, there will then be thirteen united saints, bearing this testimony to the world that God, man, and Mormonism, are not only material, but eternal; and therefore, like Jesus, when martyred they come to life again.

I shall not describe the localities of Nauvoo, now, because I shall not have room; but as to the facilities, tranquillities, and virtues of the city, they are not equalled on the globe. The saints, since Sidney the great "Anti-Christ," the last days, and his sons of "Seceva" have left Nauvoo, together with some other Simon Maguses, or foolish virgins, and wicked men had crept in to revel on the bliss of Jehovah, have gone also, peace, union and harmony prevail.

I speak advisedly when I say Nauvoo is the best place in the world. No vice is meant to be tolerated; no grog shops allowed; nor would we have any trouble, if it were not for our inability in suffering the world, as I shall call them to come in and trade and enjoy our society as they say: which thing has made us the only trouble of late. These pretended friends, too frequently like old Balaam's girls, when let in a house the young men of Israel, find admirers, and break the ordinances of the city, and then "Pineas" javelin," touches the heart.

The temple is up as high as the eagle of the sphinx, and it looks majestic, and especially to me, when I know that the thing, the "city of the poor," thus speaks of the glory of God. All the description that is necessary to give you now, is that this splendid new stone of Mormon grandeur, exhibits thirty hewn stone pillars, which cost about $3,000 apiece. The base is crescent new moon; the capitals, near fifty feet high, the sun, with a human face in bold relief, about two and a half feet broad, ornamented with rays of light and waves, surmounted by two hands holding two triangles. It is always too much trouble to describe an unfinished building. The inside work is now going forward as fast as possible. When the whole structure is completed it will cost some five or six hundred thousand dollars; and as Captain Brown of Tallapoosa, near the ruins of Palmyra, said, "it will look the nearest like the splendid remains of antiquity in Central America of any thing he had seen, though not half so large."

The temple is erected from white limestone wrought in a superior style: is 123 by 83 feet square; near 60 feet high; two stories in the clear, and two half stories in the recesses over the arches; four tiers of windows; two Gothic and two round. The two great stories will each have two pulpits, one at each end; to accommodate the Melchizedek and Aaronic priesthoods; grade I to four rising seats; the first for the president of the elders, and his two counselors; the second for the president of the high priesthood and his two counselors; the third for the Melchizedek president and his two counselors; and the fourth for the president over the whole church. (The first president is where the scribes and pharisees used to crowd in "to Moses' seat." The Aaronic pulpit at the other end the same.

The font in the basement story is for the baptism of the living, for health, for remission of sin, and for the salvation of the dead, as was the case in Solomon's temple, and all temples that God commands to be built. You know I am no Gentile, and of course, do not believe that a monastery, cathedral, chapel, or meeting house erected by the notions and calculations of men, has any more sanction from God than any common house in Babylon.

The steps of our temple will be high enough to answer for a tower—between 100 and 200 feet high. But I have said enough about the temple; when finished it will show more wealth, more art, more science, more revelation, more splendor, and more God, than all the rest of the world, and that will make it a Mormon temple:—"God and Liberty;" patterned somewhat after the order of our forefathers, which were after the order of eternity.

The other public buildings in Nauvoo, besides the temple, are the Seventies' Hall, the Mission Hall, and Concert Hall; all spacious, and well calculated for their designated purposes.

There is no licensed grocery to sell or give away liquors of any kind in the city; drunkards are scarce. Probable number of inhabitants, 14,000; nine-tenths Mormons.

Now for the welfare of your relatives, I have seen your mother and she cried for joy over your letter. Though I am 60th year, her heart was big with hope for her, "daring son, William!"—and she blessed you in the name of the Lord.

The rest, I think, enjoy very good health, and especially Emma, who amid her great affliction, has given birth to a son, and like David of old, may be yet a terror to evil doers; one that will ght his candle in the same great fire where his father's was lit, and search the world by the light of it, till the last stain of his father's blood, is made white by righter uses.

The record of your father's family presents the following summary of life and death: Joseph A. Smith Sen., born in Topsheld, Mass., July 12, 1772. Died in Nauvoo, Ill., Sept. 14, 1840, aged 68. His grey hairs were brought down to the grave by being driven from the State of Missouri in the dead of winter by Gov. Boggs and his murderous banditti.

Lucy Smith (Mack) born in Glaston, N. H., July 8, 1776, now in her 69th year; mourns the loss of a husband and five sons, the most of whom fell by the tender mercies of a Christian Republic, bestowed by the Herods of the land in civilized exile and murder.

Joseph Smith and Lucy Mack, married in Tunbridge, Vt., June 24, 1796.

Alma A. Smith, born in Tunbridge, Vt., February 11, 1793. Died in Palmyra, N. Y., November 19, 1839, aged nearly 52.

Hyrum Smith born in Tunbridge, Vt., February 9, 1800, was murdered in Carthage jail, on the 27th of June, 1844. (By a mob.) aged 44. Thus fell a martyr, against whom not even one crime had ever been known.

Sophronia A. Smith born in Tunbridge, Vt., May 10, 1801, aged 41.

Joseph Smith Jr., born in Sharon Vt., December 23, 1805. Murdered in Carthage jail on the 27th of June, 1844. (By a mob.) on account of his religion as pretty much all holy men have been before him;—aged 39. Thus fell a martyr, to gratify the cupidity of a priestly shire, for innocent blood; and shows the weakness of our government to protect her citizens; this first prophet of the last dispensation, whose goodly works, whose virtuous deeds, and whose innocent blood will entitle him to a fame, a name, a glory, an honor, power, and dominion, with God, when his persecutors and murderers will mutter, groan, gnash their teeth, and sigh among the damned, where "their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched."

Samuel Harrison Smith, born in Tunbridge, Vt., March 13, 1809. Died July 30th, 1844, broken hearted, and worn out with persecution. Aged 36. The righteous are removed from the evil to come.

Ephraim Smith, born in Royalton, Vt., March 13, 1810. Died March 24, 1810; aged 14 days.

William Smith, born in Royalton, Vt., March 13, 1811; aged (about) 34; the only child (living) of the family, and one of the "Twelve." Lord, while I write "the fire burns for thymighty of Israel, to come up like a lion from the swelling of Jordan."

Katharine Smith, born in Lebanon N. H., July 28, 1813; aged 31.

Don Carlos Smith, born in Norwich Vermont, March 2, 1815. Died August 7, 1841, aged 26. His untiring vigilance for his parents and the persecutions of Missouri brought him to the grave, just as he was stepping upon the threshold of life and usefulness.

Lucy Smith, born in Palmyra, N. Y., July 15, 1821; aged 23.

So here you have your history—without painting. The females all married, all Mormons and live in this vicinity.

How think ye this little sketch will fit the requirement of christianity? I believe the next generation will say, O, if we had only lived with those good men, we would not have murdered them! Do you think that this benighted world, with all their priests, pulpits and philanthropy, will call to mind that through their error or silence, one mother born four days after our independence was declared, and four daughters-in-law, weep over the tombs of their mob-murdered husbands, while the innocent blood stains the land, the law, liberty and religion of the whole nation?

Our pseudo-President says in his last message: "The great moral principle has been exhibited of a nation, approximating in number to 20,000,000, of people, having performed the high and important duty of electing their chief magistrate for the term of four years, without the commission of any acts of violence, or a manifestation of a spirit of insubordination to the laws."

Now what says the people about the "riot in Philadelphia," the murder at Carthage of one of the candidates for that high office, and shooting a man dead in Tennessee for carrying a poke stick? Was their "any acts of violence" in all these manifestations of murder? Went to the hyposrite!

Governor Edwards of Missouri, in his message to the legislature, after regretting mob law or disobedience in other states, says, "In our State, the great majority of the people are sober and discreet, mild and prudent, industrious and frugal, honest and virtuous, and above all, the lovers of good order and peace in society."

Such mock virtue; such hypocritical eulogy, is enough to merit an earthquake! Great God! 15,000 people exiled, robbed, mangled and murdered by executive authority, and now the people are all lovers of good order, and peace in society! This old Herod and out Boggs-Boggs! O wrath of God where art thou?

But I must begin to draw to a close, or my letter will be long enough for a pamphlet. I cannot leave the subject, however, till I bring in the "Twelve." They were known from before the foundation of the world, and are thus noticed in the prophecy of Zechariah in the Book of Mormon; I mean in that masterly parable of the olive tree? all men, acquainted with revelation and the spirit of God, have agreed that the "servant" spoken of in that parable, was Joseph Smith, and when the Lord commanded him "to go to and call after servants," and "they did go to it with their might,"—as the whole has been backed up by revelations in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, it would require more than "mortal" to prove that allusion to the "servants," meant any body but the "Twelve."

I know the Twelve, and they know me. Their names are Brigham Young, the lion of the Lord; Heber C. Kimball, the herald of grace; Parley P. Pratt, the archer of paradise; Orson Hyde, the olive branch of Israel; Willard Richards, the keeper of the rolls; John Taylor, the champion of right; William Smith, the patriarchal Jacob staff; Wilford Woodruff, the banner of the gospel; George A. Smith, the entablature of truth; Orson Pratt, the gauge of philosophy; John E. Page, the sun dial; and Lyman Wight, the wild ram of the mountain. And they are good men; the best the Lord can find; they do the will of God, and the saints know it.

As to Sidney Rigdon and his clique of diseased beings—there was to be "another day," and unclean spirits, like frogs, were to come out of the mouth of the dragon, beast, and false prophet, and time will reveal all about him—and eternity will settle it. The seed by the way side, among thorns, and stony places, belongs to the wicked one, and he will have it. Let dead bury their dead.

So now, dear brother, while I respect you and the "Twelve," and all their kin, as my own blood relations, shall we, as the legal heirs of salvation, enlightened by the voice of God; by revelation upon revelation; by the gift of the Holy Ghost; bringing all things to our remembrance; shall we, who have witnessed the power of God in the spread of the everlasting gospel; in the manifestations of the gift of tongues; the miraculous healing of the sick by the laying on the hands of the elders; shall we, who have spent so many weary hours under the holy "dripping of the prophet's" golden fountain; who have been delighted at his heavenly knowledge combating the errors of generations; teaching reasons wisdom; judges justice; priests piety; and mankind mercy; shall we, who have beheld prophecies fulfilled knowing that the very bowels of the earth have heaved up her "stone rains," to establish the validity of the Book of Mormon, beyond a doubt; shall we, who have heard the echo of glad tidings from the islands of the sea, and from all quarters of the earth; shall we, who now gaze upon the bloated carcasses of the west; where bleaches the bones of the prophets, patriarchs, elders, men, women, and children, who have up to the ghost in full faith; shall we, who have tasted of the good word of God; and seen the mysteries of the world to come, shall we turn to the beggary elements of the world, to work our passage back to popularity and hell, for a "mess of pottage?" Rks Hinkle, Bennett, Law, Rigdon and Co! No! Eternally no!

While water runs and grass grows, while eternity goes and eternity comes we will go on, knowing that it is written in heaven: published on earth, and muttered in hell, that Mormonism is ETERNAL TRUTH, and God Almighty is the author of it!

All the friends and saints greet you and your wife and family, with prayer and love. As ever,

W. W. PHELPS.

DEDICATION.

The dedication of the Seventies Hall commenced on Thursday the 26th. It was to continue 7 days, in order that two Seventies a day and their families, might be accommodated. (There being now 14 Seventies.) Every thing is conducted in a style suitable to the occasion. Great harmony prevails. A more perfect account may be looked for hereafter in the Times and Seasons.

FROM SPRINGFIELD.

We are informed that several bills, relative to the charters of Nauvoo, Springfield, Quincy, &c., have been referred to the committee on banking and corporations. About the time these bills were referred to said committee, the Governor, delivered to both branches of the Legislature a special message upon the recent affairs of Hancock County.

From a last perusal of the message, we think it highly creditable, and shall lay it before our readers next week, giving our corrections and views, wherein there is need. Gov. Ford has certainly labored diligently in this long synopsis of difficulties, to give the public a fair statement, and were it not for such canine animals, as Davis of Alton, and a few others of the same carnivorous breed; the Mormon difficulties, (as they are frequently called) would be amicably settled, to the satisfaction of all honorable men, and Nauvoo would enjoy all her constitutional rights, without infringing upon the privileges of any body else. If the members of the Legislature are as honorable as the Governor, the "pound of flesh" nearest to a Mormon's heart, will be just as heavy as a pound of meat in any other part of the body of the State.

We shall give the message, and our views as early next week as we can.

NEW ORLEANS GUESSING INSTITUTE.

Macrotechny Eclipsed—New England Ahead—The "Professors" No where.

A seedy son of New England found himself, recently, all alone, unknown, and "hard up," in New Orleans. Of course he soon set about guessing some way to get out of the scrape; and, before he had quite whittled his stick away, he became absorbed in the inception of a grand thought. It seems, sitting down to guess, his astute brain made a plunge, at once, among the metaphysical and scientific ramifications of guessing; and, not long after, he might have observed, with a sober sort of twinkle in his eye, marching off along the "Levee," apparently looking for a house to let, humming—

Yankee Doodle! come along!

When fortune falls distressing,
There's nothing like a Yankee song,
And scientific guessing!

Early next day, our hero and another odd-looking genius were seen on a ladder, nailing up a broad strip of canvass all across the front of a house on the Levee; and the job being completed, there was displayed, in flaming, sprawling, struggling, broken-backed, decapitated, knock-kneed, round-shouldered, bow-legged, lumping letters, Roman, German, Hebrew, caligraphic, chirographic, Arabian, Armenian, and Pot-hook-ian!

NEW ORLEANS GUESSING INSTITUTE.

GUESSING TAUGHT IN ONE LESSON.
Only 20 Five cents.

The thing produced a sensation, at once, among sailors, peddlers, Levee laborers, and all sorts of stragglers. Our Professor borrowed an old rotten awning, hung it up, and divided his room in two, put his assistant at the door to take in quarters, turned a tin cup inside down on the middle of an old rickety table, got a vial of vinegar, a pot of tar, a bottle of whiskey, and various other well-known odoriferous affairs arranged around him; and, with a black skull cap on his head, and a red stick in his hand, he made no bad "splurge" at the representation of a modern Faust. Madame Ludwig might have taken a lesson from him, ("you understand me now?") and Herr Alexander should have seen him. He drew a mystic ring on the ceiling, with charcoal, filling it up with most indecipherable "curlicues," right over the table, and business soon commenced.

In straggled an open-mouthed enquirer after the mysteries of guessing. "Stranger, good morning; walk up and proscribe yourself as a true enquirer after the revelations of Gessology. Put your left hand upon the converted tin cup. Very well. Lift your right hand to the ceiling, and fix your eyes upon the magic circle. So. Now, if you wink or remove your eye, you'll ruin the lull business, stranger; so, jest hold still. Now I proceed to pervoke the guessing spirit to descend upon you. What is this I hold under your nose?"

"Vinegar."

"Crimini jingo! you larn fast! what's this?"

"That's tar."

"Right again, my pupil; what's this?"

"Brimstone."

"Good; you envelope the faculty really amazing! Can you guess what this is?"

"Whiskey, by thunder!"

"All creation! how quick you take it! are you sure it's whiskey?"

"Sure? well, I reckon!"

"You'd better taste it and see. Is it whiskey?"

"Well, it is."

"Take a good swig, then; you'll do stranger; you're ready to graduate. Come in, next. Hallo! mister, don't take that bottle away!"

One after another, as fast as he could dispose of them, the Professor found his customers sideling half shyly in upon him all day long, and when, now and then, one would exhibit a beligerent spirit, between good humor and whiskey, the New England Magician still managed to send him off satisfied. Every body coming out was questioned by the eager crowd in waiting, as to "what sort of a show it was, any how?" and the answer was pretty generally the same—"First rate, and no mistake, and the last experiment is worth half the money!"

The Professor counted his receipts that night, finding a round sum to help him on west; sold his "institute" for a premium to his enterprising assistant, and the next morning he was off, jingling the silver in his pocket and blessing devoutly the benefits of science!

St. Louis Reveille.

From the New York Sun.

DESTITUTION IN ENGLAND.

The parish police and coroners' reports, published in the British papers, continue to furnish extreme and painful cases of destitution and suffering among the poor classes. At Maidstone petty sessions, a poor girl, fifteen years of age, was complained of for pulling four turkeys from the field of a Mr. Baxter. It was at six o'clock in the morning. She had been gathering hops, was very hungry and thirsty, and when spoken to, threw the turkeys on the ground and went away, but was afterwards apprehended. The magistrate appealed to Mr. Baxter to withdraw the case, but the latter refused to do so, and the girl was sentenced to pay fourpence, the value of the turkeys, three shillings and sixpence costs, and sixpence penalty. The girl had no money, but soon after a boy came into the court, crying bitterly, who stated that he had just pawned the shoes from off his feet to pay for his sister. The money was paid and the girl discharged.

A poor plasterer, named Russel, fell from a scaffolding while at work, fractured four of his ribs, and received other injuries. He was taken to the workhouse of the parish, turned over to the care of the nurses of the establishment, and died during the night, without having any attention bestowed upon him. At the coroner's inquest, it was shown that the surgeon of the place had ordered the sick man certain medicines to be administered during the night, but the nurse having been kept up the night before, had gone to sleep and forgotten him, and he died without assistance or attention. The jury "admonished" the nurse, and returned a verdict of accidental death.

A pale, consumptive looking girl, named Esther Pierce, was charged at a London police office with illegally pledging a silk shawl, which had been entrusted to her to embroider. She appeared in great distress, acknowledged the act, and said she had been driven to it to save herself from starvation, having neither food nor drink, nor money to buy them with. For her day's work in embroidering a shawl, she received but five pence; and for this one which was larger than usual, and on which was to be worked over eighty flowers—she was to receive but sixpence.

Her statement was corroborated, and the shawl was produced, which was worked very tastefully, and the magistrate expressed himself with much indignation that any person with the least title to respectability should make a fellow creature work upon such starvation wages. The pawnbroker's assistant—who attended as a witness, stated that his master was willing to give up the shawl without any payment, on account of the extremity of the poor girl's case; and the magistrate there upon dismissed the complaint. The poor fainting girl was removed from the bar, but had to take refuge in her parish workhouse. Some assistance was subsequently rendered to her, to procure for her a decent outfit of clothes, that she might obtain a servant's situation.

A poor milk man, named Davis, appeared at the Clerkingwell police office, to complain of an overcharge of costs. His furniture, which had cost him twenty-five pounds a short time before, had been disordered and seized for rent. Five days afterwards he had offered the appraised value, which was only five pounds, with the costs, but the landlord refused to release the articles, a sham sale was made, and the goods sacrificed at the appraisal and bought in for the landlord by his broker, who had made the illegal charge of costs. No one was present at the sale but the landlord and his two appraisers. The magistrate said that this was a fair specimen of the system of brokerage in Clerkingwell. The goods of a poor family were frequently swept away and sold in an underhand manner for one fourth their value, while the whole amount of brokerage was charged. He fined the broker one pound seven shillings and costs, and the overcharge was refunded to the poor tenant.

At the Banbury petty sessions, John Coggins, laborer, was charged by a looker-out of the Earl of Jersey, with having a gun in his hand, in a stubble field, in search of game. He had no dog, did fire, and his gun was taken from him. The Rev. Mr. Matthews, before whom the complaint was made, a "sporting clergyman," without an allegation of regret at his painful duty, sentenced the poor fellow to a fine of ten pounds. Coggins said his property would not fetch the money, when the reverend and humane magistrate decided that he must be committed for three months' hard labor. The prisoner was of good character, and had never previously been before a magistrate.

At the same session, John Dorzel, laborer, was charged with having left his wife and family chargeable to the parish. He had been absent in another county for work, after having sought in vain for employment at home, procuring only eight days' work in five weeks. While absent he saved up one pound, which he had paid for house rent since he returned, and had offered to repay the parish a little at a time; but as he had not sent home anything to support his family while absent, he was committed to prison for one month's labor.

A poor sick woman, named Phillis Pedor, a widow with several children, residing at Amptill, having died from want and neglect, the relieving officer under the poor law refusing to afford her relief, the case made much noise, and inquiries were accordingly instituted as to the facts. It was stated that she had been weakly for years; one of her children was subject to fits, and another was "rickety!" The net earnings of the whole family was not above 1s. a week at the outside.

The mother used to receive a widow's pay from the parish, (2s. 6d. a week,) but latterly that had been taken off. She received occasional charity from families in the neighborhood; but about nine days before her death, she said she had tired out all her friends and neighbors, and would not apply to them any more for relief. The conclusion of the inquiry was that "out-door relief was taken from a sick widow because she refused to go to an infirmary; that repeated representations were made to the relieving officer of her condition; that he invariably refused to attend to them; and that the woman at last perished from want of nourishing diet, which she could not get, and which the parish or its officer refused to her."

A public meeting was held at Highworth on the 18th ult., the Earl of Radnor in the chair, "for the purpose of taking into consideration the distress of the working classes, and to discuss the benefits likely to arise if the trade in corn and other provisions were free," when a statement was read that had been made of his condition by a poor man of the neighborhood. We copy from the London Times:

"I, a laboring man, in the town of Highworth, do humbly pray that something may be done to lighten the difficulties and distress under which I labor through the badness of the times. I have a wife and four children to maintain on 8s. a week. My children are so small that my wife and children are not able to go out to work, as the oldest is under nine; so all depend on my 8s. a week, which I find is not enough to maintain us in a proper manner, as I have to pay 1s. 6d. for house rent, 9d. for firing, and 6s. for six gallons of bread at 1s. a gallon, which alone amounts to 8s. 6d., and leaves me, therefore, in debt 6d. I have nothing left to buy tea, sugar, candles, meat, and other things too numerous to mention. As it is, I have to work in the harvest from daylight to dusk like a slave, to pay what I get behind at the shop, and I can't do it then, instead of my having something left to spend with my wife and children. Something must be done. What will be the end of it, I know not. I can't stop longer to see my wife and children nearly half-naked and half-starved."

Rules for Ladies.—Marry not a profane man, because the depravity of his heart will corrupt your children and embitter your existence.

Marry not a gambler, a tippler, or a frequenter of taverns; because he who has to regard for himself, will never have any for his wife.

Marry not a man who makes promises which he never performs; because you can never trust him.

Marry not a man whose actions do not correspond with his sentiments, because the passions have dethroned reason, and he is prepared to commit every crime to which an evil nature, unrestrained, can instigate him. The state of that man who regards not his own ideas of right and wrong is deplorable, and the less you have to do with him the better.

Marry not a man who is in the habit of running after all the girls in the country; because the affections are continually wavering, and therefore, never can be permanent.

Marry not a man who neglects his business; if he does so when single, he will do worse when married.

Rules for Gentlemen.—Marry not a woman who cannot make a shirt, or cook a meal's victuals. Such a woman would keep a man poor all the days of his life.

Marry not a woman who is a lady and proud; because she will be eternally scolding if she does not get every thing she wants.

Marry not a woman who thinks herself better than any body else; because it shows a want of sense, and she will have but few friends.

Marry not a woman who is fond of spinning street yarn; because such a woman will not make a good wife, and will never be contented at home.

Marry not a woman who is in the daily habit of slandering her neighbors, and giving ear to all the gossiping she hears. Such women make the worst of wives.

The Chinese mode of taking wild fowl, with which the neighborhood of Canton abounds, is curious and somewhat unsportsmanlike. There is no missing fire—no powder getting damp—no barrel bursting—no bother with dogs—nothing but sport, and no mistake. Whenever they see a quantity of ducks settled in any particular piece of water, they send half a dozen gulls to float among them. These gulls resemble the pumpkins in England; but being hollowed out, they float on the surface of the water. On large pools they leave twenty to thirty afloat. At first the fowl are shy at coming near them, but by degrees they get courage; and as all birds at length grow familiar with a scare-crow, they soon gather around them, and among themselves by "whetting their bill" against them. When the birds get pretty familiar with them, they then prepare to decoy them more effectually. A Chinese hollows out a pumpkin which is pretty large, and after making holes in it to see and breathe through he claps it on his head. Thus accoutred, he wades slowly into the water, keeping his body under, and letting nothing be seen above the surface but the pumpkin, in which is his head. In this manner he moves imperceptibly towards the fowl, which suspect no danger. At last he fairly gets in amongst them; while they having been long used to see gulls, take not the least alarm, even when the enemy is in the very midst of them; who, whenever he approaches a fowl, seizes it by the legs, and draws it with a sportsmanlike (7) jerk under the water. He then fastens it to his girdle and proceeds on to the next victim, till he has loaded himself with as many as he can fairly (7) walk off with.—[From Captain Pidding's Chinese Ocio and Tea Talk, No. 14.]

TWO STORES.

DAVID D. YEARSLEY has opened two Stores, one in the building lately occupied by Gen. Joseph Smith as a store, on Water street, the other on Mulholland street, a little east of the Temple, the Keystone Store, where he will accommodate his friends and the public, with Dry Goods and Groceries to their hearts desire. A quick "pic" being better than a slow "bit,"—he means to sell cheap for cash and produce.

One man can not do everything, nor have everything, but he means, with two stores to do a double business, and keep a good assortment of Crockery and Hardware also.

Being fond of company he wishes all to call and see.

MESSAGE

FROM THE GOVERNOR, IN RE-LATION TO THE DISTUR-BANCES IN HANCOCK COUN-TY.

To the Honorable, the Senate,
and House of Representatives:

As many versions of the disturbances during the last summer and fall, in Hancock county, have gone abroad to the world, I have thought it proper to state in a solemn and authentic form, every thing connected with those transactions which has come to my knowledge; and upon which I rely as the truth.

On the seventeenth day of June last,
a committee of a meeting of the citizens of Carthage, presented themselves to me, with a request that the militia might be ordered out to assist in executing process in the city of Nauvoo.
From the affidavits presented at the same time, I judged that an occasion had arisen of considerable difficulty and perplexity; and from their statements, I could be of no other opinion than that great excitement existed in the minds of the people. I therefore determined to visit, in person, that section of country, and examine for myself the truth and nature of their complaints; and being on the ground, I would be the better enabled to judge of what ought to be done, under the actual circumstances existing. Therefore, no order for the militia was made;
and I arrived at Carthage on the morning of the twenty-first day of the same month.

Upon my arrival I found an armed force assembled, and hourly increasing, under the summons and direction of the constables of the county, to serve as posse comitatus to assist in the execution of process. The General of that Brigade, had also called for the militia, en masse, of the counties of McDonough and Schuyler, for similar purpose. Another assemblage to a considerable number, had been made at Warsaw, under the command of Col. Levi Williams.

The first thing which I did on my arrival, was to place all the militia then assembled or which were expected to assemble, under military command of their proper officers.

I next despatched a messenger to Nauvoo, informing the Mayor and Common Council of the nature of the complaint made against them; and requested that persons might be sent to me, to lay their side of the question before me. A committee was accordingly sent, who made such acknowledgments, that I had no difficulty in concluding that the following facts were perfectly true:

It appears that a certain portion of the citizens of Nauvoo became disas-tised with the conduct of some of the leading men of the place; and established a newspaper press, as the organ of their peculiar views. Those persons were ex-communicated from the church called, "The Latter-day Saints," but more familiarly known as the Mormon Church; and their printing press and materials were destroyed, by order of the Common Council.

It appears that previous to the destruction of the press, a very curious trial was had before the Common Council, which resulted in a judgment of that body, that the press was a public nuisance, and ought to be abated. It does not appear that any person was tried, or that any of the owners of the property had notice of the proceeding, or were permitted to defend in any particular. The proceeding was an ex-parte proceeding in rem against the property. No jury was called or sworn, and most of the witnesses were permitted to give their evidence, without being under oath. It appears further, that there existed no general ordinance of the city, defining such a press to be a nuisance; and further, that the Common Council possessed legislative authority, only; and could under no pretence, set in judgment as a court.

[Correction.—No persons were examined without being sworn by the City Council, as the records will show.

The City Council did not act in the capacity of a court, but in their legislative prerogative, declaring, according to the 7th section of the charter of Springfield, which had been made a part of that of Nauvoo, that the Navoo Expositor, (press and types) was a public nuisance: calling up witnesses and authority, for the like proceeding in other cities.

The Editor of the Expositor was a member of the Council, but did not appear in his place to advocate for the proprietors for reasons which remain to be told.]

The press, however, was declared to be a nuisance; and the Mayor was ordered to see it abated as such; and if necessary, to call to his assistance a portion of the Nauvoo Legion. The Mayor made his warrant to the Marshal of the city, who, aided by a portion of the Legion, executed his warrant, by destroying the press and scattering the type and other materials of the office.

The owners of the property proceeded to Carthage and took out warrants from before a Justice of the peace, against the Mayor and members of the Council and others engaged in the outrage, for a riot. Some of these were arrested, but were immediately taken before the municipal court of the city by writ of habeas corpus and discharged. It appears that the city charter confers upon that court power to issue writs of habeas corpus in all cases of imprisonment arising under the ordinances of the city; a provision manifestly relating to such imprisonment as might be the consequence of the city ordinances. But the Common Council passed an ordinance conferring upon the court, jurisdiction to issue the writ in all cases of arrest and imprisonment in the city, by whatever authority the same might be made; thus drawing to that court, jurisdiction to discharge from every kind of imprisonment, whether made by State or federal authority; and making it impossible to execute the laws there, unless permitted by the municipal court.

[As to the right of the writ of Habeas Corpus, or the abuse of that power, the constitution and higher courts can determine the whole matter, without anything like impossibility, or improbability; because the City Council, other authority, and citizens, of Nauvoo, hold themselves amenable to these safe guards of delegated powers.]

The whole proceedings of the Mayor, the Common Council, and the Municipal Court, were irregular and illegal, and not to be endured in a free country; though perhaps some apology might be made for the court, as it had been repeatedly assured by some of the best lawyers in the State, who had been candidates for office, before that people, that it had full and competent power to issue writs of habeas corpus in all cases whatever. The Common Council violated the law in assuming the exercise of judicial power; in proceeding ex-parte without notice to the owners of the property; in proceeding against the property in rem; in not calling a jury; in not giving the owners of the property accused of being a nuisance, an opportunity of giving the truth in evidence; and in fact by not proceeding by civil suit or indictment, as in other cases of libel.

The Mayor violated the law in ordering this erroneous and absurd judgment of the Common Council to be executed. And the municipal court erred in discharging them from arrest.

[We are not willing to receive the foregoing as final judgment, because the charter of Nauvoo, gave the constable who made the arrest, an appeal to the Circuit Court of Hancock county—in all cases, rather than an appeal to arms.]

The Governor omitted to notice that all the defendants claimed in the writ (alluded to,) were tried before D.
H. Wells, Esq., a county magistrate and not a Mormon, and were all acquitted.]

As this proceeding touched the liberty of the press, which is justly dear to any republican people, it was well calculated to raise a great flame of excitement. And it may well be questioned, whether years of misrepresentation by the most profligate newspaper could have engendered such a feeling as was produced by the destruction of this one press.

There were other causes, to heighten the excitement: These people had undertaken to invoke upon the established systems of religion. Their legal right to do so, no one will question. But all history bears testimony that innovations upon religion have always been attended by a temper of hostility in the public mind; which sometimes, has produced the most lethal wars; always, more or less of persecution. Even the innocent Quakers, the unoffending Shakers, and the quiet and orderly Methodists, in their origin, and until the world got used to them, had enough of persecution to encounter. But if either of these sects had congregated together in one city, where the world could never get to know them; could never ascertain, by personal acquaintance, the truth or falsity of the many reports which are always circulated to the prejudice of such innovators; and moreover, if they had armed themselves; and organized into a military legion as the citizens of Nauvoo, and had been guilty of the high handed proceedings carried on against the heretical press, the public animosity, and their persecutions, must have been greatly increased, in rancor and severity.

[The idea of this paragraph, is very erroneous. Strangers visit Nauvoo constantly to learn the truth as taught by the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; and the elders are on every continent of the globe, teaching the inhabitants the principles, doctrines, and glories of Mormonism; and the "Legion" organized by the State, only showed its republicanism, in defence of freedom, when "utter extermination" rushed upon the people like savages. "Military Saints" seem to have grown into use, on account of Military Mobs; no odds whether the monster was concealed in a printing press, a colored mob at Carthage jail, or a Wolf Hunt.]

In addition to these causes of excitement, there were a great many reports in circulation, and generally believed by the people; or at least, they pretended to believe them. I mention these reports and rumors, not because I had any evidence of their truth, but because they had a serious influence in swelling the public excitement.

It was asserted that Joseph Smith, the founder and head of the Mormon church, had caused himself to be crowned and anointed King of the Mormons; that he had embodied a band of his followers, called Danites, who were sworn to obey him as God, and to do his commands, murder and treason not excepted; that he had instituted an order in the church, where by those who composed it were pretended to be sealed up to eternal life against all crimes, save the shedding of innocent blood or consenting thereto. That this order was instructed that no blood was innocent blood, except that of the members of the church; and that these two orders were made the ministers of his vengeance, and the instruments of an intolerable tyranny, which he had established over his people, and which he was about to extend over the neighboring country. The people affected to believe, that with this power in the hands of an unscrupulous leader, there was no safety for the lives or property of any one who should oppose him. They affected likewise, to believe, that Smith inculcated the legality of perjury, or any other crime, in defence, or to advance the interests of the true believers; and that himself had set them the example by swearing to a false accusation against a certain person, for the crime of murder. It was likewise asserted, to be a fundamental article of the Mormon faith, that God had given the world and all it contained, to them as his saints; that they secretly believed in their right to all the goodly lands, farms, and property, in the country; that at present, they were kept out of their rightful inheritance by force; that consequently, there was no moral obstacle in anticipating God's good time to put them in possession by stealing, if opportunity offered; that in fact, the whole church was a community of murderers, thieves, robbers, and outlaws; that Joseph Smith had established a Bogus factory in Nauvoo, for the manufacture of counterfeit money; and that he maintained about his person, a tribe of swindlers, blacklegs, and counterfeiters, to make it, and put it into circulation.

[It is a good thing that apostates and hot-headed men, cannot indict the word of God—or it would be tried and punished, or annihilated. All the prophets who suffered martyrdom; Jesus Christ, and even Joseph and Hyrum Smith, were taken up for reason, because they undertook to live and practice the precepts of religion according to the bible.]

It was also believed, that Joseph Smith had announced a revelation from heaven, sanctioning polygamy, by some kind of spiritual-wife system, which I never could understand; but at any rate, whereby a man was allowed one wife in pursuance of the laws of the country, and an indefinite number of others, to be enjoyed in some mystical and spiritual mode; and that he himself, and many of his followers, had practiced upon the precepts of this revelation, by seducing a large number of women.

[To relieve the Governor's mind, on this subject, we will just say that the meaning of spiritual wife is, to be married for eternity, instead of natural lifetime; and should a man or woman die after they have been married, they have a legal right to get married again; and should they do it for eternity, especially a man, he must have spiritual wives.]

It was also asserted, that Joseph Smith was in alliance with the Indians of the Western Territories; and had obtained over them such a control, that in case of a war, he could command their assistance, to murder his enemies.

Upon the whole, if one half of these reports had been true, the Mormon community must have been the most intolerable collection of rogues ever assembled; or, if one half of them were false, they were the most managed and abused.

Fortunately for the purpose of those who were active in creating excitement, there were some truths which gave countenance to some of these accusations. I apprehend that it was sufficiently proved in a proceeding at Carthage, whilst I was here, that Joseph Smith had sent a band of his followers to Missouri to kidnap two men who were witnesses against a member of his church, then in jail, and about to be tried on a charge of larceny. It was also a notorious fact, that he had assaulted and severely beaten an officer of the county, for an alleged non-performance of his duty, at a time when that officer was just recovering from a severe illness. It is a fact also, that he stood indicted for the crime of perjury, as was alleged, in swearing to an accusation for murder. It is a fact also, that his municipal court, of which he was chief justice, by writ of habeas corpus had frequently discharged individuals accused of high crimes and offenses against the laws of the State; and in some cases had discharged an individual accused of swindling the Government of the United States, and who had been arrested by process of the federal courts. Thereby giving countenance to the report, that he obstructed the administration of justice; and had set up a government at Nauvoo, independent of the laws and government of the State.

This idea was further corroborated in the minds of the people, by the fact that the people of Nauvoo had petitioned the last session of Congress for a territorial government, to be established at Nauvoo, and to be independent of the State government. It was a fact also, that some larcenies and robberies had been committed, and that Mormons had been convicted of the crimes; and that other larcenies had been committed by persons unknown, but suspected to be Mormons. Justice, however, requires me here to say, that I have investigated the charge of promiscuous stealing, and find it to be greatly exaggerated. I could not ascertain that there were a greater proportion of thieves in that community, than in any other of the same number of inhabitants; and perhaps if the city of Nauvoo were compared with St. Louis, or any other Western city, the proportion would not be so great. I think it very probable, however, that the Mormons sometimes erred in protecting members of their community from prosecution and punishment, who were accused of offences, under a belief that the accusation against them, was a persecution of their enemies on account of their religion.

[As to Joseph Smith's attempt a kidnapping. The story is wrong end foremost.
A certain man in Iowa and Col. Levi Williams, kidnapped two men and took them to Missouri, and Joseph Smith, and more than twenty others, tried to get the Iowa man into Nauvoo to explain himself, and they eventually got him, and old Williams was indicted—that is all on that head.]

As to assaulting a sick man, if his excellency looks in the Auditor's office, he will find the whys and the wherefores.

Joseph Smith was never examined in any criminal court as a witness. The story was got up by apostates. The accusation of discharging a swindler from the United States, is entirely incorrect.
The Municipal court did not discharge but dismissed the prisoner, under a rule and recommendation, that he should be taken before Judge Pope, who we have since learned—discharged him.

Petitioning Congress (we think) for a territorial government, or any virtuous project, is as likely to be constitutional, as many of the acts of Illinois. The fact is the Mormons, as a people have not committed a crime; and take them individually, they are more loyal, and less criminal, than any other people.]

I have reason to believe too, that the report of an alliance with the Indians, was a groundless calumny. For, on a late occasion when fifteen or twenty Pawatamie Indians passed Nauvoo in their canoes on their way to their hunting grounds in Iowa territory, it was once asserted, that as many as two hundred Indians had come to the assistance of the Mormons; and were ready to scalp and murder their enemies; and this ridiculous story was greedily swallowed by an excited people.

Another cause of excitement, was a report, industriously circulated and generally believed, that Hyrum Smith, another leader of the Mormon church, had offered a reward for the destruction of the press of the "Warsaw Signal," a newspaper published in the county, and the organ of the opposition to the Mormons.
It was also asserted that the Mormons, scattered through the settlements of the county, had threatened all persons who turned out to assist the constables, with the destruction of their property and the murder of their families, in the absence of their fathers, brothers, and husbands.

But the great cause of popular fury was, that the Mormons at several preceding elections had cast their vote as an unit; thereby making the fact apparent that no one could aspire to the honors or offices of the country, within the sphere of their influence, without their approbation and votes. It appears to be one of the principles by which they insist upon being governed as a community to act as a unit in all matters of government and religion. They express themselves to be fearful that if division should be encouraged in politics, it would soon extend to their religion, and rend their church with scism, and into sects.

This seems to me to be an unfortunate view of the subject, and more unfortunate in practice, as I am well satisfied that it must be the fruitful source of excitement, violence, and mobocracy, whilst it is persisted in. It is indeed unfortunate for their peace, that they do not divide in elections, according to their individual preferences or political principles, like other people.

[The great cause of popular fury, is Mormon unity. This must be truth, and if preaching union is a crime, when religion is connected with it, it will be best to alter the constitution and take away the liberty of conscience, and the right of suffrage; for according to the Governor's views it will bring violence and mobocracy.]

This one principle and practice of theirs, has arrayed against them in deadly hostility, all aspirants for office who are not sure of their support, and all who have been unsuccessful in elections, with all their friends and influence.

These also were the active men in blowing up the fury of the people; in hoping that a popular movement might be set on foot, which would result in the expulsion or extermination of the Mormon voters. For this purpose public meetings had been called; inflammatory speeches had been made; exaggerated and unfounded reports had been extensively circulated; committees had been appointed, and rode night and day to spread the reports and solicit the aid of the neigh-oring counties. And at a public meeting at Warsaw, resolutions were passed to expel or exterminate the Mormon population. This was not however, a movement which was unanimously concurred in. The county contained a goodly number of inhabitants in favor of peace, or who at least desired to be neutral in such a contest. These were stigmatized by the name of "Jack Mormons," and there were not a few of the more furious exciters of the people, who openly expressed their intention to involve them in the common expulsion or extermination.

A system of excitement and agitation was artfully planned and executed with tact. It was planned and executed very much upon the principle adopted by the Jacobins in revolutionary France. It consisted in spreading reports and rumors of the most fearful character. As examples: On the morning before my arrival at Carthage, I was awakened at an early hour, by the frightful report, which was asserted with confidence and apparent consternation, that the Mormons had already commenced the work of burning, destruction and murder; and that every man capable of bearing arms, was instantly wanted at Carthage, for the protection of the country. We lost no time in starting; but when we arrived at Carthage, we could hear no more concerning this story. Again, during the few days that the militia were encamped at Carthage, frequent applications were made to me, to send a force here, and a force there, and a force all about the country to prevent murders, robberies, and larcenies, which it was said, were threatened by the Mormons. No such forces were sent; nor were any such offences committed at that time, except the stealing of some provisions; and there was never the least proof, that this was done by a Mormon. Again, on my late visit to Hancock county I was informed by some of their violent enemies, that the larcenies of the Mormons had become, unusually numerous and insupportable. They indeed admitted that but little had been done in this way in their immediate vicinity.

But they insisted that sixteen horses had been stolen by the Mormons in one night near Lima in the county of Adams. At the close of the expedition, I called at the same town of Lima, and upon enquiry, was told that no horses had been stolen in that neighborhood, but that sixteen horses had been stolen in one night in Hancock county. This last informant being told of the Hancock story, again changed the venue, to another distant settlement in the northern edge of Adams.

[This is a fair statement, and with the exception, of a legal trespass, in winning up the existence of a mob press, the Mormons, as a community, are as innocent of any other crimes charged to them, as the sixteen horse power story.]

As my object in visiting Hancock was expressly to assist in the execution of the laws, and not to violate them, or to witness or permit their violation; as I was convinced that the Mormon leaders had committed a crime in the destruction of the press, and had resisted the execution of the process, I determined to exert the whole force of the State, if necessary, to bring them to justice. But seeing the great excitement in the public mind, and the manifest tendency of this excitement to run into mobocracy, I was of opinion that before I acted, I ought to obtain a pledge from the officers and men to support me in strictly legal measures, and to protect the prisoners in case they surrendered. For I was determined, if possible, that the forms of law should not be made the cat paw of a mob, to seduce these people to a quiet surrender, as the convenient victims of popular fury. I therefore, called together the whole force then assembled at Carthage, and made them an address, explaining to them what I could, and what I could not, legally do;
and also adducing to them various reasons why they as well as the Mormons, should submit to the laws; and why, if they had resolved upon revolutionary proceedings, their purpose should be abandoned. The assembled troops seemed much pleased with the address; and upon its conclusion the officers and men unanimously voted, with acclamation, to sustain me in a strictly legal course, and that the prisoners should be protected from violence. Upon the arrival of additional forces from Warsaw, McDonough and Schuyler, similar addresses were made, with the same result.

It seemed to me that these votes fully authorized me to promise the accused Mormons the protection of the law in case they surrendered. They were accordingly duly informed that if they surrendered they would be protected, and if they did not, the whole force of the State would be called out, if necessary, to compel their submission. A force of ten men was despatched with the constable to make the arrests and to guard the prisoners to Head Quarters.

In the meantime, Joseph Smith, as Lieutenant General of the Nauvoo Legion, had declared martial law in the city;
the Legion was assembled and ordered under arms; the members of it residing in the country, were ordered into town.
The Mormon settlement obeyed the summons of their leader, and marched to his assistance. Nauvoo, was one great mil-

as to claim it of them, we should have several millions worth of property, which has been filched from us by 'military mobs.'

A very responsible duty now devolved upon me, to determine whether I would, as Commander in Chief, be governed by the advice of this majority. I had no hesitation in deciding that I would not; but on the contrary, I ordered the troops to be disbanded, both at Carthage and Warsaw, with the exception of three companies, two of which were retained as a guard to the jail, and the other was retained to accompany me to Nauvoo.

The officers insisted much in council, upon the necessity of marching to that place to search for apparatus to make counterfeit money, and more particularly to terrify the Mormons from attempting any open or secret measures of vengeance against the citizens of the county, who had taken a part against the citizens of the county, who had taken a part against their leaders. To ease their fears on this head, I proposed to them that I would myself proceed to the city, accompanied by a small force; make the proposed search, and deliver an address to the Mormons; and tell them plainly what degree of excitement and hatred prevailed against them in the minds of the whole people; and that if any open or secret violence should be committed on the persons or property of those who had taken part against them, that no one would doubt but that it had been perpetrated by them; and that it would be the sure and certain means of the destruction of their city and the extermination of their people.

I ordered two companies under the command of Captain B. F. Smith, of the Carthage Greys to guard the jail. In selecting these companies and particularly the company of the Carthage Greys, for this service, I have been subjected to some censure. It has been said that this company had already been guilty of mutiny, and had been ordered to be arrested, whilst in the encampment at Carthage; and that they and their officers were the deadly enemies of the prisoners. Indeed it would have been difficult to find friends of the prisoners, under my command, unless I had called in the Mormons as a guard; and this, I was satisfied, would have led to the immediate war, and the sure death of the prisoners.

It is true that this company had behaved badly towards the Brigadier General in command, on the occasion when the prisoners were shown along the line of the McDonough Militia. This company had been ordered as a guard. They were under the belief that the prisoners who were arrested for a capital offence, were shown to the troops in a kind of triumph; and that they had been called on as a triumphal escort to grace the procession. They also, entertained a very bad feeling towards the Brigadier General who commanded their service on the occasion. The truth is, however, that this company was never ordered to be arrested; that the Smiths were not shown to the McDonough troops, as a mark of honor and triumph, but were shown to them at the urgent request of the troops themselves, to gratify their curiosity in beholding persons who had made themselves so notorious in the country.

When the Carthage Greys ascertained what was the true motive in showing the prisoners to the troops, they were perfectly satisfied. All due atonement was made on their part, for their conduct to the Brigadier General, and they cheerfully returned to their duty.

Although I knew that this company were the enemies of the Smiths, yet I had confidence in their loyalty and integrity; because their Captain was universally spoken of as a most respectable citizen, and honorable man. The company itself, was an old independent company, well armed, uniformed and drilled; and the members of it were the elite of the militia of the country. I relied upon this company especially, because it was an independent company, for a long time instructed and practised in military discipline and subordination. I also had their word and honor, officers and men, to do their duty according to law. Besides all this the officers and most of the men resided in Carthage; in the near vicinity of Nauvoo; and, as I thought must know that they would make themselves and their property, convenient and conspicuous marks of Mormon vengeance, in case they were guilty of treachery.

I had at first intended to select a guard from the county of McDonough, but the militia of that county were very much dissatisfied to remain; their crops were suffering at home; they were in a perfect fever to be discharged—and I was destitute of provisions to supply them for more than a few days. They were far from home, where they could not supply themselves. Whilst the Carthage company could board at their own houses, and would be put to little inconvenience in comparison.

What gave me greater confidence in the selection of this company as a prudent measure, was that the selection was first suggested and urged by the Brigadier General in command, who was well known to be utterly hostile to all mobocracy and violence towards the prisoners; and who was openly charged by the violent party, with being on the side of the Mormons. At any rate, I knew that the jail would have to be guarded as long as the prisoners were confined—that an imprisonment for treason might last the whole summer and the greater part of the autumn, before a trial could be had in the circuit court—that it would be utterly impossible in the circumstances of the country, for so long a time, and that a time must surely come, when the duty of guarding a jail would necessarily devolve on the citizens of the county.

It is true also, that at this time I had not believed or suspected, that any attack was to be made upon the prisoners in jail. It is true that I was aware that a great deal of hatred existed against them, and that there were those who would do them an injury if they could. I had heard of some threats being made, but none of an attack upon the prisoners whilst in jail. These threats seemed to be made by individuals, not acting in concert. They were no more than the bluster which might have been expected; and furnished no indication of numbers combining for this or any other purpose.

I must here be permitted to say, also, that frequent appeals had been made to me to make a clean and thorough work of the matter by exterminating the Mormons, or expelling them from the State. An opinion seemed generally to prevail, that the sanction of Executive authority would legalize the act; and all persons of any influence, authority, or note, who conversed with me on the subject, frequently and repeatedly stated their total unwillingness to act without any direction; or in any mode except according to law.

[The Governor ought to expose the names of those persons who wished to have him legalize the mighty or bloody deed of expelling, or exterminating the Mormons; it would exhibit the necessities, before the fact, to the Smiths' murders; and it might give a clue to that black hearted villain, Davis of Alton, who knew so well what the cannon were fired for at Warsaw.]

This was a circumstance well calculated to conceal from me, the secret machinations on foot. I had constantly contended against violent measures, and so had the Brigadier General in command; and I am convinced that unusual pains were taken to conceal from both of us, the secret measures resolved upon. It has been said, however, that some person named Williams, in a public speech at Carthage, called for volunteers to murder the Smiths; and that I ought to have had him arrested. Whether such a speech was really made or not, is yet unknown to me. I have heard the report of it for the first time, within the last few weeks.

Having ordered the guard, and discharged the residue of the militia, I immediately departed for Nauvoo, eighteen miles distant, accompanied by Col. Buckmaster (General), and Capt. Dunn's Company of dragoons.

After we had proceeded four miles, Col. Buckmaster intimated to me a suspicion, that an attack would be made on the jail. He stated the matter as a mere suspicion, arising from having seen two persons converse together at Carthage, with some air of mystery. I for myself, entertained no suspicion of such an attack—at any rate none before the next day in the afternoon. Because it was notorious, that we had departed from Carthage, with the declared intention of being absent at least two days: I could not believe, that any person would attack the jail, whilst we were in Nauvoo—and thereby expose my life, and the lives of my companions, to the sudden vengeance of the Mormons, upon hearing of the death of their leaders. Nevertheless, acting upon the principle of providing against mere possibilities, I sent back one of the company, with a special order to Capt. Smith, to guard the jail strictly and at the peril of his life, until my return.

We proceeded on our journey four miles further. By this time I had convinced myself that no attack would be made on the jail that day or night. I supposed that a regard for my safety, and the safety of my companions, would prevent an attack, until those to be engaged in it, could be assured of our departure from Nauvoo. I still think, that this ought to have appeared to me, to be a reasonable supposition.

I therefore, determined at this point, to omit making the search for counterfeit money in Nauvoo—and defer, an examination of all the other abominations charged on that people, in order to return to Carthage that same night, that I might be on the ground in person, in time to prevent an attack on the jail, if any had been meditated. To this end we called a half—the baggage wagons were ordered to remain where they were, until towards evening—and then return to Carthage.

Having made these arrangements, we proceeded on our march, and arrived at Nauvoo about four o'clock of the afternoon, of the 27th day of June. As soon as notice could be given, a crowd of the citizens assembled, to hear an address, which I proposed to deliver them. The number present, has been variously estimated, from one to five thousand.

In this address I stated to them how, and in what, their functionaries, had violated the laws. Also the many scandalous reports in circulation against them, and that those reports, whether true or false, were generally believed by the people. I distinctly stated to them the amount of hatred and prejudice, which prevailed every where against them, and the causes of it, at length.

I also told them plainly and emphatically, that if any vengeance should be attempted openly or secretly against the persons or property of the citizens, who had taken part against their leaders, that the public hatred and excitement was such, that thousands would assemble for the total destruction of their city—and the extermination of their people—and that no power in the State would be able to prevent it. During this address, some impatience and resentment were manifested by the Mormons, at the recital of the various reports enumerated concerning them—which they strenuously and indignantly denied to be true. They claimed to be a law abiding people; and insisted, that as they looked to the law alone for their protection, so were they careful themselves to observe its provisions. Upon the conclusion of this address, I proposed to take a vote on the question whether they would strictly observe laws, even in opposition to their prophet and leaders. The vote was unanimous, in favor of this proposition.

A short time before sundown we departed on our return to Carthage. When we had proceeded two miles, we met two individuals, one of them a Mormon, who informed us, that the Smiths had been assassinated in jail, about five or six o'clock of that day. The intelligence seemed to strike every one with a kind of dumbness. As to myself, it was perfectly astounding—and I anticipated the very worst consequences from it. The Mormons had been represented to me as a lawless, infatuated, and fanatical people, not governed by the ordinary motives, which influence the majority of mankind. If so, most likely, an exterminating war would ensue, and the whole land would be covered with desolation.

Acting upon this supposition, it was my duty to provide as well as I could for the event. I therefore, ordered the two messengers into custody, and to be returned with us, to Carthage. This was done, to get time to make such arrangement as could be made and to prevent any sudden explosion of Mormon excitement, before they could be written to, by their friends at Carthage. I also, despatched messengers to Warsaw, to advise the citizens of the event. But the people there, knew all about the matter, before my messengers arrived. They, like myself, anticipated a general attack all over the country. The women and children were moved across the river—and a committee was despatched that night to Quincy for assistance. The next morning by day light, the ringing of all the bells in the city announced a public meeting. The people assembled in great numbers, at an early hour. The Warsaw committee stated to the meeting, that a party of Mormons, had attempted to rescue the Smiths out of jail—that a party of Missourians and others, had killed the prisoners to prevent their escape—that the Governor and his party were at Nauvoo at the time, when intelligence of the fact was brought there, that they had been attacked by the Nauvoo Legion, and had retreated to a house, where they were then closely besieged. That the Governor had sent out word that he could maintain his position for two days, and would be certain to be massacred, if assistance did not arrive by the end of that time. It is unnecessary to say, that this entire story was a fabrication. It was of a piece with the other reports, put into circulation by the anti-Mormon party, to influence the public mind, and call the people to their assistance. The effect of it however, was, that by ten o'clock, on the 28th of June, between two and three hundred men, from Quincy, under the command of Major Flood, embarked on board of a steamboat for Nauvoo, to assist in raising the siege, as they honestly believed.

As for myself, I was well convinced that those, whoever they were, who assassinated the Smiths, meditated in turn, my assassination by the Mormons. The very circumstances of the case, fully corroborated the information which I afterwards received, that upon consultation of the assassins, it was agreed amongst them, that the murder must be committed whilst the Governor was at Nauvoo; that the Mormons would naturally suppose that he had planned it; and that in the first outpouring of their indignation, they would assassinate him by way of retaliation. And that thus they would get clear of the Smiths and the Governor, all at once. They also supposed, that if they could so contrive the matter, as to have the Governor of the State assassinated by the Mormons, the public excitement would be greatly increased against them, and would result in their expulsion from the State at least.

Upon the first hearing of the assassination of the Smiths, I was sensible that my command was at an end; that my destruction was meditated as well as that of the Mormons; and that I could not reasonably confide longer, in one party or in the other.

The question then arose, what would be proper to be done. A war was expected by every body. I was desirous of preserving the peace. I could not put myself at the head of the Mormon force, with any kind of propriety; and without exciting greater odium against them, than already existed. I could not put myself at the head of the anti-Mormon party, because they had justly forfeited my confidence, and my command over them, was put an end to, by mutiny and treachery. I could not put myself at the head of either of these forces; because both of them in turn, had violated the law; and as I then believed, meditated further aggression. It appeared to me that if a war ensued, I ought to have a force in which I could confide, and that I ought to establish my Headquarters at a place where I could learn the truth, as to what was going on.

For these reasons, I determined to proceed to Quincy, a place favorably situated for receiving the earliest intelligence; for issuing orders to raise an army if necessary, and for providing supplies for its subsistence. But first, I determined to return back to Carthage, and make such arrangements as could be made for the pacification and defence of the country. When I arrived there, about 10 o'clock at night, I found that great consternation prevailed. Many of the citizens had departed with their families, and others were preparing to go. As the country was utterly defenceless, this seemed to me to be a proper precaution. One company of the guard, stationed by me to guard the jail, had disbanded and gone home before the jail was attacked; and many of the Carthage Greys departed soon afterwards.

Gen. Deming volunteered to remain, in command of a few men, with orders to guard the town, observe the progress of events, and to retreat if menaced by a superior force.

Here also, I found Doct. Richards and Mr. Taylor, two of the principal Mormon leaders, who had been in the jail, at the time of the attack; and who voluntarily addressed, a most pacific exhortation to their fellow citizens, which was the first intelligence of the murder, which was received at Nauvoo. I think it very probable, that the subsequent good conduct of the Mormons, is attributable to the arrest of the messengers, and to the influence of this letter.

[His excellency is mistaken. "The good conduct of the Mormons," is the effect of religion, virtue, and republican principles. A messenger came to Nauvoo in the night and gave the dreadful news, and a few principal men resolved that his excellency and the laws—might clear the State from the honor or disgrace of that murder, and all the Mormons do still abide by that resolution.]

Having made these arrangements I departed for Quincy. On my road thither, I heard of a body of militia marching from Schuyler, and another from Brown. It appears that orders had been sent out in my name, but without my knowledge, for the militia of Schuyler county, I immediately countermanded their march, and they returned to their homes. When I arrived at Columbus, I found that Captain Jones had raised a company of one hundred men, who were just ready to march. By my advice, they postponed their march, to await for their orders. I arrived at Quincy on the morning of the 29th of June, about 8 o'clock; and immediately issued orders, provisionally, for raising an imposing force, when it should seem to be necessary.

I remained at Quincy for about one month, during which time a committee from Warsaw, waited on me, with a written request that I would expel the Mormons from the State. It seemed, that it never occurred to these gentlemen, that I had no power to exile a citizen; but they insisted that if this were not done, their party would abandon the State. This requisition was refused of course.

During this time also, with the view of saving expense, keeping the peace, and having a force which would be removed from the prejudices in the country, I made application to the United States for five hundred men of the regular army, to be stationed for a time, in Hancock county, which was subsequently refused.

During this time, also, I had secret agents amongst all parties, observing their movements; and was accurately informed of every thing which was meditated on both sides. It appeared that the anti-Mormon party, had not relinquished their hostility to the Mormons; nor their determination to expel them; but had deferred further operations until the fall season, after they had finished their summer's work on their farms.

I cannot lay before you the estimates of the costs of these proceedings. I do not know that any estimates have ever been made by the proper officers; and certainly none have been returned to me, except for the transportation of the Quincy Militia to Warsaw and back. And I do not know that any claim will be made by the men.

I omit to say any thing of the manner of the murder of the Smiths; or of the persons by whom the murder was committed, because several persons are under indictment for their supposed share in the act; and it is not proper that I should say any thing, which might, possibly prejudice a fair and impartial trial.

It has always appeared to me, however, that the person who committed the deed, ought to be made to answer for their crime. The honor of the State and the supremacy of the laws seemed to be compromised; a trial ought to be insisted on; exacted in other cases; and if the accused, have all the matters of defence and justification on their side, which they claim, they will be able to show them to the court.

During the latter part of August and the first of September last, I observed that the anti-Mormon paper, in Hancock county, renewed its attacks on the Mormons; every number of which, groined with charges of licentious and robberies and meditated outrages. By this fact, connected with my previous information, I was certain that the time was approaching, when a new attempt was to be made to expel the Mormons. In a short time afterwards, I ascertained that the officers of the militia in Hancock county, had appointed a grand military parade, at Warsaw to come off on the 26th day of October. Circulars were printed, signed by these officers, and extensively circulated in Iowa Territory, in the State of Missouri; and in the neighboring counties; inviting the militia in all those parts, to attend the parade; and to come prepared for a six days' encampment.

It was also extensively given out, that there was to be a grand wolf hunt; and that the Mormons and Jack-Mormons, were the wolves to be hunted. A large number engaged in getting up this movement, openly stated, the object of it was to make war on the Mormons.

I could not hesitate, as to what duty required. The State had already been in danger of disgrace by a treacherous and cowardly murder. The Mormons, had been peaceable, submissive and quiet, ever since the death of the Smiths; and contrary to general expectation instead of attempting to avenge themselves, either openly or secretly, had quietly, and patiently submitted to the slow operation of the law, to redress their grievances.

They were human beings; and citizens of the State. They had not been disfranchised by law, and were constitutionally entitled to protection.

[The Mormons are HUMAN BEINGS! This is candid, and we hope it will entitle them hereafter to "human rights."]

From respect to the prejudices of my fellow-citizens, I declined to authorize the legion to be called out, to suppress disturbances; but immediately issued a call for volunteers from the State militia. The call was answered by four or five hundred men. I requested Gen. Hardin, to take the command. He did so with alacrity; thereby exhibiting a patriotic devotion, in maintaining the supremacy of the law, even against the advice of his personal and political friends.

We marched with as much alacrity as possible, and arrived in Hancock county, on the 25th day of October. The malcontents abandoned their design, and I believe all the leaders of it fled to Missouri. The Carthage Greys fled almost in a body; and every one fled who, from his previous conduct, supposed himself obnoxious as a leader.

During our presence in the county writs were taken out against three persons charged with the murder of the Smiths. They also fled to Missouri. As for myself, although I was determined from the first, for the honor of the State, that this murder should be fully enquired into; and some of the guilty, brought to trial; yet, I was never anxious to proceed with the full rigor of the law. I always insisted that the prosecutions should be limited to a few individuals, and I was utterly opposed to all such unnecessary harshness, as would excite sympathy in their favor.

For this reason, I consented to advise the prosecuting attorney, to admit them to bail and to agree to a continuance of the cause, if desired, by the defendants. Upon this arrangement being made, to which I was also advised by Gen. Hardin and Col. Baker, the persons accused surrendering themselves to the Sheriff.

[Bail for murder! why was not the Smiths allowed bail?]

The militia were disbanded next morning and returned home, after a campaign of about thirteen days.

The good effect of this expedition is that in my opinion it has saved much bloodshed; and has prevented a more extensive contest than many persons anticipated, all over that part of the country; to which, this people, from political considerations, growing out of an excited election then pending, were about to be made parties.

It also, showed to both parties in Hancock, that the people at a distance would not be quiet spectators of such a contest; but would rally around their constituted authorities to put it down. This is a fact which one of the parties, before the experiment was tried, would not believe. They supposed that the Mormons, were so odious and unpopular, that they might be massacred with impunity; that the people, generally would not have the will, nor the Government the power, to interfere to prevent it.

I have not yet received the estimates of the costs of this expedition; but I am informed by letter from Maj. W. B. Warren, Aid de Camp to Gen. Hardin, who is preparing them, that the whole cost, will not exceed eight or nine thousand dollars. When they are received, they will be laid before you.

I have extended this account. I am afraid too far; and yet there is much to say, calculated to throw light, on these proceedings.

As to the Nauvoo charters, about which so much has been said, among the people, the privileges therein contained, were much abused during the lifetime of the Smiths. Ordinances have been passed, inflicting a different and more severe punishment, upon well defined crimes than what is provided by the laws of the State. The city council passed an ordinance, that no arrest should be made in the city, unless the writ for that purpose, should be first, approved and endorsed by the Mayor. They also, provided for a severe punishment, against any officer attempting such arrest, without this approval; and enacted that the Governor of the State should not pardon the offender, except by consent of the Mayor. And they also provided that the Municipal court, should have a general power to issue writs of habeas corpus. These last ordinances are alleged to have been passed to protect their citizens, from the continued persecutions of the Missourians. They may have been useful, in the lifetime of the Smiths to protect them; but since their death, there has been, and most probably will be, no call for the exercise of such usurped authority.

[Every scarecrow, or stratagem ordinance to save the Governor trouble and expense, were repealed as soon as we found that his excellency meant to execute as much mercy and law to Mormons as other people. We are willing to measure all our city ordinances by the Constitutions of the United States and State of Illinois.]

The Nauvoo Legion also, has been a great offence to the people of this State. It has been represented to be a standing army of four or five thousand, well drilled, and well disciplined forces. This legion was called out for review, during my last visit there. I do not pretend myself to be skilled in military science; but it was the decided opinion of all the field officers, who accompanied me, that this legion is in no-wise superior to the common militia, and that in fact they were inferior to most of the militia in the State.

I would recommend that the Legion be repealed; and that Nauvoo, should be reformed into a brigade by itself. It will be impossible for the Nauvoo militia and that of the surrounding country, to act together in peace for some time to come.

[As to the repeal of the charter, we will tell a story.]

Mr. Goodwin bought a section of land, of Lawyer Illinois, and received a full covenant deed for the same, and commenced improvements. After Mr. Goodwin had expended some millions in public buildings, public streets, public works, and sold much of his land to private companies and individuals;—the price had risen from ten to one thousand dollars per acre, Lawyer Illinois begins to talk of ruing the bargain, and says he will take up the old deed and give him a quit claim; and some of the old Lawyer's prodigal sons were hot to get up the deed any how, so that their young cattle could go to drink in the Mississippi, and for other purposes, but Mr. Goodwin said if you take my deed as it were a child's bargain, before all these innocent people shall be cheated out of millions, I will appeal it to a court of justice where it can be proved whether you are a rogue or a baby.]

I see very strong indications on the part of both Houses, to make an entire repeal of all these charters. I do not see how, ten or twelve thousand people, can well do in a city, without some chartered privileges. I would advise, that all the obnoxious parts of these charters should be repealed; and an ample provision made against any future abuses of power, thus leaving all the really useful parts of their city charter; and placing them upon grounds of some equity with other citizens. This is republican and cannot be denied without injustice.

I am very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
THOMAS FORD,
Springfield, December 17, 1844.

REMARKABLE ROCK.
One of the most remarkable rocks of which we have any knowledge, has been lately discovered in the middle of that great inland sea, Lake Superior. By a gentleman who has recently returned to this city from Copper Harbor, we learn that a shaft of Trappe rock has very lately been discovered, rising in the lake from 150 to 200 miles from land, and ascending above the surface of the water, a distance of not above four feet. What renders it more extraordinary is, that it stands alone, and all around it, so far as examinations have been made, no bottom has been made by any of the lead lines used on the lake, and the point of the rock itself does not exceed an area of more than six or seven feet square, and as far as observations of it have extended, it does not appear to enlarge in size as it descends. It has already, he states, become a source of alarm to the mariners who navigate the lake, who take special care in passing, to give it as wide a berth as possible.

It is too small—too remote and dangerous to admit of a light, and therefore, its removal has become a matter of serious importance, and will doubtless pertain to the duty of government. A single blot from a bore of sufficient depth would probably do it, but the surface of the rock being so near that of the water, and the space so narrow as to forbid any regular lodgement for workmen, they would have to be attended constantly by a vessel of sufficient size to resist any sudden storm on the lake, which would also have to be kept constantly under way, as no harbor or even bottom for an anchor is within a day's sail.

The discoverers relate that the rock appears to be a place of general resort for the Salmon Trout of those lakes, as they found them there in almost incalculable number, having, during their short stay, caught several barrels with no other instrument than a rod of iron, on one end of which they turned a hook. They tried with all their lines on board, for sound- ing, immediately, around the rock, but without success. Such a vast column, could it be exposed to view, would laugh into ridicule Cleopatra's needle, Pompey's pillar, the colossus of Rhodes or any pro- duction of ancient or modern art. —Pitts- burgh American.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 1, 1845.

67 Elias Smith, Esq., has been ap- pointed Post Master of this City, in place of Geo. W. Robinson, resigned.

67 Howard Egan, has been ap- pointed by the Circuit Court, Conser- vator of Joel Bullard, deranged.

67 A Trades meeting was held at Gulley's store on the 31st Dec., and addressed by several gentlemen in a very appropriate manner, after which the following resolution was passed by a unanimous vote:

Resolved, That, instead of commen- cing business under any charter of Il- linois, we will unite our efforts in all manufacturing and mechanical labors in common co-partnerships, or private firm, according to law.

A. Cutler, J. Durfee, D. M. Rep- sher, Wm. Hewitt, and O. Pratt, were appointed a committee with Messrs. Ripley & Sherwood, surveyors, to sur- vey the contemplated location in the Mississippi, and report the cost of the Dam, &c. &c. A letter was read by Mr. Scovill, from Peterboro', N. H., on the subject of machinery for a Cotton Factory, &c. Adjourned till Tues- day, January 7.

JOHN TAYLOR, Ch'n.

W. W. Phelps, Sec'y.

P. S.—A very neat specimen of Willow Buckets, made in this City, was exhibited by Edw. Hunter, and a specimen of Worsted Girting, by S. Roberts. These specimens praised themselves. So the manufacturing has begun: go ahead.

SEVENTIES LIBRARY.

Among the improvements going forward in this city, none merit higher praise, than the Seventies' Library. The concern has been com- menced on a footing as ample, broad enough to embrace the arts and sciences, every where, so that the Seventies' while travelling over the face of the globe, as the Lord's, Regular Soldiers, can gather all the curious things, both natural and artificial, with all the knowledge, inven- tions, and wonderful specimens of genius that have been gracing the world for almost six thousand years.

Ten years ago but one Twenty, and now "four- teen centuries" and the foundation for the best library in the world! It looks like old times, when they had "Kiriah Sapher," the city of books.

••• We were surprised to see, in the Prophet an intimation of negligence on our part, in forwarding our papers. Every number of our pa- pers, has been regularly mailed, and if any pa- per has failed to reach New York, the fault is in the Post Office, not in us. There is no dis- tinction in such intimation; in fact, as Elder Pratt has taken the charge of matters and affairs in the east, we shall look for a more exalted state of reciprocity, calculated, as every move and idea of a saint should be, to honor those in authority and spread union with the balmy breeze of love and friendship.

Our utmost exertions, are unceasing, not only to give New York, but the world, as far as we have opportunity, the first and best tidings that is worthy to go forth from the mouth of the city of the heritage of God.

BEWARE OF DECEPTION!!

Tidings have just reached us here that certain men in the eastern countries, Ohio and other places, professing to be Latter-day Saints, are very busy in selling Illinois lands, and exchange- ing them for real estate and other property in the east. I would inform all the saints every where, that this operation is a field for greater and more extensive fraud than any other with which I am acquainted.

You may give some irresponsible, worthless creature a clear title to your homes in the east, with the expectation of finding good land here in exchange with a good title &c. &c. But when you come, you may find your land in a swamp, in the middle of an extensive prairie, ten or fifteen miles from any timber. I will venture to give it as my opinion that those mis- erable speculators are knaves and villains; pro- fessing to be saints, and trying to help the church and build-up the cause, when they have no license from the authorities of the church here.

I say again, beware of those "wolves in sheep's clothing." Whenever any such operation is deemed beneficial to the saints by those who know and understand these things, some compe- tent responsible person will be sent, duly au- thorized with documents from under the hands of the Twelve that reside in this city. Other- wise you may find to your sorrow that you will have to pay for your lands twice over before you get good titles. I therefore warn you, as a watchman of your interests, to hold on upon your homes until you know certainly what you are doing.

ORSON HYDE.

Prophet please copy.

Last of the Poles.—It is proposed in Rochester, N. Y., that the ash and hick- ory poles be taken down, and the wood distributed among the poor. The num- ber was so great in that town, that the Mayor, some time ago, prohibited any more from being erected. The poor will be likely to benefit by the proposition.

The New York morning News says there is an old lady in Morris county, New Jersey, who had a 'presentiment' when General Harrison's election was first announced, that he would die within a month of his inauguration. The same wise seer predicts that Mr. Polk, will not live to be inaugurated—and what is more, there are folks, we hear, who believe it!

The first Wedding.—Major Noah thu- plausibly and philosophically discourses upon the 'first wedding.' He says:—

'We like short courtships, and in his, Adam acted like a sensible man—he fell asleep a bachelor, and awoke to find him- self a married man. He appears to have papped the question almost immediately after meeting Eve, and she, with- out any flirtation or shyness, gave him a kiss and herself. Of that first kiss in this world, we have had, however, our own thoughts, and sometimes in a poetical mood have wished we were the man 'who did it.' But the deed is done—the choice was Adam's and he improved it. We like the notion of getting married in a garden. It is in good taste. We like a private wedding. Adam's was private. No envious beaux were there; no croak- ing old maids; no chattering aunts, and grumbling grandmothers. The birds of heaven were the witnesses, and the glad sky flung its light upon the scene.'

camp, strictly guarded and watched; and no ingress or egress was allowed, except upon the strictest examination. An instance which came to my knowledge, a citizen of McDonough, who happened to be in the city, was denied the privilege of returning, until he made oath that he did not belong to the party at Carthage; that he would return home without calling at Carthage; and that he would give no information of the movements of the Mormons.

Mob-party at Carthage.
[Martial law and one great Military camp, truly but called out to defend the city against the aggressions of the "Mobocracy" the Governor so much dreaded, as well as the Mormons. But really was there any more Martial Law at Nauvoo, than at Carthage!]

However, upon the arrival of the constable and guard the Mayor and Common Council at once signified their willingness to surrender, and stated their readiness to proceed to Carthage next morning at eight o'clock. Martial law had previously been abolished. The hour of eight o'clock came, and the accused failed to make their appearance. The constable made no effort to arrest any of them; nor would he or the guard delay their departure one minute beyond the time, to see whether an arrest could be made. Upon their return he reported that they had been informed that the accused had fled and could not be found.

I immediately proposed to a council of officers, to march into Nauvoo with the small force then under my command; but the officers were of opinion that it was too small, and many of them insisted upon a further call of the Militia. Upon reflection I was of opinion that the officers were right in the estimate of our force; and the project for immediate action was abandoned. I was soon informed however, of the conduct of the constable and guard, and then I was perfectly satisfied that a most base fraud had been attempted; that in fact it was feared, that the Mormons would submit; and thereby entitle themselves to the protection of the law. It was very apparent that many of the bustling active spirits, were afraid that there would be no occasion for calling out an overwhelming militia force; for marching it into Nauvoo; for probable mutiny when there; and for the extermination of the Mormon race. It appeared that the constable and the escort were fully in the secret, and acted well their part to promote the conspiracy.

Seeing this to be the state of the case, I delayed any further call of the militia, to give the accused another opportunity to surrender; for indeed I was most anxious to avoid a general call for the militia at that critical season of the year. The whole spring season preceding, had been unusually wet. No ploughing of corn had been done, and but very little planting. The season had just changed to be suitable for ploughing. The crops which had been planted, were universally suffering; and the loss of two weeks, or even of one, at that time, was likely to produce a general famine all over the country. The wheat harvest was also approaching; and if we got into a war there was no forecasting when it would end; or when the militia could safely be discharged. In addition to these considerations; all the grist mills in that section of the country had been swept away, or disabled, by the high waters; leaving the inhabitants almost without meal or flour; and making it impossible then to procure provisions by impressment or otherwise, for the sustenance of any considerable force. I was totally without funds belonging to the State, with which to purchase at more distant markets; and there was no manner of certainty that such purchases could have been made on the credit of the State, considering the embarrassed condition of the treasury. I was also desirous of avoiding the expense of a great armament; and of a war, the duration and expense of which, could not be foreseen; if they could be honorably avoided.

In the meantime I made a requisition upon the officers of the Nauvoo Legion, for the surrender of the State arms in their possession. It appears that there is no evidence in the Quarter Master General's Office, of the number and description of the arms with which the Legion had been furnished. On this subject I applied to Gen. Wilson Law, for information. He had lately been the Major General of the Legion. He had seceded from the Mormon party; was one of the owners of the proscribed press; had left the city, as he said, in fear of his life; and was one of the party asking for justice against its constituted authorities. He was interested to exaggerate the number of arms, rather than to place it at too low an estimate. From his information I learned that the Legion had received three pieces of cannon and about two hundred and fifty stand of small arms and their accoutrements. Of these, the three pieces of cannon and two hundred and twenty stand of small arms, were surrendered. These arms were demanded because the Legion was illegally used in the destruction of the press, and in enforcing martial law in the city, in open resistance to legal process, and the posse comitatus.

[A moment's reflection and the character would inform his excellency that it remains to be proved whether State arms or any arms were used to enforce the ordinances, or martial law, no process was ever resisted; but the municipal court, which his excellency had the honor to acknowledge in the case of the Missouri Sheriff Reynolds, as legal, performed the same act to a county constable, and we should like to know which opinion of his excellency is entitled to the most weight.]

I demanded the surrender also on account of the great prejudice and excitement which the possession of these arms by the Mormons, had already kindled in the minds of the people. A large portion of the people, by pure misrepresentation, had been made to believe that the Legion had received of the State as many as thirty pieces of artillery, and five or six thousand stand of small arms, which in all probability would soon be wielded for the conquest of the country; and for their subjection to Mormon domination. I was of opinion that the removal of these arms would tend much to allay this excitement and prejudice; and in point of fact, although wearing a severe aspect, would be an act of real kindness to the Mormons themselves.

On the 23d or 24th day of June, Joseph Smith, the Mayor of Nauvoo, together with his brother Hyrum and all the members of the council, and all others demanded, came into Carthage and surrendered themselves prisoners to the constable, on the charge of riot. They all voluntarily entered into a recognizance before the Justice of the Peace for their appearance at court to answer the charge. And all of them were discharged from custody, except Joseph and Hyrum Smith, against whom the Magistrate had issued a new writ, on a complaint for treason. They were immediately arrested by the constable on this new charge, and retained in his custody, to answer it.

The over act of treason charged against them, consisted in the alleged levying of war against the State by declaring martial law in Nauvoo, and in ordering out the Legion to resist the posse comitatus. Their actual guiltiness of the charge, would depend upon circumstances. If their opponents had been seeking to put the law in force in good faith, and nothing more, then an array of a military force in open resistance to the posse comitatus and the militia of the State, most probably would have amounted to treason. But if those opponents merely intended to use the process of the law, the militia of the State, and the posse comitatus, as cats paws to compass the possession of their persons for the purpose of murdering them afterwards, as the sequel demonstrated the fact to be, it might well be doubted whether they were guilty of treason.

Soon after the surrender of the Smiths at their request I despatched Captain Singleton with his company from Brown county, to Nauvoo, to guard the town—and I authorized him to take command of the Legion. He reported to me afterwards, that he called out the Legion for inspection—and that upon two hours' notice, two thousand of them assembled, all of them armed—and this after the public arms had been taken away from them. So, it appears that they have a sufficiency of private arms, for any reasonable purpose.

After the Smiths had been arrested on the new charge of treason, the Justice of the peace postponed the examination, because neither of the parties were prepared with their witnesses for trial. In the meantime he committed them to the jail of the county, for greater security.

The statement as published by H. T. Reed Esq., of Fort Madison, tells the whole story of commitment.

In all this matter the justice of the peace and constable, though humble in office, were acting in a high and independent capacity, far beyond any legal power in me to control. I considered that the executive power could only be called in to assist, and not to dictate or control their action; that in the humble sphere of their duties, they were as independent, and clothed with as high authority by the law, as the Executive Department; and that my province was, simply, to aid them with the force of the State. It is true, that so far as I could prevail on them by advice, I endeavored to do so. The prisoners were not in military custody, or prisoners of war; and I could no more legally control these officers, than I could the superior courts of justice.

Some persons have supposed, that I ought to have had them sent to some more distant and friendly part of the State for confinement and trial; and that I ought to have searched them for concealed arms; but these surmises and suppositions are readily disposed of, by the fact that they were not my prisoners; but were the prisoners of the constable and jailer, under the direction of the Justice of the peace.

The jail in which they were confined is a considerable stone building, containing a residence for the jailor, cells for the close and secure confinement of prisoners, and one large room, not so strong, but more airy and comfortable than the cells. They were put into the cells by the jailor; but upon their remonstrance and request, and by my advice, they were transferred to the larger room; and there they remained until the final catastrophe. Neither they nor I, seriously apprehended an attack on the jail, through the guard stationed to protect it. Nor did I apprehend the least danger on their part to escape. For I was very sure that any such attempt would have been the signal of their immediate death. Indeed, if they had escaped, it would have been fortunate for the purposes of those who were anxious for the expulsion of the Mormon population. For the great body of that people would most assuredly have followed their prophet and principal leaders, as they did in their flight from Missouri. Since their death, no one has arisen of influence enough to lead them in a similar manner.

The force assembled at Carthage amounted to twelve or thirteen hundred men; and it was calculated that four or five hundred more, were assembled at Warsaw. Nearly all that portion resident in Hancock, were anxious to be marched into Nauvoo. This measure was supposed to be necessary, to search for counterfeit money, and the apparatus to make it; and also to strike a salutary terror into the Mormon people, by an exhibition of the force of the State; and thereby prevent future outrages, murders, robberies, burnings and the like, apprehended as the effect of Mormon vengeance, on those who had taken a part against them. On my part, at one time this arrangement was agreed to. The morning of the 27th day of June was appointed for the march; and Golden's point, near the Mississippi river, and about equidistant from Nauvoo and Warsaw, was selected as the place of rendezvous. I had determined to prevail on the Justice to bring out his prisoners, and take them along. A council of officers, however, determined that this would be highly inexpedient and dangerous; and offered such substantial reasons for their opinions, as induced me to change my resolution.

Two or three days' preparation had been made for this expedition. I observed that some of the people became more and more excited and inflammatory, the further the preparations were advanced. Occasional threats came to my ears, of destroying the city and murdering or expelling the inhabitants.

I had no objection to ease the terrors of the people by such a display of force; and was most anxious also to search for the alleged apparatus for making counterfeit money; and in fact to enquire into all the charges against that people, if I could have been assured of my command against mutiny and insubordination. But gradually I learned to my entire satisfaction, that there was a plan to get the troops into Nauvoo, and then to begin the war, probably by some of our own party, or some of the seceding Mormons, taking advantage of the night, to fire on our own force, and then laying it to the Mormons. I was satisfied that there were those amongst us fully capable of such an act; hoping that in the alarm, haste, and confusion of a Militia camp, the truth could not be discovered, and that it might lead to the desired collision.

I had many objections to be made the dupe of any such, or similar artifice. I was openly and boldly opposed to any attack on the city, unless it should become necessary, to arrest prisoners legally charged and demanded. Indeed if any one will reflect upon the number of women, inoffensive young persons, and innocent children, which must be contained in such a city, of twelve or fifteen thousand inhabitants, it would seem to me his heart would relent and rebel against such violent resolutions. Nothing but the most blinded and obdurate fury, could induce a person even if he had the power to the willfulness of driving such persons, bare and houseless, on to the prairies, to starve, suffer, and even steal, as they must have done for subsistence. No one who has children of his own, could think of it for a moment.

Besides this, if we had been ever so much disposed to commit such an act of wickedness, we evidently had not the power to do it. I was well assured that the Mormons, at a short notice, could muster as many as two or three thousand well armed men. We had not more than seventeen hundred; with three pieces of cannon, and about twelve hundred stand of arms. We had provisions for two days only; and would be compelled to disband at the end of that time. To think of beginning a war under such circumstances, was a plain absurdity. If the Mormons had succeeded in repulsing our attack, as most likely would have been the case, the country must necessarily be given up to their ravages until a new force could be assembled, and provisions made for its subsistence. Or if we should have succeeded in driving them from their city, they would have scattered over the country; and being justly incensed at our barbarity, and suffering with privation and hunger, would have spread desolation all over the country, without any possibility on our part, with the force we then had, of preventing it. Again, they would have had the advantage of being able to sustain their force in the field, by plundering their enemies.

All these considerations were daily urged by me, upon the attention of a council of officers, convened on the morning of the 27th of June. I also urged upon the council, that such wanton and unprovoked barbarity on their part, would turn the sympathy of the people in the surrounding counties, in favor of the Mormons; and thereafter, it would be impossible to raise a volunteer Militia force, to protect such a people against them. Many of the officers admitted that there might be danger of collision. But such was the blind fury prevailing at the time, though not showing itself by much visible excitement, that a small majority of the council adhered to the first resolution of marching into Nauvoo; most of the officers of the Schuyler and McDonough Militia, voting against it; and most of those of the county of Hancock voting in its favor.

[Blind fury. Never was there a more just term, for if all men had been as willing to deal out justice to the Mormons, (See 2d page.)

POETRY.

A VOICE FROM THE PROPHET.

"COME TO ME."

BY W. W. PHILLIPS, 1840.

TUNE—"Indian Hunter."

Come to me, will ye come to the saints that have died,
To the next better world, where the righteous reside,
Where the angels and spirits in harmony live,
And the joys of a vast Paradise. Come to me.

Come to me where the truth and the virtues prevail,
Where the union is one, and the years never fail,
Where a heart can't conceive, nor a natural eye see,
What the Lord has prepared for the just. Come to me.

Come to me where there is no destruction or war,
Where the bliss and the knowledge, the light, and the love,
And the glory of God, do eternally be,
Death, the wages of sin, is no there. Come to me.

Come to me, here are Adam and Eve at the head
Of a multitude, quicken'd and rais'd from the dead;
Here is the knowledge that was, is, or will be,
In the great assembly of worlds. Come to me.

Come to me, here is the mystery that man hath not seen;
Here is Alpha, Omega, the first and the last;
Here is the fountain, the "river of life," and the Tree,
Here is your Prophet & Seer, JOSEPH SMITH. Come to me.

MISCELLANY.

THE CHURCHES OF PARIS.

Having a leisure moment in consequence of the departure of the steamer I thought I would employ it in giving a description of "Notre Dame," whose legends and historic associations form the subject of a work by Victor Hugo. This city contains a large number of ancient Churches, from among which the Cathedral may be selected in preference to others, as its antiquity, its vicissitudes, and its splendid proportions, entitle it to the priority of description. These temples possess an interest now, because they were erected at an era called by some the middle ages, but which others—witness no just cause, considering the time and circumstances—designated as the dark ages. They contain specimens of statuary and painting, and the buildings are such masterpieces of architecture, as to excite the admiration of all who view them. With respect to these arts, civilization has made little improvement.

"Notre Dame" is a special Gothic structure, erected on a small island in the Seine called La Cité, and the scene of many of the events mentioned in Eugene Sue's "Mysteries of Paris." The island is connected with the main land by the bridges communicating with both sides, among which are two of the most beautiful of the Capital—the Pont Neuf and the Pont Louis Philippe. The erection of the present Church was commenced in 1163, on the site of one bearing the same name. Pope Alexander III laid the corner stone. The completion of the building occupied several centuries. One part was finished in 1233, under Philip Augustus; another part in 1257, under St. Louis; and the other in 1312, under Philip le Bel. The excited state of Europe at these periods, and the funds required for the prosecution of the Crusades, in which they were engaged, left something for other generations to add, to beautify this grand and imposing structure. In 1404, 1669, and 1714, various Kings added embellishments to it, and the Church therefore exhibits specimens of the arts for several centuries. The Grand Altar was erected by order of Napoleon, and adds greatly to the imposing effect of the interior. The front of the Church is 120 feet wide and the two towers in front are 201 feet high. The entrance is through three immensely large doors, arched in the gothic style, but so deeply carved that when viewed at a distance they nearly form a semi-circle. The porches are of sculptured stone representing Scripture passages, and must have required years of patient toil to have executed them. They may now be looked upon as specimens of sculpture in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. They were intended to excite virtuous impulses; but as civilization has so changed our ideas respecting the manner of awakening them, they would now be condemned for exciting different impressions, for the same reason that applies to the passages of scripture which they illustrate. Above the doors are three large windows, the side ones are arched, the centre one is circular and of stained glass. Its diameter is 50 feet, on the sides of the Church are two others in the same style and of similar dimensions. Between the doors and windows on the front are 27 niches in which the statues of 27 kings of France from Childbert to Philip Augustus were placed before the Revolution; but in that outbreak they were mutilated and the niches are now vacant. Above the windows are 34 long and slender, columns, each formed of a single stone. They support a gallery. The interior of the Church is grand and imposing. Its length is nearly 400 feet, its width at the middle 148 and the height from the floor to the point of the arch is 102 feet. On the sides around the main altar forming a semicircle are 45 small chapels containing besides the altars and paintings, windows of stained glass and groups of statuary, the master pieces of their respective artists. The Organ is 40 feet high and 36 wide. The Church has several naves and the immense number of arches forms a beautiful perspective. My first visit to the Church was on the feast of the Assumption, a festival celebrated with all the imposing ceremonies of the Catholic Religion, for the Church, as its name implies, is dedicated to the Virgin. There were several hundred at Communion. The girls were dressed in white, with white veils. Without all was noise and confusion—within the scene was solemn and impressive. The stained glass reflected on the floor the most brilliant and varied tints, the altar was illuminated and surrounded by a great number of priests; male and female voices accompanied by the organ pealed forth a hymn in deep and solemn cadence, and every thing around seemed to breathe the mind and heart with such a sympathizing influence as to dispose it to contemplation and devotion.

Our thoughts are carried back to the early ages. There is the worn pavement floor where thousands have knelt, and were now in humble prayer, are kneeling the Sisters of Charity, the conoling angels of the afflicted and distressed of our race. The other ancient churches are St. Sulpice, St. Eustache, St. Etienne, St. Germain, L'Auxerois, and St. Mary.

Having alluded to the Church of "Notre Dame," as the one possessing the most interest among the ancient temples, the Church of the "Madeleine" may be selected for the same purpose from among the modern ones. The Madeleine is built on an elevation of stone works, faced with marble 12 feet above the level of the street, which forms a basement and is divided into several rooms. This platform of stone work is ascended in front and rear by thirty marble steps, divided into two portions, somewhat like the United States Bank at Philadelphia. The length of the Church is 325 feet and the width 134. It is in the form of a Greek temple and is surrounded with fifty-two beautifully fluted white marble columns of the Corinthian order. Their height from the basement to the cornice is 49 feet and their circumference 15 feet. They are placed at a distance from the walls of about 10 feet. The Church stands on a square and when viewed from a distance has a most grand and elegant appearance. In front there are eight columns and the same number in the rear. They are placed at a distance from the walls of about 15 feet and support the cornices. In the front placed in niches in the wall are two statues, on the left of the door is that of St. Louis and on the right that of St. Philip. There are 18 columns on each side, and in niches in each wall there are 14 statues of male and female saints and martyrs. In the rear wall also in niches are statues of the Apostles: Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, making a total of 34. They are placed between the open spaces of the columns and of a size to appear when viewed at a distance as large as life. On the front formed by the cornices above the pillars and those of the roof, is a large triangular space, on which is sculptured the "paradise of the Magdalene." The figures are the Saviour, the Angels of mercy and of Faith, Hope and Charity, who welcome the return of the penitent sinner to the path of virtue. The evil passions are also represented—they are in various disguises trying to dispute the victory, while the Angels of Innocence and of Vengeance are represented as driving them away. The principal door is 33 feet high and 16 wide. It is of bronze and on it are engraven the ten commandments. The fault and punishment are displayed by scriptural passages. "Thou shalt not kill," is illustrated by the death of Abel and the curse of Cain. All the others have appropriate illustrations. The interior of the church is magnificent. It has but one nave. On the left of the entrance is a chapel, containing the Baptismal Alter. It is surrounded by a marble group, representing the Baptism of our Saviour by St. John and the fountain surrounded by Angels. On the right is the Marriage

Chapel. The altar supports a group representing the marriage of the Virgin. There are six other chapels in the church containing groups of statuary and splendid paintings. The semicircular space above them is painted in fresco and illustrates passages in the life of the Magdalene. The skill of the painter, as if the result of inspiration, has given to the figures such life-like looks and the female faces such really Angelic expressions, as to excite deeply one's attention, and the mind becomes as strongly impressed with the object of their mission as if eloquent lips declared it. Those eloquent groups of statuary and paintings address the soul as forcibly as words—our eyes are attracted by forms similar to our own and we find them pleasing and lovely, because they are the ideal personifications of love, and truth and charity. The church is lighted by three domes, the interior of which is ornamented with gold and azure colored mouldings; the domes are supported by marble pillars in the Corinthian order, placed near the walls so that they do not interrupt the perspective. The height from the floor to the dome is eighty feet. In the corners of the domes and resting on the pillars are painted saints and angels, and the virtues of Faith, Hope and Charity. There are no pews, and the marble floor of small white and black squares placed diagonally forms a beautiful contrast to the walls of red and bronze veined marble. The main altar is placed in a semicircular recess; it is surmounted by a marble group, representing the Virgin surrounded by Angels. On the upper part of this recess is painted the Progress and triumph of Christianity. It represents the fathers of the Church, the crusades, Joan of Arc, and the organ is chaste and elegant—every thing in the Church is a masterpiece of the kind. I visited the "Madeleine" several times and can give but a faint idea of the magnificent view which surprises the beholder. The corner stone was laid in 1764; the Revolution suspended the works till the time of the empire. Napoleon wished to change its destination and to make it a temple to the glory of the French armisties, but after the campaign in Prussia, he gave funds to continue it as a church. It was finished in 1812, and may be looked upon as a monument of the arts and sciences in the 19th century.—Tribune.

Foreign News.

By the last steamer from Liverpool, we have received our usual quota of foreign papers, from which we extract the following items:—

FRANCE.

At the Seine assizes on Monday, the Prince de Robecq, son of the Duc de Montmorency, was tried for sedition. It was proved that there had been seized at the house of the defendant, busts of "Henri Cinq," or the Duc de Bordeaux and books containing entries showing that these emblems of sedition had been distributed and sold. The defence was, that these busts had been sold for the purpose of increasing the funds of the Society of St. Louis, whose professed object is the relief of distressed persons of the legitimist party; but the avocat-general contended that the society was a mere blind to conceal the political manoeuvres of that party. M. Berryer who defended the Prince, denied that there was anything political in the affair; he asserted that the society was purely one of charity, and that his client had been actuated by charitable motives alone. The defendant was acquitted, and was loudly cheered on leaving the court.

Dreadful Whirlwind.—A letter from Cette, near Montpellier, gives an account of a dreadful whirlwind that visited that town on the 22d, and did a vast deal of damage. The Government establishment of engineers, a very large building, was utterly destroyed, even the walls not being left standing. The zinc roof of the building was carried into the air, and broken into thousands of pieces which fell in different parts of the town, where they did a great deal of injury. Several other large buildings were also destroyed, and the place is described as resembling a town which had undergone the horrors of a siege. At the same time a storm prevailed in the harbor, which wrecked and sunk six or seven large merchant vessels, besides a great number of fishing and other boats. The number of persons who perished is calculated at about thirty, but the exact number was not known, and numbers were still missing whose fate was uncertain. A great number besides are severely wounded from the falling houses, and even at the time when the accounts came away the people were afraid of a renewal of the disasters, as the storm was not yet over. This unlooked for calamity had created the utmost distress and alarm.

Female Stockbrokers.—The Monteur Parisien has the following:—"Nothing can prevent the women from gambling at the Stock Exchange. They were first excluded from the hall, next from the galleries, and afterwards from the portico.

Now they have taken refuge under lime trees on the right and left of the Palace of Plutus. There courteous and discreet chevaliers come and acquaint them with the fluctuation of the funds, receive their orders to buy or sell, and in short, affairs take their accustomed train."

The Duc d'Aumale left Paris, with the Prince de Joinville, on Tuesday for Naples; where he is expected to arrive on the 20th or 21st. On the 25th he is to be married to the Princess Caroline Augusta, daughter of the Prince Salerno and cousin of the King of the Two Sicilies.

The re-organization of the Polytechnic School is in progress. On the 7th inst. General Boleau left the school; and the new commander, General Rostolan, was installed in his place.

MADEIRA.

Outrage in Madeira.—The Sierra San Antonio, a mountain district of Madeira, has recently been given up to pillage under the following circumstances:—On the evening of the 16th of September, fourteen policemen, attempted to seize Nicolao Vieira a Portuguese, who, about eighteen months ago, had joined the Scottish communion. Their only authority was a warrant, not signed as required by law. Under these circumstances Nicolao refused to follow them until it should be light. His neighbors rallied round him, and after some altercation, but without a blow being struck on either side, the police retired. On the 23d of September, fifty soldiers, commanded by Capt. Oliveira, proceeded, under pretence of seizing the offenders, to pillage the district. Some of the houses were gutted, others stripped of their valuables, the live stock was killed, and the inhabitants either taken prisoners or obliged to fly. The houses of two English merchants, Messrs. Burnett and Elliott, were filled with women flying from the violence of the soldiery. It was not till the pillage had continued three days that those gentlemen obtained, by their urgent remonstrance, an order to restrain the soldiers. Twenty-two prisoners were brought round in a frigate and lodged in Funchal gaol. The illegal signature of the warrant would have justified any resistance, while the circumstance that no blows were struck, clearly proves how trifling it actually was. The pillage was witnessed by several English gentlemen who visited the spot, and its effects are still visible to all who go to the Sierra. Ten of the prisoners belong to the family of Maria Joaquina, who is still in prison under sentence of death.

SPAIN.

At Madrid, down to the 7th inst. the deputies were still engaged in discussing the address in reply to the Queen's speech.

The court martial on General Prim assembled on the 4th, under the presidency of General Mazzaredi, Captain-General of Madrid, and a friend of Narvaez. The proceedings were abruptly stopped by the discovery of some technical defects; and on the 6th, the Procurator-fiscal began to prepare a new trial. The charge is understood to be now only conspiracy for an insurrection; the punishment sought, transportation in the Philippine Islands.

Málaga and Valencia are said to be agitated.

An absurd rumor had been raised in Madrid, that Espartero had suddenly left London.

ITALY.

Letters in the Aggsburg Gazette report that a shot had been fired in the palace of the Grand Duke of Tuscany. The Grand Duke was not hurt, but an attendant was wounded. A rigid inquiry has failed to detect the assassin.

Italy has been visited by destructive inundations. The Adige had been; and the streets of Trent were overflowed. The whole lower parts of Florence were flooded: A suspension-bridge above the gate of St. Nicholas, without the city, had been carried away. The road between Leghorn and Pisa was stopped. Agriculture implements, cattle, and furniture, strewn on the waters, attested the ruin inflicted in the country districts. On the 4th the sky cleared, and the flood seemed beginning to subside.

CHINA.

Additional advices from China, to the 30th July, mention a confirmation of the report that Sir Henry Pottinger had been deceived by some garbling in the original, or some imperfect translation of the supplementary treaty of commerce, and that he was not originally cognizant of provisions which oppress the coasting-trade by burdensome restrictions. The following are extracts from the Friend of China:—"A treaty of amity has been concluded between the American Minister, Mr. Cushing, and Keying, the Imperial Commissioner. The treaty was signed at Macao, on the 4th July, the anniversary of the independence of the United States. It is understood that some concessions have been made as regards the tariff, which is already more moderate than any tariff with which we are acquainted. The affairs of the colony are decidedly satisfactory; the result of the last land sale has given stability to property, and much increased its value. It is fully anticipated that many Chinese merchants will establish themselves here, men of substance, who will add greatly to the respectability and prosperity of Hongkong. The climate may be a drawback; but it will unquestionably improve, after a little money has been laid out in draining and other sanitary measures, which have been too long neglected. At present we do not look upon it as a more unhealthy, than the generality of tropical climates, where new settlements are formed; and we have little doubt that in a few years it will be better in this respect than the average of our eastern possessions.

ALGIERS.

There has been an insurrection of the Kabyles at Dellys, which appears to have been a serious affair. A letter from Algiers of the 20th, published in the Siecle, says there were 130 of the French killed and wounded, of whom 15 were officers. Thirty-five men and two officers were killed. The insurrection was quite unlooked for, for General Comman had, during the previous month, sent troops through all the districts of the neighborhood of Dellys, without meeting with the slightest resistance. On the 15th, however, he wished to go among a tribe called the Fessat-el-Haher, where it was suspected that a turbulent chief, of the name of Bel-Kassein, had taken refuge, and organized a resistance to the French. There found several redoubts built of dry stone, which he determined to attack. The redoubts were taken at the point of the bayonet, but, although he had a considerable body of troops under his command, he found himself ultimately obliged to retreat. The retreat is said to have been made in good order, but the enemy followed so close that twelve men of the rear guard were killed, and two officers wounded. At all events, the French army retreated in all haste to Dellys, which they reached without halting, although the distance is forty miles. Immediately on hearing of the affair Marshal Bugeaud left Algiers with four regiments, which had just arrived at Alier from Morocco. The number of the Kabyles is estimated at 7000 men. The number of French engaged in the affair was 1500 men. Marshal Bugeaud has carried along with him a reinforcement of 2000. Abd-el-Kader is surrounded by a force with which he can defy both Morocco and France.

REVOLUTION IN MEXICO.

Later and Important Intelligence.

By the arrival of the schooner "Water Witch" from Vera Cruz, we have advices from Mexico four days later than we had previously received. This reports which had before reached us of the extent of the disaffection in Mexico, are fully confirmed. The Assemblies of the Departments of Aguascalientes, Queretaro, San Luis Potosi and Zacatecas, are said to have declared themselves as fully and boldly against the Government as that of Jalisco. As to Vera Cruz the reports are contradictory. We learn, verbally, that a large majority of the citizens of that Department favor the opposition to the Government, while a paper of the 16th ult., published in Mexico, declares that the Assembly of this Department has pronounced against the movement of Paredes. Our private correspondence sustains us that the latter statement is correct. But things really look more equally for Santa Anna than we had anticipated they would, and the revolution has assumed a shape more formidable than first appearances warranted. The following letter which we have received, written by a well informed gentleman travelling in Mexico for his health, may give some idea of the difficulties with which Santa Anna is surrounded, and the precarious tenure by which he now holds his power:

JALISCO, Nov. 20, 1844.

Ellis Pienune: Having promised to write to you should anything worthy of remark turn up, I have now an opportunity to scratch you a few lines in relation to the troubles in this distracted country. From all accounts, it would seem that the whole interior is up in arms against Santa Anna, with Gen. Paredes at the head of the revolutionary forces. The States of Jalisco, San Luis, Aguascalientes, Guanajuato and Queretaro have already declared against Santa Anna, and every post brings intelligence of disaffections in other quarters. Some few garrisons in other States may have declared themselves in favor of the Government, but that is all humbug. A passenger just arrived from Vera Cruz says, that the garrison there has declared for Santa Anna, but there were many who thought the soldiers were ready to throw up their caps for Paredes, should half a chance occur. Santa Anna is on his march towards Mexico with 6,000 men, and at the last accounts were near the city; but the desertions from his ranks had been immense. One regiment numbering 800 men, has been reduced to its officers and four privates by this means. The cause of the Dictator certainly looks desperate, and many confidently look for his total overthrow.

Cosmopolite. In confirmation of the views expressed in the conclusion of this letter, we have seen another letter received by a commercial house in this city from Vera Cruz, which mentions that a rumor prevailed that Santa Anna had been compelled to fall back in his advance upon Mexico, by the numbers who had arrayed themselves against him, and that he was in full retreat for Jalapa, if not Vera Cruz. It is stated with confidence that he would not be received in the latter city; a large proportion of the population being earnestly opposed to his domination, although the garrison, which is in his pay, would stand by him. It is quite natural that rumor with her hundred tongues, should be busy in Mexico while she is distracted, but we are disposed to think the sentiments of the citizens of Vera Cruz towards the "Constitutional President" of Mexico are not exaggerated.

In consequence of the troubles in Jalisco, it was feared that the great fair at San Juan de los Rios would not be held this year. The Jaliscoense, a journal published at Guadalajara, denies this, and asserts that the Supreme Government was prepared to protect merchants, as well upon the road as while in the city of San Juan. This is a small town in which once a year a grand fair is held, to which thousands and thousands resort for the purpose of traffic.

We have before announced that the mail communication between Guadalajara and Mexico had been interrupted. The Courier Francaise of the 16th ult., announces that it has been renewed, and that it is in receipt of papers from the interior throwing light upon all the events that have occurred in Jalisco. The editor, however, refrains from giving them publicity, thinking it more proper that they should appear first in the official journal. The very caution which the editor manifests, leads us to attach greater importance to the developments which have already been made.

A STARTLING PROJECT.

Secret Society in Mexico.—Some time since a most singular document was placed in our possession, says the New York Sun, which we did not then use, partly because its contents were not at our absolute disposal, and partly because we did not give it the consideration to which subsequent events have proved it was entitled. It contained in full detail, the plan of an association, or Secret Society in Mexico, whose members were mutually pledged to labor for the political and absolute union of Mexico with the United States of the North (la union politica y absoluta entre los Estados Unidos del Norte y Mexico), and gives the reasons for this bold and original determination. The names appended are among the most influential in Mexico—men intimately acquainted with the spirit and workings of our institutions. The following is a synopsis of this Society:

1. That to secure, congenial and perfect republicanism is the best motive and nearest tie for political relationship.
2. That liberty of person and conscience, security in all the rights of property and citizenship, and free encouragement, the pursuit of happiness and improvement, form the just inheritance of every child of a true Republic, and to secure this to all his countrymen should be the ardent desire of every patriot.
3. These blessings are not fully enjoyed by the citizens of Mexico, in consequence of incessant revolutions, while the United States repose tranquilly on the strength of permanent institutions.
4. Foreign nations taking unjust advantages of these intestine divisions, have involved Mexico in obligations to European powers, which are disastrous to her prosperity, and dangerous to the independence of an American Republic.—That conditions growing out of these obligations, are continually imposed upon Mexico with an audacity and injustice, which the same powers would not presume to offer to the United States, or to Mexico if she had been at peace with herself.
5. Owing to incessant civil wars, the unequalled natural resources of the country are undeveloped, industry discouraged and the education of the mass, the great lover of national elevation, is neglected in the same proportion that the same are cherished in the United States hence the prospects, unexampled in the history of this world—of the latter nation.
6. To apply the civic strength (la energia gubernadora) of the United States to the immense capabilities of Mexico, would make the United States the greatest empire in the world. This should be the object of all liberal republicans, and in this work every patriot, whose noble heart will not bauld its benevolence by mountains and rivers, will engage all its strength.

The Sun states that the practicability of uniting the two national families is ingeniously set forth. At present we can only state our conviction that a Secret Society, having for its ultimate object a Union of Mexico and the United States, does exist.

The Sun also says, that Santa Anna favors the project. The fact that Jalisco and Guanajuato are the most resolute in their determination not to afford any aid in the invasion of Texas, and (after the City of Mexico) in those states, and among the very best men of those states, those who most openly and determinedly oppose the invasion, are the strongest branches of the Society, seems to confirm the belief that there is something in this announcement.

LEGISLATIVE VENGEANCE!

Our country is certainly going to ruin. Great men, or rather, men "dressed with a brief authority," must cease to incense the indignation of the people, or to increase popular fury, crying "Mormon vengeance!"

The Charleston Mercury contains a little of the fire, which will eventually singe the glory of American Liberty. We mean the proceedings of the Legislature in relation to Samuel Hoar, an agent from Massachusetts; and mark it! We mean the act, whenever a Legislative body begin to curtail the freedom of a free people, and act tribunal, Judge, Jury and Sheriff, the wrath of an offended God, will hurry on a final judgment. But read the extract and mourn.

SOUTH CAROLINA LEGISLATURE.

Report of the Committee on Federal Relations, upon the communication of the Governor, transmitting a letter from Samuel Hoar, an agent from the State of Massachusetts.

The Committee on Federal Relations to whom was referred the communication of his Excellency the Governor, transmitting a letter addressed to him, by Samuel Hoar, an agent of the State of Massachusetts for certain purposes, submitted the following report.

By an Act passed on the 19th day of December, 1855, the General Assembly endeavored to guard against the introduction of free negroes and persons of color into this State upon principles of public policy, affecting her safety and most vital interests. The right of excluding from her Territories conspirators against the public peace, and disaffected persons whose presence may be dangerous to her safety is essential to every government. It is every where exercised by Independent States, and there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States, which forbids to South Carolina the right, or relieves this Legislature of the duty of providing for the public safety.

Massachusetts has seen fit to contest this right, and has sent an agent to reside in the midst of us, whose avowed object is to defeat a police regulation essential to our peace, this agent comes here, not as a citizen of the United States; but as the emissary of a foreign Government, hostile to our domestic institutions, and with the sole purpose of subverting our internal police. We should be insensible to every dictate of prudence, if we consented to the residence of such a missionary, or shut our eyes to the consequences of this interference with our domestic concerns.

The union of these States was formed for the purpose, among other things, of ensuring domestic tranquility and providing for the common defence, and in consideration thereof, this State yielded the right to keep troops and ships-of-war in time of peace, without the consent of Congress; but, while thus consenting to be disarmed, she has in no part of the constitutional compact surrendered her right of internal Government and police, and on the contrary thereof, has expressly reserved all powers not delegated to the United States, nor prohibited by it to the States.

The State of Massachusetts denigrates as citizens those persons for whose protection her tender solicitude has devised this extraordinary mission; yet, it was admitted that they are citizens of that State, your Committee cannot suppose that she will challenge for them greater rights, immunities and privileges within our territories than are enjoyed by persons of the same class in South Carolina.

But your committee deny that they are citizens within the meaning of the constitution, nor did Massachusetts herself treat as citizens persons of this class residing within her limits, either at the adoption of the Constitution or since; but on the contrary, they were subjected to various disabilities from which her other inhabitants were exempt.

Your Committee cannot but regard this extraordinary movement as a part of a deliberate and concerted scheme to subvert the domestic institutions of the Southern States, in plain violation of the terms of the National compact, and of the good faith which ought to subsist between the parties thereto, and to which they stand solemnly pledged.

Your Committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions: Resolved, that the right of excluding from their territories seditious persons or others, whose presence may be dangerous to their peace, is essential to every independent State.

Resolved, that free Negroes and persons of color are not citizens of the United States, within the meaning of the Constitution which confers upon the citizens of one State, the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.

Resolved, that the emissary sent by the State of Massachusetts to the State of South Carolina, with the avowed purpose of interfering with her institutions and disturbing her peace, is to be regarded in this character he has assumed, and to be treated accordingly.

Resolved, that his Excellency the Governor be requested to expel from our territory the said Agent, after due notice to depart, and that the Legislature will sustain the Executive authority, in any measure it may adopt for the purpose aforesaid.

W. M. F. DE SAUSSURE,

Chairman.

December 4th, 1844.

The foregoing report and resolutions were this day agreed to by the House of Representatives, and were concurred in by the Senate.

W. M. E. MARTIN,

Clerk of the Senate.

December 5th, 1844.

MORE OF THE SAME FIRE.

If the following is not some of the same Legislative fire, we are very much mistaken.

South Carolina.—A bill to provide for "the punishment of persons disturbing the peace of the State, by the color of authority from other States of the Union," passed the House of Assembly, and was sent to the Senate on the 14th inst.

The first section of the bill provides for the punishment of persons coming into this State, with intent to disturb, interfere or hinder the operation of our laws, &c., &c. An amendment was submitted, which embraced persons from foreign States or powers, as well as individuals from any State or Territory in the Union.

The opposition to this amendment seemed to be actuated by the authority given in the bill to a single magistrate, who might, by ignorance, mis-information, or otherwise, arrest accredited agents from other governments; and therefore endanger the peace of the country. This was, however, remedied by amending the section, so as to take away this authority from inferior magistrates, and vest in the higher judicatories of the State.

Another amendment to that part of the bill, by adding the words "or General Government of the United States of America," was lost by a vote of 45 to 69.

ANOTHER ANTI-RENT OUT-BREAK.

The following account of a recent outrage in Columbia County, comes from a responsible source. We can only say, that such proceedings cannot be looked upon, by any lover of law and order, without deep concern, nor with less than unqualified reprobation:

Hudson, Dec. 14, 1844.

Dear Sir—I presume you have heard of the anti-rent rebellion in the county of Columbia. The idea has prevailed among many, if not all of our population, that the anti-rent movement in Albany and Rensselaer were based on the alleged injustice of quarter sales and a large collection of back rents, and that a little leniency on the part of landlords might quell and remove the whole opposition. But the facts which have taken place in this county present the question in another, and certainly not less alarming and objectionable aspect.

The guarding of some infant children last spring, routed several farms for one year, and the tenants entered into written contracts to pay the rent semi-annually. The rents were light, about one dollar per acre. On the first of October the first rent became due, and about that time several emissaries came from Rensselaer, to preach rebellion among the people of this county. This alarmed no one, as it was supposed that the condition of things here was too satisfactory on all hands to be disturbed. There was no question of title, no back rents, and no quarter sales to quarrel about.

About thirty days passed on, and no rents being paid, distress warrants were issued by the guardian and put in the hands of the Sheriff. The Sheriff made the distress without any opposition, and subsequently the appraisal, but he was then informed that the rents would not be paid, and that the sale would be prevented. The Sheriff probably did not believe as he made no provision to repel any opposition, but went with a single attendant, to make the sale. He was met by a body of Indians, before he reached the place, escorted to the place of sale, and there under a threat of personal violence, gave up all his papers, and they were burned in his presence. The Sheriff reports that there were on the ground over 200 men in Indian dress, and 1500 citizen spectators, called there by the novelty of the occasion. When the papers were burned, the whole assemblage gave three cheers, and the Sheriff left the ground without adjustment of sale, and there ends the distress.

The Indians and many without disguise are holding meetings in all directions. A general meeting is called for next week after one is to be held at Hudson. Every one is now alarmed.

The principle involved in the resistance offered on a simple contract for a year tells too plainly, I fear, what the landlords in our cities and out holders of notes, bonds and other evidences of debt, have to expect if the movement is not met with the promptitude the occasion demands.

U. S. SUPREME COURT.

This court on Friday proceeded to hear the cause of Thomas W. Dorr, upon a writ of error, to bring the prisoner to the Supreme Court. Francis C. Treadwell, of Portland, Me., opened the case of the prisoner. The counsel relied upon the article of the constitution establishing one Supreme Court, and its powers to meet the application of counsel for a writ. He supposed the case at issue to be a controversy between a state and the citizen of a State which warrants the intervention of the Supreme Court. The public laws of Rhode Island were also referred to as giving the authority claimed. The power of appeal in the case before the court was claimed as an inference of these laws.

The indictment under which Dorr was convicted was read to the court, giving the details of the trial which commenced in April, closed in May, and under which sentence was rendered in June. The grounds of setting aside that verdict upon application made in the court of Rhode Island, were also considered in the bill of exceptions—the court having refused to be influenced by this appeal. It was asked there that the verdict should be set aside because it had been rendered upon the ground that treason could be committed against one of the States which decision it was contended was repugnant to the constitution of the United States.

It was claimed also that the case should be brought up to the Supreme Court because Dorr, under a valid constitution, was Governor of Rhode Island.

It was asked also upon the ground that the court of Rhode Island had refused to instruct the jury that treason could not be committed against a State. It was stated that the Court of Rhode Island suspended sentence for one day to receive a bill of exceptions, but that the court at the same time refused to suspend the sentence upon the verdict, for which cause the counsel ask that the case may be considered here.

And again, because the Courts at home refuse to allow Mr. Dorr to receive and sign a petition to have a case considered here they ask for an order to do so by the Supreme Court.

To prove that this position is true, several affidavits were read—one from Samuel Fassenden, of Maine, and another from Mr. Treadwell himself, and a third from John Eddy, of R. I. in which it is contended that applications had been made to see the prisoner, and to present him the petition for signature, which was not granted.

Mr. Treadwell was heard through, when the case was left to be decided by the Court without further argument.

AWFUL MURDERS.

A late Mobile paper learns by passengers from Norwood Landing, in the lower part of Dallas county, Ala., the particulars of a most terrible scene of violence performed near that place on the night of the 5th instant:—

A party of nine men, with blackened faces and otherwise disguised, made an attack upon the house of an old man, named Burge, the object of which, it is supposed, was, by threats and punishment, to drive him from the possession of his land. Burge closed his doors and prepared to defend himself. The aggressors were armed, and attempted to beat down the door. In the attack the old man was killed, and his son so dreadfully wounded as to preclude all hope of recovery. One of the daughters, a woman of eighteen, escaped from the house, and was killed about two hundred yards distant from it, a ball entered her right side below the heart. It is said that at the time she was killed she was on her knees, supplicating the murderers for mercy. Another younger sister was wounded slightly in the hand.

In the defence made by Burge, a man named Holloway was killed, and another (Davis) was so wounded that there was no chance of his survival. The rest of the sounders fled. Several of them were informed, whose names are McElroy and Harris, arrived here on Wednesday last, and immediately took passage for New Orleans.

The attack was made about nine o'clock in the evening, and the dreadful result of it was exciting a great deal of feeling in Dallas county. A purse was collecting for the purpose of aiding in the arrest of the murderers. All the parties it is said were men of good standing. Burge was industrious and had amassed his little property by frugality and hard work.

Mating in a Convent.—The German Universal Gazette gives the following:—A conspiracy by the nuns of the convent of Varaten against the Princess Breakovatz, who after relinquishing and immense fortune, took the veil in that convent, is the subject of general conversation. At the death of the late superior, these 1,100 nuns refused to accept the princess as her successor, she having excited their animosity by expressing a determination to make a reform in their conduct, which she considered to have been much too free. The rebellious nuns carried their opposition so far as to break all the windows in the convent.

Dreadful Accident.—Thirty One lives lost!—Saturday night, 14th inst., the steamboat Belle of Clarksville, bound from New Orleans to Nashville, came in collision with the Louisiana, on her way from Memphis to New Orleans. The Belle's hull separated from the cabin and sunk instantly. The Louisiana made every effort to save those who were clinging to the fragments of the wreck.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 3, 1845.

Having received a supply of paper for the Neighbor, we shall endeavor to make our weekly issue regularly hereafter.

STEALING.

A man by the name of John Brandon, came to Nauvoo, and said "he was a Mormon." His brotherly love turned out, that he stole from a Latter day Saint, a watch, a pair of pantaloons, mittens, &c., and decamped. The person he robbed followed after him; regained his property and sent him to Carthage jail.

Now if the the surrounding country will take up their thieves; we will take up ours, and thus rid the country of all thieves. Mormon, inobedient, or mixed. Fair play is the jewel. We know of no Mormon thieves, but if there are any, which have slipped into our midst we are ready and willing to turn the Carthage Screw upon them. Will the grumblers apply: the screws to theirs?

THE WEATHER.

The weather has been very warm for some time: so much so, that steam boats have been up the river as high as Warsaw, and had there been sufficient water upon the rapids, they could have gone to Galena, for ought we know to the contrary.

The thermometer has ranged in the shade as high as 65 deg.

ANOTHER MORMON EXPOSE.

"Mormonism."—The Springfield (Ill.) correspondent of the St. Louis Republican says: "It is mentioned here that Wood, who acted as one of Joe Smith's counsel at the time of his death, is endeavoring to prevail on the 'prophet's' wife to make a full exposure of Mormonism, and to allow him to publish it, and that he has about consented to do so."

We clip the above out of the "Washington Globe," and are not surprised to find it there; but we must admit that the desire of many people to swallow 'revelations of Mormonism' greatly exceeds the virtue and honesty of the age.

It Wood had wit enough to pre all upon the prophet's wife, what has she to expose? Booth, Howe, the Spalding story, old Brother Himes, Dr. Bennett, Sunderland of Zion's Watchman, Boston, Bennett with great pomp, the Laws, Sidney Rigdon Esq. and perhaps, on hundred others, have exposed Mormonism to an iota; and yet the Globe chimes in with malevolent sensational phantasm to re-expose Mormonism!—or at least, the prophet's wife, has ABOUT consented to do so, and allow Wood to publish it. "When the sky falls we shall catch larks."

Wonder if these men mean to pull this generation with a continual exposure of Mormonism, and yet it will not stay exposed! Have the community of discerning men lost reason? or do the blind lead the blind? Exposure has followed exposure, in quick succession, and now we are gravely informed that a "little 'barred' trifle" from Blackstone, is endeavoring to make a full exposure, through the prophet's wife!

Suppose we say a word concerning the "prophet's wife," Mrs. Emma Smith; she honored her husband while living, and she will never knowingly dishonor his god name while his martyr blood mingles with mother earth. Mrs. Smith is an honorable woman; and if we are not deceived, is as far from the corrupt insinuations in this ninety-ninth exposure of Mormonism, as a fixed star is from a gambler's lamp at midnight. The very idea that so valuable and beloved a lady, could be coaxed into a frame of disgrace like the above, is as cruel and base as the assassination of her husband at Carthage. There is no honor or shame in this generation; or, after they had murdered an affectionate husband, and left his wife and a large family of small children to mourn his loss, a id struggle against the woes of life, they would give the family a chance to drink once without the wormwood and gall!

The fact is, the story must have been put in circulation to injure the Latter-day Saints; and as Mrs. Smith was one of them to destroy, or murder her reputation, and create division in the church; but let us say once for all—Mormonism exists by unity; and as to its 'exposure'—Ten thousand elders are constantly exposing it to the understanding of the world, in America, Europe, Asia, the Islands of the sea, and peradventure to the spirits in prison, while Jehovah, as he hath ever done, gives line upon line, precept upon precept; here a little and there a little; and Wood may try to prevail; correspondents such as that black-hearted villain, Davis of Alton, may write to the St. Louis Republican; and the Globe, with all the rancid race; that now preys upon the morality of the community and government may spread such falsehoods like the pestilence that walks in darkness—and Mormonism will go from heart to heart; from place to place; from state to state; from nation to nation; from land to land; from continent to continent; till Israel is saved, and Babylon shall have sunk, like a millstone cast into the sea. Praise God!

If Mormonism ceases with thousands in his youth; what may be expected in manhood?—The glory of God covered the heaven, and the earth was full of his praise, with the prophet. Then, about then, mean men and Larrs, will receive their reward, and the saints theirs; for God will reward every man according to his works.

The glory of America has departed;—the virtue of freemen has been corrupted; and the good name of liberty has been sledged from the "asylum of the oppressed" by wicked men in high places. How has the gold become dim!—Where has truth hid? and why are twenty millions of people at ease, while the Lords of the Philistines are gambling for the ark of the covenant? Remember Egypt; remember the days of old; remember dagon must fall; and remember when you slander the saints, there is a God in Israel, who will come forth out of his hiding place like a thief, and then we to the world because of its guilt.

TRADES MEETING.

On Tuesday the 7th, the Trades Meeting met as usual at Mr. Gully's Store, to hear the report of the Committee concerning the dam to be erected in the Mississippi river.

This report, so far as made was highly satisfactory, but it was deemed advisable to add Newel Knight to the committee, and give them further time to report; and also to confer with the Trustees in Trust, &c., and report at the next meeting. Mr. Roberts from the Carriage and Coach making Association, reported that that branch of the Trades were ready for business.

Adjourned till the 14th.

MORMONISM IN LONDON.

During the last week placards were distributed extensively throughout the metropolis, announcing that Elder G. H. Davis, from America, a particular friend of the notorious Joe Smith, the Mormon prophet, who our readers will remember was killed in the progress of the late riots in America, would preach a funeral service on the prophet's death, at the Assembly-room, Theobald's road, on last evening (Sunday) at half-past six o'clock. At the appointed time, however, strange as the fact may appear, the room was crowded in every part, principally by respectfully attired persons, the majority being females. The person announced to be elder was seated on a platform at the end of the room, with a small table before him; on it being some books, &c., &c. He remained for some time with his face covered by his hands, and at intervals appeared as if engaged in devotion. Much curiosity appeared to be excited regarding the companion of the departed prophet. The individual, who is apparently about 40 years of age, was attired in deep black. The proceedings were opened by a person coming forward and calling on the meeting to repeat some hymns, which were taken from a book marked as the Latter day Saints' Book; and which contained a great variety of such description of prayer. This part of the service was somewhat of a warlike nature, relating particularly to revenge for him whose blood had been shed. The singing having concluded, the assembly joined in prayer, after which, Elder Davis, who had hitherto remained silent, rose, and having, however, stood in a very solemn manner for a few moments, as if inspired, commenced his discourse. He began by expressing a wish to God that he might be enabled to do justice to the subject. His text, on which rested the principle of religion, was "The testimony of the spirit of prophecy."

The address occupied a considerable time, and the apparent correctness with which it was delivered was not less astonishing than the large faith of those who listened to it.

Elder Davis announced that he had been the intimate friend of that great and good man Joseph Smith, who had been martyred for the sake of God and the religion he had inculcated. He contended that religion could not exist without prophecy, and cited several texts of Scripture, which he considered formed a philosophy of truth, impenetrable in support of his opinions. The subject of the present existence of prophecy having been mentioned, a history, both spiritual and temporal, was given of Joe Smith, or rather, as Elder Davis denominated him, Brother Smith. He was 33 years of age, when killed, stood six feet in height and weighed 212 lbs. Was the son of a farmer, and followed for some years the occupation of his parents. To him no education had been imparted, and he could scarcely write his name, until the Lord fixed on him as the instrument by which his holy church was to be restored. He in a moment became a great and powerful man, and the Lord revealed facts to him for the redemption of the world. He accordingly, as a prophet went forth to speak the truth, but like all true propagators of the truth, was subjected to all kinds of persecution, which continued to follow him to the day of his martyrdom. The followers of the prophet, at first, added Mr. Davis, numbered but six, but they had increased to hundreds of thousands, and they were increasing in all parts of the world; for Brother Smith had foretold—and, like the ancient prophets, all his prophecies would be fulfilled—that the world would yet be filled with the truth.

Elder Davis, at some length, eulogized the departed prophet, adding that in spite of all persecution, he would toil for the redemption of the world. Already were there thousands of their number in England and Scotland, and there were also some in Ireland. The Elder concluded by asking a blessing for the followers of the prophet.—London Morn. TRADES MEETING.

At a meeting of the Trades held in the basement of the Masonic Hall Dec. 2nd, 1844, in the absence of John Taylor Esq., D. M. Repsher was called to the chair, and R. Campbell was appointed Secretary pro tem, in the absence of W. W. Phelps Esq. The meeting was opened by prayer by brother Huntington. The minutes of the former meeting was read and adopted. Mr. Hunter on the committee on factory building, stated that he was understood that there were persons who were willing to take stock in the erection of the building that the committee wished to see what could be done.

Mr. Repsher said in addition, that he was satisfied that there would be no difficulties in taking stock. One gentleman proffered to take fifty dollars; he had spoken to several gentlemen. It should be a good substantial building, and labor can do as much as shares in completing the building; if a man put on third of his labor into the building, it would bring in a large income and a good rent, he would be decidedly in favor of appointing a committee to obtain a subscription list.

Mr. Ripley begged leave to exhibit a plot, got up by the late Gen. Joseph Smith—a plan for a dam which Mr. Hewitt and himself had surveyed half a mile. He Mr. R. said that a dam could be erected at but little expense from the foot of the lower island which would make a good steamboat landing, and would give water power for a quarter of a mile to be filled up with machinery.

The chairman said, that he had some conversation with Gen. Smith relative to the building this dam, and calculated that the expenditure in the completion of it, would be 250,000 dollars. This sounds large, but may be accomplished by the citizens in a short space of time. Both the rock and timber we have above, any kind of wood would do, as sycamores, and would stand against the floods.

Mr. Hewitt made an estimate of one pier, he had thought at first it would be too great a project to undertake, but since he had made an estimate of its expense, he believed that power for ten mills could be moved as much as can be on steam. He moved that a committee be appointed to make an estimate of the probable cost of erecting a dam which was carried. When the chair appointed John Taylor, Alanson Ripley, John Hewitt, Jabez Murphy, as said committee.

Mr. Hunter called upon Mr. Graham to give an estimate of the cost of erecting a factory. He said a building 3 stories high, 80 feet long, 60 feet wide, with plain finish, a good strong material, could be put up for from 2500 to 3000 dollars.

A gentleman in the absence of Mr. Carrol, took occasion to say that the weavers would be prepared to have such kind of material as you wanted, and such for wearing apparel at 30 cents per yard, having the advantage of having every kind of material. We intend to begin with five or six looms, and get up to as many hundred as soon as possible.

Mr. Roberts said that as a body of carriage makers, they want a constitution sanctioned by the honorable body before him.

Mr. Hunter said that this meeting had nothing to do with the regulations of the different kinds of business.

Mr. Roberts wished for a Presidency independent of the company, to settle the difficulties they were ready to commence and had the means.

The chairman said that each trade, met weekly to select their committee to report at the general meeting, and to do all their other business; he moved that Mr. Roberts call a meeting to select officers and form a committee.

Mr. Carrol said that he had given the utmost attention and diligence in forwarding the weaving business, and to get the material to finish the looms—that when there was a store and goods, to fill the store, that he would be ready to receive goods, but the work has been delayed because the finders had not been saved.

The chairman said in order that the different trades would prosper, it would be most to their advantage to select the most wise and judicious, the best theoretical and practical workmen, to superintend the work. One good man can arrange for ten men.

Mr. Roberts and others fully concurred in these views.

Mr. Hunter said no doubt we shall make some use of the Rapids for manufacturing. He wished to hear from the shoe-makers. He remarked we can manufacture straw hats and bonnets; he had seen good putaria hats made here.

A gentleman made some remarks on the factory building. He differed from the gentleman who first spoke about building a wool cap mill. And that if we could obtain twenty-five dollar subscribers, so as to finish the building by June if all is well, but let the house be built by capital.

The chair said that the gentleman's views accorded with his; he thought that it would be best to erect the house by joint stock first, then if not accomplished, have money.

A gentleman remarked that machinery could be put into operation that could be arranged to any sized building.

Mr. Leonard said that he had been trying to persuade some of his fellow craft to go into the views of this meeting in making hats.

The chair moved that Mr. Leonard be instructed to form a union.

Mr. Watt wished to form a union of his trade as a Tailor.

The chairman said that it is the principle of this meeting to patronize only their own manufacturers, and that he was sorry to see so many goods brought from abroad by the merchant, as when they can be manufactured as cheap, and as good here.

Several other excellent remarks were made.

Meeting adjourned to meet Dec. 9th 1844.

D. M. REPSEY, Chair.
ROBERT CAMPBELL, Sec. pro.

We have called on both officers and soldiers to forward to us immediately said arms that may be in your possession—It is the fact that we have delivered them to the agent—from the best information we can get if all the State arms were not delivered up they have been carried off by those who have apostatized and left the country; as J. C. Bennett put them into the hands of several individuals without making them responsible for said arms; the number that was received we have not been able to ascertain, but wish both officers and soldiers to pay attention to this call.

A Change.—The bed of the river in front of the 21 Municipality, N. O., has changed in a way to threaten serious consequences. It is found by survey, that opposite Poydras and La Fayette streets, the channel has filled up, and is now seventeen feet high, or one hundred and two feet perpendicular. When first sounded, at low water, the depth was 25 fathoms; now it is 9.—The result will be, if this bank continues to rise, that the whole of the Bayou of the 21 Municipality, as well as that of the first, with the Meat Market of the 1st Municipality, will be washed away and destroyed.—Gazette.

Great Sale at Washington.—Congress in a fit of retrenchment, ordered the grass cut on the Capital grounds, at Washington, to be sold at public auction. These clippings have been sold this season, and they have yielded a clear profit to the U. S. Treasury, auctioneer's commissions and cost of advertising excluded, of four dollars and ninety-two cents.

Case of Delia Webster.—The Louisville Morning Courier learns from Lexington, that the jury in the case of the Commonwealth vs. Delia Webster, indicted for aiding in the escape of slaves from that State, returned a verdict of guilty, and sentenced her to two years imprisonment in the penitentiary. Fairbank, who is indicted as an accomplice, was also put upon trial, and little doubt was entertained of his conviction.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE!
Twenty-five or thirty houses burnt!—A most destructive fire broke out in the town of Salem, Massachusetts, on the night of the 18th inst. It originated in the steam sawing and planing establishment of James N. Butler, on Front street, and spread with unparalleled rapidity. The steam mill was destroyed in a very short time, and the fire then extended in all directions, sweeping everything before it. Mr. Griffin's large sailor boarding house, with his extensive clothing store, containing a large amount of property; Peel's row, Lafayette street, (containing fourteen tenements,) Briggs' counting house on its wood wharf are totally destroyed. The whole south side of Front street, from the corner of Lafayette street to the Meat Market, including the buildings above named, Varney's store, Ropes' store establishment, and all the lumber and out buildings on the wharves in the rear. Messrs. Lord's shop was considerably damaged. On the north side of Front street, Ball's bakery, a large three story brick building, Edwards' clothing store, and Shotwell's three story dwelling house are all consumed. The store of Ma Pond was damaged.

On the east side of Lafayette street the large building known as Concert Hall, occupied by N. F. Sanford and Sherman & Co. was levelled; also Bowker and Clark's large grain store and store house on Fish street, containing many other things, about 2000 barrels of flour, all consumed; David Moore's Store, and several other buildings, including dwelling houses in William's court.

The suffering which this fire has produced is described as very great. The entire loss of property is estimated at $1,000,000. Its extent was from the Meat Market, opposite Market Square, easterly to the western extremity of the Charter street burying ground, and southerly from Front street to the South river. Probably some forty or fifty buildings of all descriptions.

REPORT OF THE COMMANDING GENERAL OF THE ARMY.
This is an excellent report, brief and to the point. We give but a part of it:

The rank and file, in nearly all the regiments, having fallen below the legal complement, to which the army was gradually to be reduced under the act of August 23, 1842, the general recruiting service was reorganized and recommenced on the 1st of May last.

By the judicious distribution and watchfulness of the troops, the Indian frontiers have enjoyed a remarkable tranquility. Not a field operation, strictly speaking, has been called for, except on the Gulf of Mexico.

According to standing policy, to prevent Indian hostilities, by the exhibition of military force on and beyond our frontiers, detachments of the first regiment of dragoons have made in the past season wide circuits in the Indian country of the West.

But few changes in the position of troops have been made within the year.

To extend instruction in light or horse artillery, at two of the schools for that purpose, a company of the 3d artillery has been transferred from Fort Macion, North Carolina, to Fort McHenry, near Baltimore, to join brevet Major Ringgold's company of the same regiment already there; and a company of the 4th artillery has been transferred thence to Carlisle barracks, Pennsylvania, to join Captain Washington's company of the same regiment, where it was previously established.

At the other two light artillery schools—Fort Adams, near Newport, Rhode Island, and Fort Hamilton, New York harbor—for the 1st and 2d regiments of artillery, respectively, there were already present at each several companies of the same regiment, besides its light company.

Judging from the inspection reports received, as well as from wide personal observation in the past season, the economical arrangements and responsibilities of the army are excellent, and susceptible of but little improvement. The tactical instruction and general soldiery of the whole are also good and progressive. A fine spirit of discipline—that is, exact obedience to law and lawful orders—very generally prevails. The few infractions on the part of at most some half dozen perverse officers, have, however, not been visited with due condemnation by courts martial. It is most strange, that any act which every member of a court would abhor to commit himself, and singly be ready to brand as a crime, should not unfrequently be palliated, wholly excused, by at least a majority of members united in a court.

The number of enlisted men who have been brought before courts martial within the current year, is ascertained to be thirty-five per centum less than the number of the preceding year. This denotes a very satisfactory improvement in the rank and file, taken in connexion with the fact that an illegal punishment has scarcely been heard of within the time.

As I have once before attempted, I beg, through the department and through the Executive, to interest Congress in behalf of a soldier's retreat or asylum for worn-out or disabled men.

Tremendous Snow Storm on Long Island.—Suspension of Travel.—The N. Y. Journal of Commerce of the 14th says that the storm of the 11th was one of the heaviest ever known on Long Island. The snow fell at Greenport, the Eastern terminus of the Railroad, and for a distance of thirty-five miles West from that place to the depth of from ten to twelve feet. Gangs of laborers are employed along the whole road in clearing the snow from the railroad track.—They were aided by seven locomotives but were not expected to succeed in effecting their object before Monday. It is expected that travel will soon be resumed.

Sufferings of Sparking.—The Free Will Baptist General Association, lately held in Plainfield, N. Y., resolved, among other things, "That no enlightened Christian can innocently carry on a courtship by late sitting."

The Place of Honor.—The place of honor has been accorded to the United States in the decorations of the new Royal Exchange in London; the armorial ensigns of Great Britain being placed over the centre of the west portico, and the United States over the east portico. The armorial bearings of other nations are "anywhere."

Lined the Wrong Man.—A man in Iowa suspected of horse stealing, was waited upon by a self appointed deputation of the people. They seized an individual they supposed to be him, and inflicted a severe flogging, and it was not until after they had mangled his back in the most horrible manner that they discovered he was not the man they were after.

Capture of a Pirate.—A letter from Trieste mentions the capture of the "Avenger," a piratical barque, which has been cruising for the last two years, and in that time there has been no less than 200 murders committed by the crew, and ten ships, three barques, one brig, and eleven schooners taken and plundered by her. The amount of treasure on board the vessel was immense. She is an English built vessel with tall raking masts, and of about 700 tons burthen, very sharp and deep.

The Pottsville Disturbances.—The Philadelphia Ledger learns that the disturbances at Pottsville, occasioned by the reduction of the wages of the laborers, have been quieted, and the men have returned to their work.

POETRY.

THE GREEK AND TURKMAN.

A night attack by Constantine Palaeologus on a detached camp of Mohammed 2nd, during the siege of Constantinople.

The Turkman lay beside the river:
The wind play'd loose thro' bow and quiver:
The charger on the bank fell free,
The shield hung high glittering from the tree:
The trumpet, shawn and arabal,
Lay scattered from dew by cloak and pall,
For long and weary was the way,
The horses had march'd that burning day.

Above them, on the sky of June,
Broad as a buckler glow'd the moon—
Flooding with glory, vale and hill,
In silver sprang the mountain fill:
The weeping shrub in silver bent,
A pile of silver stood the tent,
All soundless, sweet tranquillity—
All beauty, hill, brook tent, and tree.

There came a sound—'twas like the gush
When twilight-winds shake the rose's bush!
There came a sound—'twas like the tread
Of waves along the valley's bed!
There came a sound—'twas like the flow
Of rivers swollen with melting snow!
There came a sound—'twas like the roar
Of Ocean on its winter shore!

"Death to the Turk!" up rose the yell—
On rolled the charge—a thunder peal!
The Tartar arrows fell like rain—
They clanked on helm and mail, and chafed
In blood—in hate—in death, were twined,
Savage and Greek—mail, bleeding, bind—
And still, on flank, and front, and rear,
Raged, Constantine, thy thirteenth spear!

Brassy and pale—a type of doom—
Labor'd the moon through deepening gloom!
Down plunged her orb—'twas pitchy night!
Now, Turkman, turn thy reins for flight!
On rushed their thousands in the dark!
But in their camp a ruddy spark Like an uncertain meteor fell—
Thy hand, brave king, that fire brand wheel!

Wild burst the burning element,
O'er men and courser, flood and tent!
And through the blaze the Greek's outsprang,
Like tigers—b'body, foot and fang!
With dagger-stab, and flash on sweep,
Delving the stunned and staggering heap—
Till lay the slave by chief and khan—
And all was gone that once was man!

There's waiting on the Euxine shore—
Her chivalry shall ride no more!
There's waiting on thy hills, Alah!
For chiefs, the Grecian culture's prey—
But Bosphorus! thy silver wave
Hearts shouts for the returning brave—
For kingdom of a kingly line—
Let there come glorious Constantine!

THE MOTHERLESS.

You're weary, precious ones; your eyes
Are wandering far and wide;
Think ye of her, who knew so well
Your tender thoughts to guide;
Who could to wisdom's sacred lore
Your fixed attention claim—
Ah! never from your hearts erase
That blessed mother's name!

'Tis time to say your evening hymn,
My youngest infant dove!
Come press thy velvet cheek to mine,
And learn the lay of love;
My sheltering arms can clasp you all,
My poor deserted throng!
Cling, as you used to cling to her,
Who sings the angel's song.

Begin, sweet birds! the accustomed strain:
Come, warble loud and clear;
Alas! alas! you're weeping all,
You're sobbing in my ear!
Good night—go pay the prayer she taught Beside your little bed;
The lips that used to bless you there
Are silent with the dead!

A father's hand your course may guide,
Amid the thorns of life;
His care protect those shrinking plants
That dread the storms of strife;
But who upon your infant hearts
Shall like the mother write?
Who touch the strings that rule the soul?
Dear, smiling folk!—Good night!

MISCELLANY.

The mother of the Messrs. Roths child has recovered from her late alarming illness.
The report of the illness of the Empress of Russia is contradicted. The seclusion of her Majesty has been occasioned by grief for the loss of her daughter.

It is said that the Emperor of Russia has issued an order by which all natives of Poland are prohibited from marrying till they have completed their 30th year.

Dr. Wolf is still at Mershad, from which place he was unwilling to proceed till he had received an escort from Colonel Shiel, at Teheran.

A shemmer was lately tried in Paris, and convicted, mainly upon his own confession of having suffocated a woman with whom he had cohabited by fastening a pitch plaster on her face.

A New York paper states, that a child has been brought to that city which has a remarkably symmetrical body, and two perfectly-formed heads and necks. It was born, recently, at New Oxford, Pennsylvania.

The Morning Herald states, on the authority of letters received from the Brazils, that more slaves have been landed on that coast during the last twelve months, than during any similar period for many previous years.

An American Verdict.—A fellow who was frozen to death in Iowa, last winter, when the thermometer was two degrees below zero, was brought before a jury of inquest, who handed in a verdict of "death by freezing," and the thermometer was found guilty of "murder in the second degree."

Death in the Pulpit.—The Rev. Wilson Gorman, a Baptist minister in Georgia, delivered in the pulpit on the fifth Sabbath in June last, after preaching from these words:—Verily I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live.—New York paper.

New Occupant for a Dentist.—An itinerant dentist lately called at a house in one of the far west towns, and applied for business. "Don't you want your teeth drawn?" says he to the owner. "No." "Don't your wife?" "No." "None of your children?" "No." "Can't you give me some sort of a job?" asked the dentist. "Why," replied the man, "I have an old cross-cut-saw the teeth of which are out of order. You can have a job if you'll fix 'em!"—American paper.

Extraordinary Honor.—Once, when Louis Philippe was travelling in America, he performed the office of surgeon for an Indian chief, whom he bled in his wigwam. The result was so successful, that the tribe, grateful for the benefit conferred on their leader, resolved to award to his deliverer the highest honor which it was in their power to confer on a pale-face. In accordance with an ancient custom of the tribe, the heads thereof assembled in conclave on a large mat which was spread on the ground, and they sat around their chief, according to their several degrees. In recompense for the service rendered by the duke, now King of the French, to the patriarchal head of their tribe, they solemnly decreed, that he should be allowed to pass the night lying on the great mat of the community, between the grandmother and grand-aunt of the chief. This honor, which no European would covet, was, nevertheless, regarded as the highest which they had it in their power to bestow.—Le Mitroir, of Jersey.

Political Courtship in the United States.—Jonathan walks in, takes a seat, and looks at Sukey. Sukey rakes the fire, blows out the candle, and don't look at Jonathan. Jonathan hitches and wriggles about in his chair, Sukey sits perfectly still. At length Jonathan musters courage and speaketh: "Sukey!" "Well, Jonathan?" "I love you like pizen and sweetmeats." "It's a fact and no mistake." "Wi—will—now—will you have me, Sukey?" "Jonathan Higgins, what am your politics?" "I'm for Polk, straight." "Well, sir, you can walk right straight hum, coss I won't have nobody that ain't for Clay: that's flat." "Three cheers for the mill-boy of the slashes," sung out Jonathan. That's your sort," says Sukey. "When shall we be married, Jonathan?" "Soon as Clay's elected." "Aheh, a-a-heh." "What's the matter, Sukey?" "Sposin' he aint elected?" Jonathan didn't go away till next morning; but whether he answered the last question this deponent knoweth not.—American paper.

Entertainment on board the Great Western.—On Wednesday the gallant commander of the noble steamer Great Western, gave to a select party of friends, one of the most beautiful entertainments of the season. The company, consisting of about forty-five ladies and gentlemen, met at about twelve o'clock, and, after having listened for a half hour, to the music of one of our best bands, repaired to the cabin. The immortal Downing, the Ude of America, had the superintendence of the tables, and truly, on this occasion, did himself honor. We noticed among the guests the majestic Miss C., Mrs. J., Mrs. L., Miss O., the niece of the richest man in America, and many others equally beautiful, witty, and interesting. Among the gentlemen guests were Mr. Irvin, the popular agent, Mr. Stewart, of Broadway, Mr. Sihar, of Pine-street, Mr. D., Mr. F., and others. The glorious Mathews, the most popular commander who visits our shores, received his friends with his accustomed courtesy, and in a neat little speech, welcomed them on board the Great Western. Several toasts were proposed and drank with all the honors; but one among them, we thought, was more heartily responded to than the rest; it was, "The health and happiness of Mrs. Captain Mathews: we wait with anxiety to welcome her to our shores." The captain's son, young Mathews, a gallant, handsome young fellow, was very attentive and polite, and was evidently the object of admiration to more than one fair creature there assembled. During the lunch, the band, at intervals, played our national airs, the polkas, &c., to the admiration of all. Our space compels us to be brief, and we, therefore, can give but a short account of this very pleasant little affair. All present were delighted, the ladies looked happy, the gentlemen looked happy, and Mathews, God bless him, looked the happiest of all. We wish all good wishes, quick and safe trips, full cabins, good health, and long life to Mathews, the popular commander of the Western.—New York paper.

The Students and the Yankee.—A few years since some waggish students of Yale College, were regaling themselves one evening, at the "Tontine," when an old farmer from the country entered the room, and taking it for a bar-room, inquired if he could obtain a lodging there. The old fellow, who was a shrewd Yankee, saw at once that he was to be made the butt of their jests; but quietly taking off his hat, and telling a worthless little dog he had with him to lie under the chair, he took a glass of proffered beverage. The students anxiously inquired after the health of the old man's wife and children, and the farmer with affected simplicity, gave them the whole pedigree, with numerous anecdotes regarding his farm, stock, &c. "Do you belong to the church?" asked one of the wags. "Yes, the Lord be praised, and so did my father before me." "Well, I suppose you would not tell a lie," replied the student. "Not for the world." "Now, what will you take for that dog?" pointing to the farmer's cur, who was not worth his weight of Jersey mud. "I won't take twenty dollars for that dog." "Twenty dollars! why he is not worth twenty cents." "I assure you I would not take twenty dollars for him." "Con., my friend," said the student, who, with his companions, was bent on having some capital fun with the old man. "Now, you say you won't tell a lie for the world; let me see if you will not do it for twenty dollars. I'll give you twenty dollars for your dog." "I'll not take it." "You will not? Here let me see if this won't tempt you to lie," added the student, producing a small bag of half dollars, from which he commenced counting numerous small piles on the table. The farmer was sitting by the table with his hat in his hand, apparently unconcerned. There added the student, "there are twenty dollars, all in silver; I will give you that for your dog." The old farmer quietly raised his hat to the edge of the table, and then, as quick as thought, scraped all the money into it except one half dollar, and then exclaimed, "I won't take your twenty dollars! Nineteen and a half is as much as the dog is worth: he is your property!" A tremendous laugh from his fellow students showed the would-be wag that he was completely rowed up, and that he need not look for help from that quarter, so he good-naturedly acknowledged defeat. The student retained his dog, which he keeps to this day as a lesson to him never to attempt to play tricks, on men older than himself, and especially to be careful how he tries to wheedle a Yankee farmer.—American paper.

THE BATTERING-RAM.

Of all the ancient projectile weapons none was so efficacious or has retained its celebrity so long as the battering-ram. Strictly speaking, it was not a projectile weapon, in the modern and usual acceptation of the term; literally, however, it comes within the limits of that denomination, and under no circumstances can its description be omitted in a treatise having the objects of our own in view.

The enormous size of this celebrated machine, the number of men used in working it, and the magnitude of the effects which it was capable of producing might well awaken our incredulity were they not attested by abundant evidence and confirmed by modern experiment. The battering-ram consisted of a long pole, or spar, headed with a huge mass of iron or brass, usually shaped like that portion of the animal which conferred upon it the distinctive name. This spar was sometimes mounted on wheels, but more frequently, suspended by cords from a triangle of stout beams. In either case, the object was to impel it violently forward against an opposing wall, not with a view of its penetrating the mass, or even of dislodging a portion by its immediate shock, but to set up a vibration that, continually repeated, shook the strongest walls to their foundation, and eventually made them fall. The ram was usually of enormous dimensions.

According to Plutarch, Mark Antony, in the Parthian war, used a ram of eighty feet long; and Vitruvius states that they were sometimes made 106, and sometimes 120 feet long. We may easily suppose that a great number of men must have been absolutely required to wield so enormous a machine, in fact, a whole century of soldiers was employed for this purpose, and, when tired, they were relieved by others, so that the vibrations produced were continuous. Modern writers on artillery have made some interesting calculations relative to the comparative force between the battering-ram and cannon-balls. Mr. Desaguliers has shown that the momentum of a battering-ram twenty-eight inches in diameter, 180 feet long, with a head of cast-iron of one and a half tons the whole ram weighing with its iron hoops, 41,112 pounds, and moved with the united strength of 1,000 men, would only be equal to that of a ball of thirty-six pounds weight shot point blank from a cannon. In this calculation, however, a very important element has been omitted, namely, the size of the impinging extremity of the battering-ram, which, if its penetrating effect is to be compared with the penetrating effect of a thirty-six pound ball, should not be of greater size than the latter. Doubtless, however, it was of greater size, and, therefore, the momentum of the impinging extremity was diffused over a larger surface: thus the penetrating effect of the instrument would be considerably diminished, whilst its concussing, or vibratory and disintegrating effects would be increased. Now, against the tall walls of ancient fortifications, these latter qualities were far more destructive than mere penetration. If a slate stone be fixed erect on an edge, and struck with a bullet urged by gunpowder, the chances are that the stone will be perforated but not thrown down; if, however, the bullet be impelled against it by the hand, the stone will certainly not be perforated, but, on the other hand, will most likely fall. The two cases afford a very good illustration of the difference in effect between the modern cannon and the ancient aries: the former impels a projectile with great velocity against an object, and penetrates and shatters without much disturbing the repose of masses situated near its point of impingement; the latter possessed comparatively little penetrating force, but shook the strongest walls to their foundations.—Polytechnic Magazine.

ADVENTURES OF A FOX.

Those of our readers who are in the habit of indulging themselves with pleasant drives and rambles into the country must know the new hotel kept by Mr.

Henry Blunt at Woolton. Amongst his live stock Mr. Blunt has long had a couple of foxes, male and female, which, like Home's hermit, are "the wonder of the neighboring swains." Boud in chains, rather stronger than the chain confabular, neither the lady fox nor the gentleman fox ever appeared inclined to rove from home, till, lately, a disposition to wander suddenly seized upon the latter, and, strange to say, he received assistance from his lady in the accomplishment of his wishes. Mrs. Fox actually gnawed through the collar of her lord, and, like many a heroic female "famous in story," heroically, for his sake, dared the vengeance of offended power. Reynard might immediately have made his escape, but whether the ancient appetite of his kind prevailed over his proverbial discretion or whether he wished to fortify his inner individuality ere he set out on his travels we know not; but certain it is that he crept slyly amongst the poultry and selected a fine, pump-chicken, on which he forthwith breakfasted. Then "consideration, like an angel," came, and he gallantly determined upon helping his lady, who looked wistfully on, unable to help herself. He selected for her a black Spanish cock, of a valuable breed, which, having killed, he laid before his spouse. He next set himself to work to provide provision for a future day. Seizing a fat goose, he quietly bit off its long neck, and concealed the huge bird beneath some branches in the garden. The villain next snatched at a fine duck, and was proceeding to bury it alive when he was discovered, and, upon a rush being made at him, he at once cleared a wall ten feet high. He took another wall into Mr. Gibbon's garden where his brush was seen for a moment; but, determined to escape, he dashed at the carriage-gate, which is planted with spikes, and actually cleared it into the road, where he was seen by Mr. Goss, who turned him up on which he made across the country. He went to a farm belonging to Mr. Bibby, where he lay concealed for some time; but, on the following morning, he appeared at the residence of Mr. Ambrase Lacey, the excellence of whose poultry we believe he had the honor of testing. Next morning he favored Mrs. Foster, widow of the late Mr. Foster, town-clerk, with a visit, and did her a similar favor. Here, however, he was pursued by the dogs, which seem to have given him something of a fright, for he was not heard of for several days afterwards. His next appearance was at the residence of our friend Dr. Shepherd, at Gatemoor. Here, however, he again met with a reception which he did not like, the dogs having rushed upon him and chased him a considerable distance. He took the direction of Tortoth park. Now this very queer fox came originally from America, having, with his spouse, been presented to Mr. Blunt by the commander of one of the New York packet-ships. Whether he was disgusted with the treatment he had met with in England and had determined on returning to his native land, or whether he mistook the forest of moats before him for a forest of another description we know not; but it is certain that he "pondered refuge from his toils" in a very singular locality. Passing behind the Coburg Hotel, he crossed the bridge of the Coburg Dock and took shelter under some loose timber. Here he was taken by Mr. Green and his man, who, seeing that he had a rope on his neck, at once conjectured that he had escaped from captivity. Mr. Blunt was soon informed of his whereabouts, and, a few days ago, he was taken back to his old quarters, where he may be seen, living with his spouse, in apparent contentment and felicity, though he is compelled to regale on food less to his taste than fatted poultry.

SKETCH OF PARIS.

We copy the following "sketch" from the Liverpool Albion; and, if we judge correctly, it shows the infirmity of the world, and the wane of National dignity in glowing colors. Let those that read understand, that the world waxes old like a garment: Ah! is it moth eaten? But go the sketch:

The portion of country upon which Paris stands is flat and uninteresting, very little appearing either to attract or please the eye. A great deal of limestone is obtained in the vicinity of the town, the site of the city itself being a bed of that rock, from which most of the edifices in Paris are constructed, very few bricks being made use of.

The circumference of the city is sixteen miles, and its greatest width about five miles.

The entrances to it are closed by means of gates, or "barriers," at each of which officers are stationed for the purpose of collecting certain duties that are charged upon all commodities entering Paris. These duties are a termed octroi, and, of course, are all fixed by the Government. Wine pays a duty of twenty-one francs per thirty-five English gallons, in wood, and six sous per litre, in bottle.

Paris contains 2,000 streets, 27 alleys, or arcades, which are thoroughfares, and 120 which are not so, 23 boulevards, 10 bridges, 8 wharves, and 47 halls, or markets, each of the markets having a different name and appropriation: one, for example, is the wine market (Halle aux Vins), and another the corn market (Halle de ble).

The streets of Paris, excepting the Rue Rivoli, are generally narrow and dirty; the houses on either side are old and very irregularly built; the shops are small, although some are very tastefully fitted up in the interior, but the exteriors fall far short of the splendid specimens of taste which we see in Liverpool. The longest of the streets is the Rue St. Honoré, which might be compared to Piccadilly in London were it not much narrower and more circuitous. Its length is nearly two miles. It runs parallel to the Louvre, the Palace of the Thuilleries, and the Champs Elysees, in the direction of St. Germain. A bright exception to the generalty of the thoroughfares in Paris is the Rue Rivoli, which is a noble street, and every way worthy of the magnificent monuments that surround and embellish it. It was laid out, and the buildings were raised by Napoleon. The houses, which form one side, while the Palace of the Thuilleries and its gardens form the other, are all precisely similar, being composed of stories in a simple, though imposing, style of architecture. They are five stories high. A piazza, open to the street runs the whole length, a distance of about three-quarters of a mile, in which are situated some of the finest cafes and shops in Paris. A great many of the first hotels are also here, among which is Mause's about which I have heard some interesting tales of high charges and unheeded bills. It is, I believe, a good hotel for gentlemen who do not know what to do with their money.

The squares and places of Paris are among the most interesting of its attractions, not so much for their beautiful structures as for the historical associations attached to them. Among these I may mention the Place de Carroux; the Place d'Armes, the Place de la Concorde, the Place Louis XIV., and the Place de Greve. The first of these is the spot wherein some of the bloodiest and most tragical scenes of the French Revolution were enacted, and the last the arena wherein the unfortunate victims of individual malice or mistaken policy were sacrificed to liberty, and where so many crimes were committed in her name. All the public executions are still effected here, although such scenes are rare in France.

The boulevards occupy the site of the ancient walls and ditches of Paris, the filling up of which was commenced by Louis XIV., and continued to 1824, when the last Boulevard was completed. These streets, far such they are, surround the city. They are of great width, and planted with two or four rows of trees, with spacious carriage drives and footways. The buildings on either side are either places of business, the resort of the votaries of pleasure and dissipation, or the habitations of ease and affluence. Each section exhibits its different phase of life. While the Northern Boulevards boast their splendid cafes and restaurants, with all the bustle and gaiety attached to them, those on the south are quiet and peaceful, being mostly the residences of opulent families. These form a quiet and uninterrupted lounge, and are said to be much frequented by lovers and poets.

The bridges of Paris are not worthy much attention. The quays or banks of the river being considerably elevated, there is very little ascent to them. They are, consequently, very well adapted for the purposes of transit. Some of them are entirely of iron, several are formed of wood and iron, and stone and iron. Two of them are suspension bridges, but of much more clumsy structure than the beautiful ones in our own country. They generally fall far short of the English bridges, both in massiveness of construction and in beauty of design.

The Pont Neuf is the principal bridge. Its length is 1,020 feet and its breadth 78. It consists of two portions, uniting in the Ile de la Cite. One portion is composed of seven and the other of five arches. This bridge was built in 1578, during the reign of Henry III. On it is the celebrated statue of the great Henri Quatre, whose name is so dear to every Frenchman.

At Paris three islands are formed, bearing respectively the names of Ile de la Cite, Ile St. Louis, and Ile Louviers. The two former are covered with houses and streets, being connected with the main land by means of bridges. The Ile Louviers is used only as a depository for firewood.

The Ile de la Cite is fixed upon as the spot upon which the Parisians first encamped themselves, when Paris existed only in the imagination of mankind; and, if the age and wretchedness of the place may be taken as a proof of the validity of this supposition, I can believe it most religiously, for everything appears to be falling to decay through poverty and neglect. Its present state, compared with its important origin, tells an interesting and instructive moral. We see that this little spot, which is, as it were, the parent of the mighty fabric that has sprung up around it, has sunk into oblivion and ruin almost as rapidly as its progeny has risen into greatness. It is a very simile of the world: those whom we push into notice and elevate by our endeavors, too often, when they have gained the long sought eminence, and when perhaps fortune has smiled upon them but frowned upon their benefactor, slight the generous hand that raised them and allow it to sink into wretchedness and decay.

The river Seine winds considerably in the city, its length therein being little less than six miles. It is the chief medium through which provisions and other necessities are conveyed for the supply of the town. Immense numbers of boats traverse it daily, some from the Loire, others from the Seine, and others from the Scheldt and Somme, to all of which rivers the Seine is connected by means of canals, thus affording an easy and cheap transit for these commodities necessary to the prosperity and sustenance of a great city.

The population of Paris, according to the last census, amounted to more than 900,000, which is an increase, since 1826 by nearly 180,000. This number does not take into consideration the multitude of "sojourners in the land" who make Paris their temporary residence and amusement. The number of these individuals this year was, at one period, 200,000.

In this immense collection of human beings we naturally look for many instances of wickedness and depravity, and we expect to be shocked by immorality and prostitution; but the statistics of this modern Pompeii exhibit, to my mind, a degree of licentiousness at once appalling and astounding. It appears that, 1826, for 7,755 marriages there were 25,311 births, of which 10,502 were illegitimate, 3,368 only being recognized by their fathers. It appears that of the inhabitants of Paris, 20,000 are foundlings—77,000 paupers; 80,000 servants; 350,000 laborers, and 360,000 people living on their incomes. The remainder consists of tradesmen and professionalists, who, however, do not amount to one third of the population. The expenses of the population have been calculated to amount to $95,000,000 francs, of which, while they lavish 60,000,000 in frequenting theatres, and 62,000,000 in dress, they only think it right to expend 30,000,000 in the education of their children. The amount spent in amusements is only one-fifth of what it was during the period of the revolution, for then there were thirty theatres open nightly, whilst now there are only five or six. These facts, in my estimation, are startling ones, and I do not consider the society of that country can be in a healthy state when such levity and careless pleasure form the chief recreation of the mind. I most heartily agree with the principles Dr. Vaughan, so eloquently laid down in one of his lectures at the Mechanics' Institution when he stated that wherever the people of a nation require constant excitement by gaudy spectacles framed by the rulers, that nation is fast crumbling to decay, and the securest and noblest pillars of its greatness, the genius and philanthropy of its people are fast being replaced by those sad attributes of wickedness, which lead to utter ruin and extinction. No person visiting Paris can be blind to the fact, that France is fast approaching this awful crisis, and whenever Louis Philippe, who is a great and good man, leaves his throne vacant, a commotion appears likely to ensue which must shake the nation to its heart.

Taking Paris as a whole, I do not consider it to be so fine a city as London. Although those buildings which are conspicuous are not at a levelled in England, there appears to exist a higher sense of the beautiful and classical in architecture than in England. The public edifices in France are generally, the very models of symmetry and perfection, a striking contrast to England, in which there is scarcely a single specimen of pure architecture. Our buildings are very elaborate and costly, but nothing in that grand antique regularity which is so essential to the beauty of an architectural design.

The number of triumphal arches and monuments to greatness and genius, the fountains which cool the air, and the delightful public gardens which gratify while they instruct, add much to the beauty of Paris, and compel you to feel that you are in the capital of a country peopled by a refined and polished race.

These few remarks which I have thrown together I feel very little satisfied with. I am conscious of having left much undone. My wish has been to give some general idea of the capital of Gaul. It is a great and splendid city, but bowed down by vices which even magnificence cannot palliate. In future communications I shall have a further opportunity of illustrating my views, and, in the meantime, I hope you may be able to give me a place in your paper of Monday.

DOLLARS AND CENTS.

When shall we have an American Currency? It is more than sixty years since we declared our independence of a Foreign power, and fifty-eight years since Federal money was established by Congress. We are yet, however, subject to the evils of a mixed currency, partly foreign, and partly domestic, which for its variety of values given to particular names, is even more embarrassing in commercial transactions than the uniform currency of England. It is time that a national pride, as well as sound sense, had banished from our shores and counting rooms such foreign and, to us, antiquated terms as pounds, shillings and pence, and that our simple republican nomenclature were substituted in their place. Merchants themselves may effect this change. Let me appeal to them to begin this patriotic—this national work. When asked the price of their goods let them give the price in dollars and cents, and not oblige their customers to translate their shillings and pence into something they can understand.

And the difficulty is increased in passing from one State to another. Let a New-Yorker travel into Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, or Georgia, and he might as well be in the German States almost, for the shilling has a different value in each of these States. In New York, North Carolina and Ohio there are eight shillings in a dollar, but in the New England States, Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee there are but six. In the former a shilling is equivalent to twelve and a half cents, in the latter to sixteen and two thirds. Each contains also a fractional number. Go into Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland, and you find that seven shillings and sixpence make a dollar, while in Georgia and South Carolina, the dollar, our money unit, has the representative value of four shillings and eight pence. When shall the evils of our colonial legislation cease? The people call for a reform. Let mercantile practice and legislation, if need be, unite in efforts to accomplish this work, and let the press agitate and agitate until we obtain a uniform and purely American currency throughout the whole Union. Will Editors, generally please copy the above, or write each a better article on this subject? Pass it on.

DECEM.

AN INTERESTING CASE.

A good deal of interest has been excited in Indiana in relation to a question involving the right of citizens of slave states to arrest fugitives in the N. W. Territory, and the States formed of the same, which has been pending in the U. S. Court, during its recent session in Indianapolis. The following is a summary of the points in question. It was an action of debt brought by plaintiff Singleton Vaughn against David Anthony to recover the penalty of $500, assessed by the act of Congress of 1793, for obstructing the plaintiff, and preventing him from arresting three fugitive slaves, claimed by him.

The declaration states, in substance, that the plaintiff is a citizen and resident of Missouri; that some seven years ago his slaves escaped from him and came to Hamilton Co., Indiana. That last spring he obtained a warrant for their arrest from an officer of Hamilton County, and proceeded to arrest them; and that the defendant interfered and prevented him from obtaining them.

The defendant demurred to the declaration, and assigned for the grounds of his demurrer, that, by the 6th article of the compact between the United States and the people of the North West Territory, the right of pursuing and reclaiming fugitives from labor, is only given to the citizens of the original States. That Missouri is not an original State, nor within the meaning of that article.

That the compact being declared unalterable forever, neither the Constitution of the Union, nor any act of Congress, can affect it.

That the act of Congress of 1793, made some six years after the compact, interferes with and violates it, and is an assumption of power, over a resident of a state, without authority.

That by the laws of Indiana every man within her territory is prima facie free, and that the laws of another State cannot make such a resident a slave.

That though any one of the citizens of any original State may claim his fugitive slave in Indiana, yet no citizen of a new State can.

That the only conditions by which the plaintiff, being a citizen of a new State, can hold his slaves, are: First, that he lawfully acquired them in the state of Missouri; and secondly, that he keeps them there, or without the boundaries of the North West Territory.

The cause is continued on demurrer, until the next term of the court.

This case raises in fact, the very question, which agitated Congress at the time of the admission of Missouri. The Legislative department then declared that slavery should be permitted in Missouri, as in the original States. Judicial decision is now demanded to know whether it could be so, in accordance with fundamental law.

Tragic scene on board the Ship Farwell.

Yesterday afternoon, on her voyage to Boston, in tow of the City Ice Boat, refused to do duty at the time the ship was to be cast off from the steamer, nearly opposite Marcus Hook. They were ordered aft by the first mate, Mr. Engles, at the request of Captain Farwell. While the Captain was taking their names they were highly mutinous in their language. Upon the mate's interfering to preserve discipline, one of the seamen, named Thos. Forbes, a Scotchman, drew a sheath knife on him and stabbed him in the left side near the heart. The mate staggered aft, declaring that he was murdered, and soon after expired. Forbes then approached Capt. Farwell, declaring himself to be the murderer, at the same time drawing his knife from his pocket in a menacing manner. The Captain leveled a pistol at him, and shot him, but he was not dead at the last accounts. The cause of this tragic event, like that of the majority of such occurrences, was rum.—Phila. Gaz.

Reduction of postage and the franking privilege.—In the House, on the 17th ult., Mr. Schenck moved the following resolution:

Resolved, that the committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to prepare and report to this House, as soon as practicable, a bill to regulate postages which shall embody among other things, the following features and provisions:

1. That postages on letters or packages, or other newspapers and periodical publications, shall be graduated with reference to the distance of transportation; but no charge on any such letter or package weighing no more than half an ounce, between any two points in the United States, to exceed five cents or be less than two cents.

2. That an additional charge, equal to the postage upon any letter or package, shall be made thereto for each additional quarter of an ounce, without reference in any case to the number of pieces of paper or matter of which such letter or package may be composed.

3. That all newspapers and printed periodicals shall be charged with postage at the rate of one cent for each half ounce in weight, and one cent additional for each quarter of an ounce over and beyond the first half ounce.

4. That all postages shall be paid in advance.

5. That the franking privilege, as now existing by law, of all officers of government, except members of Congress, shall be abolished; and that the privilege of members of Congress be limited to five francs per day, on letters sent by them, and otherwise restricted and reduced so as only to cover public documents printed by order of either House of Congress.

6. That at each of the Executive Departments of the government an account be kept of the postages paid on account of the public business, which accounts shall be verified, audited, and paid out of the treasury, as other expenditures of said Department.

Debate arising on this resolution, it was laid over under the rule.

Declivity of Rivers.—A very slight declivity will suffice to give the running motion to water. Three inches per mile, in a smooth, straight channel, gives a velocity of about three miles an hour. The Ganges which gathers the waters of the Himalaya mountains, the loftiest in the world, is at eighteen hundred miles from its mouth, only eight hundred feet above the level of the sea; that is about twice as high as St. Paul's Church in London, and to fall these eight hundred feet in its long course the water requires more than a month. The great river Magdalena, in South America, running for a thousand miles between two ridges of the Andes, falls only five hundred feet in all that distance. Above the commencement of the thousand miles it is seen descending in rapids and cataracts from the mountains. The gigantic Rio de la Plata has so gentle a descent to the ocean, that in Paraguay, fifteen hundred miles from its mouth, ships are seen which have sailed against the current all the way by the force of the wind alone; that is to say, which on the beautiful inclined plane of the stream, have been gradually lifted by the soft wind, and even against the current, to an elevation greater than that of our loftiest spire.—Pottsville Gaz.

Capt. Hayken.—A letter from Cape Hayken, dated December 10th, is given in the U. S. Gazette, (Philad.) by which we learn that the U. S. brig Somers, Commander Gerry, arrived here, 22d ult., on a mission relative to the imprisonment of Capt. Viguere. The Commander was received with great courtesy by the authorities; all documents referring to the case were laid before him, and after a thorough investigation of the affair, the Commander expressed himself entirely satisfied with their proceedings. Salutes were then exchanged, and on the 27th the Somers sailed for St. Jago de Cuba, via the Mole. It is due to the Government to say, that all other legal business was ordered to be suspended until this case was disposed of.

Political affairs have all along been quiet, but to-day a rumor is current of a new expedition against the Spanish part of the Island. It is said a large quantity of arms and ammunition has just been received at Port au Prince from Europe.

PUBLIC FEELING.

The proceedings of the City Council and of the citizens of Nauvoo, in to-day's paper, speak the feelings of honest men, and will be seconded and supported by every lover of law, order, country, and peace.

The charges made against Nauvoo are false, and we have matters of fact, (which have lately come to light) in a fair way to satisfy the public where the depot of thieves, and perhaps other "speculators" in crime, is located.

Suffice it to say—the Mormons will clear their skirts, as a community, (as they have ever been able to do,) of all the infractions of law and order, which are so dexterously trumped up against them, and leave them back into the bloody or unwashed faces of their enemies, and we call upon all honest men to help sustain the laws and rights of all wholesome citizens as one. Will the virtuous part of community do it?

TRADES MEETING.

There was a large assemblage on Tuesday evening; and the Committee to confer with the Trustees, reported favorably through the Chairman. Another Committee was appointed to confer with the owners of the land near the site of the dam, and to make arrangements for lands for the erection of buildings for machinery, and for stone for the dam.

The Trustees of the "Agricultural and Manufacturing Association" were requested to meet and fill vacancies of their officers, and prepare for business.

One thousand one hundred and fifty dollars were subscribed in shares of fifty dollars, for a commencement of the dam, and all things being about ready, it was deemed advisable that the work commence soon, if the weather continues as favorable as it now is. Adjourned till Tuesday the 21st.

JOHN TAYLOR, Chairman.

W. W. PHELPS, Secretary.

MASSACHUSETTS AND SOUTH CAROLINA.

The citizens of Shrewsbury, Worcester Co. Mass., at a recent town meeting adopted a series of spirited resolutions expressive of their indignation in view of their indignation in view of the expulsion of Mr. Hoar from Charleston.

The Springfield Gazette suggests the following method of proceeding in this troublesome case:

In our view, the only remedy left is for our vessels to provide themselves with the means of protecting the rights of their men, and if worse comes to worst, to resist to blood, the enforcement of the manifestly unjust and unconstitutional laws that would deprive a citizen of Massachusetts of his freedom, for no other offence than a dark skin. It is well known that the odious law referred to is not enforced upon English vessels, for the good reason that England would not submit to it. Let a South Carolina officer board an English vessel and attempt to carry off a portion of its crew, and he knows full well what would be the consequence. They dare not enforce this law, except upon those who will tamely submit to it. Let us now see if there be any virtue in old Massachusetts to resist such a wrong.

This seems to be the only remedy left; and if the consequence of a resort to it should be the interference of the General Government, why it would be all the better, and would bring the whole matter to an early adjudication. Let it for once be shown that there is a point beyond which the forbearance of our State cannot go, and it will do much towards a prompt settlement of the question, soon to be agitated, whether our Union is worth preserving.

Anti-Rent Troubles.—On Friday last an express arrived at Albany from Hudson, with the intelligence that the Sheriff of Columbia County, in his efforts to arrest the murderers of Reifenberg, had been resisted by a formidable assemblage of "Indians." The authorities of Hudson also expected an attempt to rescue the prisoners already in custody; and in view of these new and alarming causes of apprehension, they demanded an additional military force to guard the city and aid the Sheriff.

Gov. Bouck held a cabinet consultation, and forthwith directed the Adjutant General to make a requisition for two companies in Albany, and a company of cavalry in the City of New-York. The Buff. Regts. Corps and the Emmett Guards, a fine corps of Albany, were put under orders. The Burgesses are already on the ground, as volunteers. The Guards took the 1 o'clock train on Saturday for Hudson. They will number from 50 to 60 musketeers. The order for cavalry was made upon a company attached to Gen. Storms's brigade.

One of the results of the examination at Hudson was that Boughton (Big Thunder) was fully committed for the murder of Reifenberg.

In Reifenberg, two further arrests were made on Thursday, by the Sheriff, without difficulty, of persons suspected of being concerned in the murder of Smith. The persons are Wm. Parks and Charles Smith, who are now in custody at Troy, and were under examination on Friday.

More Anti-Rent Troubles.—The order of Governor Bouck for a detachment of cavalry from this city, was promptly obeyed on Monday by them despatching two companies—those of Captains Krack and Heath—numbering sixty men. A writer in the Troy Whig defends Sheriff Reynolds against accusations of immorality, made by the Budget, and introduces the following charges against the Governor. He says:

I saw his Excellency at Ulino's corner—I saw him enter a room for the avowed purpose of having a private conversation with a committee of the united association. This was after Sheriff Reynolds had been attacked by "Indians," after deputies had been searched and robbed of their papers, and after every species of outrage, save murder, had been perpetrated by them. On this very day 130 "Indians" were assembled at that village to welcome his Excellency. Their disguises were so outlandish as to beggar description, and all were armed to the teeth and mounted on horses.

After the conclusion of his very satisfactory conference with that committee, he mounted a rostrum in the yard in front of the village church, from which an anti-rent speaker had been holding forth, and there, in the presence of the largest crowd that was ever assembled in this village, and surrounded by 130 disguised, armed and mounted men, received the heartfelt congratulations of hundreds of members of and contributors to the anti-rent association, who were all the remainder of that day boasting that all the Governor lacked of being an Indian was the eagle.

But further still; I stop not here. After the return of his Excellency from Ulino's corner, he told the sheriff of this county, who called upon him for advice and assistance in regard to his duty, that he must remain quiet until he, the sheriff, heard from him, the Governor; for he, the Governor, had opened with the anti-renters a negotiation, the consummation of which might be defeated by any action on the part of the sheriff. And from that day to this, he has never said one word to the sheriff in regard to the progress or position of that negotiation.

FROM TEXAS.

By the arrival of the U. S. revenue cutter Woodbury, Capt. Nimmo, at New Orleans on the 19th, Galveston papers were received to the 11th inst. The news is unimportant. Captain Nimmo is the bearer of despatches from the U. S. Charge d'Affaires in Texas which were forwarded to Washington.

The British frigate Spartan touched at Galveston on the 6th inst., and landed Capt. Elliot, the British Charge d'Affaires to Texas, who was to proceed forthwith to the seat of Government. The Spartan remained a short time, and then sailed for Vera Cruz, having, it is said, important despatches for the Mexican Government.

Two of the officers of the revenue cutter Woodbury, Lieutenants Frohland and Usher, fought a duel at the place known as the Texas Navy Yard, on the morning of the 8th inst., as we learn from the Galveston News. Single shots exchanged; no damage done.

The Civilian publishes Major Donelson's address on delivering his letter of credence to Mr. Jones, the then Secretary of State, and now President of Texas, and Mr. Jones' reply. The only passage worthy of particular notice is the conclusion of Mr. Jones' reply, where speaking of his elevation by the people to the Presidency, he says, "I can only assure you that the increase of my responsibilities and trusts will be attended with a corresponding desire on my part not to disappoint their just expectations in preserving the relations, as they now subsist between the two countries, in harmonious accordance with the public will."

From La Guayra.—By the arrival of the Orion at Philadelphia, on Thursday, we have intelligence from La Guayra to November 15th. A. H. Hall, Charge d'Affaires from the United States, was to leave in the next ship, his place to be filled by the new Minister, Mr. Ellis. A rather serious insurrection had broken out in the neighborhood of La Guayra, about some 6 or 7 miles from Caracas; a flag of truce was sent to the hostile army, with offers of pardon and protection to all who would return peaceably to their homes. These offers were, however, rejected, and a battle ensued, which resulted in the complete overthrow of the rebels, and the death of their leaders, Centeno and Alvarado. The insurgents numbered about 400 men.

FLORIDA.

This Territory is now an applicant to Congress for admission into the Union as a State having formed and adopted a State Constitution. She has not the amount of Federal Population (70,680) required to entitle her to admission according to the Ordinance of 1787, but her people claim and exemption from the application of the general rule, by virtue of the stipulation contained in the Treaty of Cession, 1810, wherein (Art 6) our Government contracted that the inhabitants of the territories which his Catholic Majesty cedes to the United States by this treaty shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States as soon as may be consistent with the principles of the Federal Constitution, (not Ordinances of 1787) and admitted to the enjoyment of all the privileges, rights and immunities of the citizens of the United States.

Florida has never increased very rapidly in population. Her tropical climate is insalubrious, her superficial area is abundantly large, but much of it is barren sand and more is covered with shallow water and irreclaimable morasses. Much of it is unhealthy. Then the atrocious Seminole war, while it prodigally enriched the shaming law, impoverished many arrested industry and improvement, drove away many and for years prevented immigration. Her total population was, by the State Census of 1833, only 48,223, of whom 21, 132 were slaves and 938 Free Blacks. In 1840, her total population was 54,207. It is now probably not far from 60,000.

As the subject of Slavery will undoubtedly be agitated in connection with the admission of Florida, we publish all we can find in her proposed State Constitution on referring to the subject. It occurs under the head of

Art. XVI.—General Provisions:

1. The General Assembly shall have no power to pass laws for the emancipation of Slaves.

2. They shall have no power to prevent emigrants to this State from bringing with them such persons as may be deemed slaves by the laws of any one of the United States; provided, they shall have power to enact laws to prevent the introduction of any slaves who may have committed crimes in other States.

3. The General Assembly shall have power to pass laws to prevent free negroes, mulattoes, and other persons of color, from immigrating to this State, or from being discharged from on board any vessel in any of the ports of Florida.

THE VOICE OF NAUVOO!

PROCEEDINGS OF THE CITY COUNCIL.

PREAMBLE.

It is with feelings of deep and inexpressible regret that we learn that the inhabitants of various parts of this state are seeking to accumulate all the real and supposed crimes of the whole community for the secret or ostensible purpose of raising a tide of influence against the Mormon community that shall sweep them into irretrievable ruin. This course of conduct, originating with our mortal enemies and gathering in its wake, other men that would revolt at the idea of lending a hand to oppress a long abused people that are struggling against foes within and free without; is at the present almost insupportable to our feelings.

We have secretly laid by our mourning weeds for murdered men, whom we promptly surrendered up to the State of Illinois for an equitable trial. And now we see in embryo another campaign to spill yet more blood and effect an utter extermination and massacre. We sought to rid our city of counterfeiters and blacklegs; to rise together with our foes without and within, had established a printing press of unparalleled enormity and malignity. But our efforts to obtain freedom from such vicious monsters cost us much tribulation and precious blood.

The impunity thus far granted the murderers by the Senate and other authorities of the State of Illinois, has emboldened them and their apologists to set on foot a series of other exciting evens that they hope will either destroy this community or prevent their criminals from being brought to punishment. We have not so much fear that our enemies will succeed in their fiendish designs against us, as we have that the peace and good order of the people of this State will be disturbed, and fearful anarchy and bloody misrule will ensue among those who listen to and countenance the ill designs of those who are stealing from quiet citizens of the State and palming upon them a spurious and false agency, and charging to the Mormons their own crimes. If they shall succeed, the citizens will be involved in continual larcenies, and neighborhood broils, and crimes, the end of which cannot now be foreseen. We deprecate such evils and calamities because we desire the good of all mankind; as the grateful laborers of the greater portion of our citizens in spreading truth throughout the world under much poverty and suffering, abundantly prove.

As for us, our course is fixed, and while we are peaceable and loyal to the constitution and laws of our country, and are ever willing to join hands with the honest, virtuous, and patriotic in suppressing crime and punishing criminals, we will leave our enemies to judge, whether it would not be better to make Nauvoo one universal burying ground, before we suffer ourselves to be driven from our hard earned and lawful homes, by such high-handed oppression, and it may yet become a question to be decided by the community, whether the Mormons will, after having witnessed their best men murdered without redress, quietly, and patiently, suffer their enemies to wrench from them the last shreds of their constitution, all rights; and whether they will not make their city one great sepulchre, rather than be the humble devotees at the shrine of mobocracy. But for the satisfaction of all concerned, we reiterate in the following resolutions, sentiments that we have always expressed in all places on occasion demanded:

Resolved, That the greater part of the thefts which have been complained of, are not in our opinion, true in fact, but have been trumped up by inimical persons, in order to cover their aggressive doings, with plausibility, and entice honest and unwary citizens to unite with them in the same uncompromising hostility against this people.

Resolved, That we defy the world to substantiate a single instance, where we have concealed criminals, or screened them from justice; but, on the contrary, always have been, and now are, extremely anxious that they should be ferreted out and brought to justice; and to this end would esteem it a favor, that if any person should lose property, or have good and sufficient reason to suspect any place of containing apparatus for making boys or counterfeit money, that such person would follow up, trace, out, and make diligent search for all such property and apparatus, and if they can trace it into this city, we pledge ourselves to assist them legally, to the extent of our abilities in an honorable undertaking.

Resolved, That it is our opinion that every man, woman, child, such as thieves, robbers, burglars, counterfeiters and murderers, have been induced from reports published in the Warsaw Signal, to flock into this county in order to carry on their evil practices, knowing that it would be immediately charged upon the Mormons, and thereby they escape—and although we think that the reports of thefts have been very much exaggerated, yet we know from dear-bought experience that such things do exist, and further we doubt not there may be some such characters prowling in and about our city.

Resolved, That we are extremely anxious to ferret out and bring to justice, each person, if any, that are within the limits of our city, and for this purpose we have authorized our Mayor, to enlarge the police, to any number, not exceeding five hundred, and we shall order ourselves to double our diligence, and call upon our citizens to assist in rid of our city and country of all such infamous characters.

Done, in Council, this 13th day of January, 1845.

MEETING OF THE CITIZENS.

At a large meeting of the citizens of Nauvoo, convened at the stand, on the 14th day of Jan. 1845; Daniel Spencer, Mayor of the city, called to the chair, and James Sloan appointed secretary; and Samuel Boat, Alpheus Cutler, C. C. Rich, Phineas Richards, and David Palmer, were appointed a committee, to draft a preamble and resolutions expressive of the sense of this meeting on the proceedings of the city council, and for the action of this meeting. The committee retired, and in a short time, returned the following, which were adopted unanimously:

Whereas, The city council of the city of Nauvoo, have presented to this meeting, a preamble and sundry resolutions setting forth the fact, that enemies to the people of this city, and as we believe, enemies to the common welfare of the people of this State, are attempting to get up an extensive popular excitement, prejudicial to this people and the country at large; and whereas, said resolutions set forth an unqualified reprobation of all unlawful and villainous conduct whether under the false color of Mormonism, or the real guise of mobbers, blacklegs, bogus makers, thieves, wolf-hunters, or murderers; therefore, we hereby express our perfect concurrence in the said preamble and resolutions.

And whereas, The Warsaw Signal, the Alton Telegraph, and the Quincy Whig, have been as we believe industriously engaged in circulating falsehood; disseminating discord, and the principles of mobocracy; and whereas, Mormon extermination, pillage, robbery, and murder have received both countenance and apology in these scurrilous prints, as we live, and whereas, the pen of murderers as we believe, has occupied the columns of these papers in order to defend the cries of innocent blood that ascends to heaven for vengeance; and whereas, a large share of the thefts spoken of and blazed through the land, are with fly without existence which traced out, as appears not only from the instance recorded in the Governor's Message concerning horse stealing, but from other similar instances, too numerous to mention; and whereas, it has been zealously reported, that much stolen goods, could be traced to Nauvoo, and that no citizen could enter our city to search for thieves, and stolen goods, because the thief and goods would be screened from detection by the Mormon fraternity, and the person in search, would be in jeopardy of his life; and whereas, thieves and counterfeiters have in some instances fled to our city, either under the mistaken apprehension that we would screen them, or from a malignant desire to palm upon us their own crimes, and thereby draw us under the lash of persecution. And whereas, it can be proved that individuals, in order to swell the list of Mormon depredations, have reported property to be stolen, which at another time they have acknowledged, they sold the same property and received pay.

And whereas, the yards have been robbed, the fires left at the Mormon doors, to palm the theft upon us, when the honor has been found in the houses of our enemies; and whereas, an innumerable number of such infamous tricks have been played upon us, by our enemies, as we believe, for the purpose of blackening our character in the eyes of honest men; and whereas, our city is nightly infested with a set of outlandish men, who, we believe, visit us for no good purpose, who do not appear to have any lawful business, but rather as we believe, are endeavoring to scatter amongst us, their bogus and counterfeit, prostitute the virtue of the place, deposit stolen goods, or steal from us, and by every means in their power, sow the seeds of discord, strife, confusion, mobocracy, and murder, that in the end, they may uproot our beautiful city; and whereas, that in some instances, when the ministers of justice, have visited our city, at the dark hour of midnight, for the purpose of making legal arrests, as they say, we believe what is reported to us, that they have employed runners to steal the saddles and bridles from their own horses, while in our city, for the purpose of damping us in the eyes of the community.

And whereas, the Chief Magistrate of this State, after a second and protracted visit to this city, and much pains taken to investigate the charge of promiscuous stealing, reports to the Legislature as follows:

"Justice, however, requires me here to say, that I have investigated the charge of promiscuous stealing and find it to be greatly exaggerated. I could not ascertain that there were a greater proportion of thieves in that community, than in any other of the same number of inhabitants; and perhaps if the city of Nauvoo, were compared with St. Louis, or any other western city, the proportion would not be so great."

And whereas, The printing office of our open and avowed enemy, Dr. Foster, was set on fire, in this city by himself, or by his instruction as we believe, to fan the flame of mobocracy, which fire was only prevented by our vigilant police.

And whereas, we firmly believe, that our enemies in this city, have several times attempted to fire their own buildings and have only been prevented by the diligence of our officers.

Therefore, be it resolved, unanimously, That we will use all lawful means in our power to assist the public to prevent stealing and bogus making, and bring the offenders to justice.

Resolved, that to prevent further depredations in our city, by lawless desperadoes from abroad, we approve the raising of 500 Police by this city.

Resolved, unanimously, That we invite all honest men to watch closely their property, and arrest all thieves; and if they shall catch a thief in the act of stealing, challenge him to stand, and if he refuses so to do, and flees, so far as the Mormons are concerned, we will be satisfied if the owners of the property shall specify send him a writ of Habeas Corpus, sealed with lead, to arrest his progress, but after all, should the thief prove to be a mobocrat, alas! O what a pity!

Resolved, unanimously, That 50 delegates be sent to the surrounding country to inform the people of the designs of our enemies now concocting in their secret and public meetings, so that the honest part of the community, may unite with us, to prevent stealing and secure peace.

Resolved, That these proceedings be published in the papers at Nauvoo, with a request that other papers copy them.

DANIEL SPENCER, Mayor.

JAMES SLOAN, Sec'y.

Sam Slick's Vanity.—His vanity was of two kinds, national and personal.—The first he has in company with a vast number of Americans. He calls his country the greatest nation upon the globe; he boasts that the Yankees are the most free and enlightened citizens on the face of the earth, and that their institutions are the perfection of human wisdom. He is of his father's opinion, that the battle of Bunker-hill was the greatest battle ever fought; that their naval victories were the most brilliant achievements ever heard of; that New York is superior to London in beauty, and will soon be so in extent and finally, that one Yankee is equal in all respects to two Englishmen, at least. If the Thames is mentioned, he calls it an insignificant creek, and reminds you that the Mississippi extends inland a greater distance than the space between Nova Scotia and England. If a noble old park tree is pointed out to him, he calls it a pretty little scrub oak, and immediately boasts of the pines of the Rocky Mountains, which, he affirms, are two hundred feet high. Show him a waterfall, and it is a noisy, babbling, little cascade compared with the Niagara; or a lake, and it is a mere duck pond in comparison with Erie, Superior, Champlain, or Michigan. It has been remarked by most travellers that this sort of thing is so common in the States that it may be said to be almost universal. This is not now the case. It has prevailed more generally heretofore than at present, but it is now not much more obvious than in the people of any other country. The necessity for it no longer exists. That the Americans are proud of having won their independence at the point of the sword from the most powerful nation in the world, under all the varied circumstances of poverty, dissensions, want of discipline in their soldiers, and experience in their officers is not to be wondered at. They have reason to be proud of it. It is the greatest achievement of modern times. That they are proud of the consummate skill of their forefathers in framing a constitution the best suited to their position and their wants, and one, withal, the most difficult in the world to adjust, not only with proper checks and balances, but with any checks at all, at a time, too, when there was no model before them, and all experience against them, is still less to be wondered at. Nor have we any reason to object to the honest pride they exhibit of their noble country, their enlightened and enterprising people, their beautiful cities, their magnificent rivers, their gigantic undertakings. The sudden rise of a nation, like the sudden rise of individuals, legends, under similar circumstances, similar effects. While there was the freshness of novelty about all these things there was national vanity. It is now an old story: their laurels set easy on them. They are accustomed to them, and they occupy less of their thoughts and, of course, less of their conversation, than formerly.—Sam Slick in England.

THE VOICE OF NAUVOO! PROCEEDINGS OF THE CITY COUNCIL.

PREAMBLE.

It is with feelings of deep and inexpressible regret that we learn that the inhabitants of various parts of this state are seeking to accumulate all the real and supposed crimes of the whole community for the secret or ostensible purpose of raising a tide of influence against the Mormon community that shall sweep them into irrecoverable ruin. This course of conduct, originating with our mortal enemies and gathering in its wake, other men that would revolt at the idea of lending a hand to oppress a long abused people that are struggling against foes within and foes without, is at the present almost insupportable to our feelings.—We have scarcely laid by our mourning weeds for murdered men, whom we promptly surrendered up to the State of Illinois for an equitable trial—And now we see in embryo another campaign to spill yet more blood and effect an utter extermination and massacre. We sought to rid our city of counterfeiters and blacklegs; these together with our foes without and within, had established a printing press of unparalleled rancor and malignity. But our efforts to obtain freedom from such vicious monsters cost us much tribulation and precious blood.

The impunity thus far granted the murderers by the Senate and other authorities of the State of Illinois, has emboldened them and their apologists to set on foot a series of other exciting causes that they hope will either destroy this community, or prevent their criminals from being brought to punishment. We have not so much fear that our enemies will succeed in their fiendish designs against us, as we have that the peace and good order of the people of this State will be disturbed, and fearful anarchy and bloody misrule will ensue among those who listen to and countenance the fell designs of those who are stealing from quiet citizens of the State and palming upon them a spurious and false currency, and charging to the Mormons their own crimes. If they shall succeed, the citizens will be involved in continual larcenies, and neighborhood broils, and crimes, the end of which cannot now be foreseen. We deprecate such evils and calamities because we desire the good of all mankind; as the gratuitous labors of the greater portion of our citizens in spreading truth throughout the world, under much poverty and suffering, abundantly prove.

As for us, our course is fixed, and while we are peaceable and loyal to the constitution, and laws of our country, and are ever willing to join hands with the honest, virtuous, and patriotic in suppressing crime and punishing criminals, we will leave our enemies to judge, whether it would not be better to make Nauvoo one universal baring ground, before we suffer ourselves to be driven from our hard earned and lawful homes, by such high-handed oppression, and it may yet become a question to be decided by the community, whether the Mormons will, after having witnessed their best men murdered without redress, quietly and patiently, suffer their enemies to wrench from them the last shreds of their constitutional rights; and whether they will not make their city one great sepulchre, rather than be the humble devotees at the shrine of mobocracy. But for the satisfaction of all concerned, we reiterate in the following resolutions, sentiments that we have always expressed in all places as occasion demanded:

Resolved, That the greater part of the thefts which have been complained of, are not in our opinion, true in fact, but have been trumped up by inimical persons, in order to cover their aggressive doings, with plausibility, and entice honest and unwary citizens to unite with them in the same uncompromising hostility against this people.

Resolved, That we defy the world to substantiate a single instance, where we have concealed criminals, or screened them from justice; but, on the contrary, always have been, and now are, extremely anxious that they should be ferretted out and brought to justice; and to this end would esteem it a favor, that if any person should lose property, or have good and sufficient reason to suspect any place of containing apparatus for making bogus or counterfeit money, that such person would follow up, trace out, and make diligent search, for all such property and apparatus, and if they can trace it into this city, we pledge ourselves to assist them legally, to the extent of our abilities in so laudable an undertaking.

Resolved, That it is our opinion that very many scoundrels, such as thieves, robbers, bogus makers, counterfeiters and murderers, have been induced from reports published in the Warsaw Signal, to flock into this county in order to carry on their evil practices, knowing that it would be immediately charged upon the Mormons, and thereby they escape—and although we think that the reports of thefts have been very much exaggerated, yet we know from dear bought experience that such things do exist, and further we doubt not there may be some such characters prowling in and about our city.

Resolved, That we are extremely anxious to ferret out and bring to justice, all such persons, if any, that are within the limits of our city, and for this purpose we have authorized our Mayor to enlarge the police, to any number, not exceeding five hundred, and we also pledge ourselves to double our diligence, and call upon our citizens to assist in ridding our city and country of all such infamous characters.

Done, in Council, this 13th day of January, 1845.

D. SPENCER, Mayor.

W. Richards, Recorder.

MEETING OF THE CITIZENS.

At a large meeting of the citizens of Nauvoo, convened at the stand, on the 14th day of Jan. 1845; Daniel Spencer, Mayor of the city, was called to the chair, and James Sloan appointed secretary; and Samuel Bent, Alpheus Cutler, C. C. Rich, Phineas Richards, and David Fulmer, were appointed a committee, to draft a preamble and resolutions, expressive of the sense of this meeting on the proceedings of the city council, and for the action of this meeting. The committee retired and in a short time, returned the following, which were adopted unanimously:

PREAMBLE.

Whereas, The city council of the city of Nauvoo, have presented to this meeting, a preamble and sundry resolutions setting forth the fact, that enemies to the people of this city, and as we believe, enemies to the common welfare of the people of this State, are attempting to get up an extensive popular excitement, prejudicial to this people and the country at large; and whereas, said resolutions set forth an unqualified reprobation of all unlawful and villainous conduct whether under the false color of Mormonism, or the real guise of mobbers, blacklegs, bogus makers, thieves, wolf-hunters, or murderers; therefore, we hereby express our perfect concurrence in the said preamble and resolutions.

And whereas, The Warsaw Signal, the Alton Telegraph, and the Quincy Whig, have been, as we believe industriously engaged in circulating falsehood; disseminating discord, and the principles of mobocracy; and whereas, Mormon extermination, pillage, robbery, and murder, have received both countenance and apology in these scurrilous prints, as we believe, and whereas, the pen of murderers as we believe, has occupied the columns of these papers in order to deafen the cries of innocent blood that ascends to heaven for vengeance; and whereas, a large share of the thefts spoken of and blazed through the land, are wholly without existence when traced out, as appears not only from the instance recorded in the Governor's Message concerning horse stealing, but from other similar instances, too numerous to mention; and whereas, it has been zealously reported, that much stolen goods could be traced to Nauvoo, and that no citizen could enter our city to search for thieves, and stolen goods, because the thief and goods would be screened from detection by the Mormon fraternity, and the person in search, would be in jeopardy of his life; and whereas, thieves and counterfeiters have in some instances fled to our city, either under the mistaken apprehension that we would screen them, or from a malignant design to palm upon us their own crimes, and thereby draw us under the lash of persecution. And whereas, it can be proved that individuals, in order to swell the list of Mormon depredations, have reported property to be stolen, which at another time they have acknowledged, they sold the same property and received pay.

And whereas, bee yards have been robbed, the hives left at the Mormons doors, to palm the theft upon us, when the honey has been found in the houses of our enemies; and whereas, an innumerable number of such infamous tricks have been played upon us, by our enemies, as we believe, for the purpose of blackening our character in the eyes of honest men; and whereas, our city is nightly infested with a set of outlandish men, who, we believe, visit us for no good purpose, who do not appear to have any lawful business, but rather as we believe, are endeavoring to scatter amongst us, their bogus and counterfeits, prostitute the virtue of the place, deposit stolen goods, or steal from us, and by every means in their power, sow the seeds of discord, strife, confusion, mobocracy, and murder, that in the end, they may uproot our beautiful city; and whereas, that in some instances, when the ministers of justice, have visited our city, at the dark hour of midnight, for the purpose of making legal arrests, as they say; we believe what is reported to us, that they have employed runners to steal the saddles and bridles from their own horses, while in our city, for the purpose of damning us in the eyes of the community.

And whereas, the Chief Magistrate of this State, after a second and protracted visit to this city, and much pains taken to investigate the charge of promiscuous stealing, reports to the Legislature as follows:

"Justice, however, requires me here to say, that I have investigated the charge of promiscuous stealing, and find it to be greatly exaggerated. I could not ascertain that there were a greater proportion of thieves in that community, than in any other of the same number of inhabitants; and perhaps if the city of Nauvoo, were compared with St. Louis, or any other western city, the proportion would not be so great."

And whereas, The printing office of our open and avowed enemy, Dr. Foster, was set on fire, in this city by himself, or by his instruction as we believe, to fan the flame of mobocracy, which fire was only prevented by our vigilant police.

And whereas, we firmly believe, that our enemies in this city, have several times, attempted to fire their own buildings and have only been prevented by the diligence of our officers.

Therefore, be it resolved, unanimously, That we will use all lawful means in our power to assist the public to prevent stealing and bogus making, and bring the offenders to justice.

Resolved, that to prevent further depredations in our city, by lawless desperadoes from abroad, we approve the raising of 500 Police by this city.

Resolved, unanimously, That we invite all honest men to watch closely their property, and arrest all thieves; and if they shall catch a thief in the act of stealing, challenge him to stand, and if he refuses so to do, and flees, so far as the Mormons are concerned, we will be satisfied if the owners of the property shall speedily send after him a writ of Habeas Corpus sealed with lead to arrest his progress, but after all, should the thief prove to be a mobocrat, alas! alas!! O what a pity!

Resolved, unanimously, That 50 delegates be sent to the surrounding country to inform the people of the designs of our enemies now concocting in their secret and public meetings, so that the honest part of the community, may unite with us, to prevent stealing and secure peace.

Resolved, That these proceedings be published in the papers at Nauvoo, with a request that other papers copy them.

DANIEL SPENCER, Ch'n.

JAMES SLOAN, Sec'y.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Nauvoo, Jan. 17, 1845.

As much has been said concerning stealing and secreting property in this city, for the purpose of giving an impression abroad that Nauvoo was a grand Depot for concealing stolen property, and that the Mormon community was concerned in it,—I will state, that so far as my knowledge extends, concerning the matter, I have ascertained that stolen property has been brought by way of Nauvoo, from the country, and then crossed over the Mississippi river to Iowa, and back into the Territory some ten or twelve miles; where the thieves have some friends to conceal stolen property.

There seems to be a connection of these friends thirty or forty miles back into the country on this side of the river, who, with five or six in this city, seem to have a line for running stolen property through Nauvoo to the Territory of Iowa; and I have good reason to believe that those in the country on this side of the river, those in the city, and those in the Territory, are one clan, but they are not Mormons; have the Mormons any fellowship with them.

I have taken pains to go with a person from the country, with a writ, and have searched every house suspected, till the person was satisfied, and till I was satisfied myself that no such property, as claimed, was in the city.

I have good reason to believe that scoundrels stay in Nauvoo, and when stolen property comes into the city, they are ready to pass it on to the Territory, and screen themselves under the cloak of Mormonism, in order that the Mormons may bear the blame. If people will satisfy themselves as I have done, they may find a "Depot" in the regions of no containing the greater part of the property charged to the Mormons.

I would state further, that the Mormons had no agency in the searches I made, but that I made them, at the instance of men from the country, and that I spent three days in the Territory of Iowa, searching into the facts and matters, and my statements are made up from personal observation.

THE MAID OF JUDAH.

And shall the children of Judah sing,
The lay of our happier time,
And strike the harp with the gold in string,
Neath the sun of an eastern clime.
This was the lay of a Jewish maid,
Though not in her own father's land;
So sweetly she sang, as in sadness she stray'd,
O'er the ruins of Babylon to-day.

Again shall the children, &c.
O where are the sons of this ancient race,
Who the bow and the javelin did bear,
Fallen in that city, whose wreck I now trace,
Though it once was so lovely and fair.
The green grass o'er that fertile spot,
Where once grew the loveliest of flowers,
Faint of my kindred that it ne'er be forgot,
Whilst the ruins remain of thy towers.
Again shall the children, &c.

IMPORTANT NEWS FROM MEXICO.

OVERTHROW OF SANTA ANNA!

By the arrival at New Orleans, of the schooner Fortuna, from Vera Cruz, we are put in possession of the most important intelligence from Mexico. That Republic is now the scene of a domestic commotion, which has resulted in the overthrow of Santa Anna and his ministers.

On the 3d ult. a decree for the dissolution of the Chambers was published in Mexico, by Canalezo, by order of Santa Anna, who was at Queretaro, with some 9,000 men, on his march against Paredes. The excitement caused in Mexico, by this decree was immense, and the Chambers made three protests and a proclamation to the inhabitants of the Republic, which were about being published, when, by an order from Canalezo, all the printing offices in Mexico were closed, and all publications of any class forbidden, with the exception of that infamous organ of the tyrant, the "Diario del Gobierno." This was adding fuel to the fire, and the excitement became so great and so general, in every class of society, that Canalezo assembled all his troops, about 2,000 in number, within the palace, and shut himself up with them and his four ministers.

On the morning of the 6th, public feeling burst out in a general riot, and all the most respectable part of the male community presented themselves in hand, together with the lower populace in the convent of St. Francisco, where the Congress had assembled, after having been driven from the Chambers, and from thence marched up en masse, to the Palace, and demanded the surrender of Canalezo, giving him two hours to reflect before they commenced hostilities.

Canalezo, far from being willing to listen to reason, prepared to make a sortie at the head of his troops, and, having called upon them to follow him, one of his chief officers replied, that he was the soldier of no tyrant, but of the nation, and shouted out, "Viva el Congreso!" which was echoed throughout the ranks. Canalezo, thus finding himself alone, retired in consternation to his apartments, and having assembled his ministers, demanded from the populace and the troops, now united, quarters for his own life, and that of his ministers. To this it was replied, that he should receive only the guarantee of a trial; upon which, finding that nothing better could be done, he surrendered himself, and was placed under arrest, he and two of his ministers, the Minister of War and Senator Rejon having escaped. The populace proceeded to the house, and took the portrait of Santa Anna from the Acuataminto, and dragged it through the streets, making ten thousand pieces of it, that each one might have one as a trophy. They then overthrew the famous statue of him, which had been erected in the middle of the public square, and after having decapitated it, dragged the trunk in triumph through the streets. This done, they proceeded to the Pantheon of St. Fernando, where Santa Anna's leg was interred with so much ceremony. The monument containing it was destroyed in the twinkling of an eye, and the embalmed leg was dragged forth and kicked through the streets.

In Puebla, his portrait and statue very soon disappeared before the fury of the populace.

In Vera Cruz, on the morning of the 9th, Col. Cenobio pronounced in favor of Congress, about six miles from that place, with about 1,000 Jarochos. A deputation was immediately sent to the Governor of Vera Cruz in the name of Cenobio and the "Pueblo" of that place, to demand that he should either pronounce or give up the command. He took the former alternative, and declined in favor of the Congress.

The populace, which then filled the Plaza to overflowing, commenced their rejoicing. The portrait of Santa Anna was thrown from the balcony into the square, torn to pieces, and then the fragments consumed in a bonfire. Then the populace commenced the shouts—death to Gonzalez, Aquilera, Tenlet, Escobar, Ascumbe, and all the friends of Santa Anna. A general rush was made towards the residences of these citizens, and the populace was only kept at bay by the respectable part of the citizens, who had prohibited to the Com. General the introduction of a single soldier in the square. The people were only appeased by the promise of the Comandant, that all the obnoxious persons should be expelled from Vera Cruz. The excitement lasted till ten at night, when quiet was restored.

It is feared that Santa Anna will endeavor to force his way into Vera Cruz, and consequently, every Mexican citizen has enlisted himself in the militia, and taken up arms to defend the town. Col. Cenobio marched into town the day following, with 800 cavalry. The people feel that they must fight now, not merely for their liberty, but for their lives; and acting under such feelings, they must be successful.

The Castle of Perote pronounced for the Congress. The new government has removed Quijano, and put Gen. Juo in his place.

Santa Anna, by last accounts, was still at Queretaro. The impression is, that in a very few days his head will fall. He is hemmed in by determined enemies, who will not permit him to escape.

Unheard of Barbarity—Arson and Deliberate Attempt to Burn a Mother and Her Two Children.—One of the most deliberate and barbarous outrages ever perpetrated in a civilized community was committed Monday morning in the upper part of the city, by a wretch who claims to be of the human species. Of all the terrible crimes that were ever attempted in this city, this one is the most shocking, and one can scarcely think of it without shuddering.

On Sunday morning, a woman named Catherine Hanlin, wife of Edward, who lives in a little shanty on the north side of 15th street, was standing at her door, when a man named Andrew Klem, who occupies a shanty adjoining, threw several stones at her, which struck her side and bruised her considerably. She could only attribute his conduct to a trifling squabble they had a few days previous. Monday morning, about half past 7 o'clock, a short time after her husband had left the house to go to his work, Mrs. Hanlin, who was lying asleep in bed with her infant child and a boy named Lawrence, was awakened by a hammering at the door, and on looking up, heard the blows of an axe, and soon saw a portion of the door burst in and fire and smoke pour through the aperture. Dreadfully alarmed, she sprang from the bed with the child in her arms, and rushed to the door, which was the only means of exit from the house, except the window. In her terror she saw Klem in front of the door, piling up burning straw, wood, and shavings against the door; and on attempting to go out, he took a long pole, which he held, and thrust it at her with both hands. She immediately felt a sharp instrument pierce her thigh. Seeing that Klem was perfectly sober, she became suddenly convinced that his intention was to burn her and her children to death; and in this awful situation, with the prospect of a terrible death before her, she frantically screamed murder, and, rushing to the window, endeavored to escape there. Klem, however, perceived her intention, and jumping upon a barrel that was in front of the window, with a large piece of board in his hand, brandished it in such a manner that she dared not attempt to get out. The smoke by this time had filled the room so that she could scarcely breathe, and the child was screaming in agony and gasping as if in the last struggle. With the strong feeling of a mother for her offspring, and as a last hope of saving its life, she covered it up in a feather bed, and immediately after fell down insensible. Thus much of this tale of horror she relates herself. The residue of the frightful narrative is told by other persons.

Mr. Archibald Brown, of 16th st., heard the alarm of fire about half past seven o'clock, and on looking towards the house of Hanlin, saw a man in front of it piling up straw and wood, which was in flames; he ran towards the spot, and there saw a manœuvre that he could not understand; and just before he reached the spot, the man went into the adjoining house, and a person, named Lee, came up, accompanied by others, and smashed in the window. The boy, Lawrence, sprang out, and gasped forth that his mother and her child were dead inside. Some of the party went to the back of the shanty, and with an axe burst it in, and brought out the inanimate bodies of the mother and child, who soon after breathed again. The other party burst into the adjoining house, and there captured Klem. In one corner of the room they found an instrument with which he must have stabbed Mrs. Hanlin. It consisted of a large file or rasp, about a foot long, which had been ground down to a point. This was stuck in a pole or stick, about four feet long, and must have been used as a pike, and made expressly for the purpose to which it was applied. Mrs. Hanlin and her child were conveyed to the City Hospital, and Klem to the Upper Police. He was perfectly sober. He is an Irishman, and is represented as the most stolid, brutal looking person ever seen there. Apparently he is about 40 years of age.

The unfortunate woman died on Wednesday from the wounds she received. The inhuman monster has been committed to await his trial.

[N. Y. Herald.]

The Indians reproof.—A Shoshone warrior possessed a beautiful mare; no horse on the prairie could outspeed her, and in the buffalo or bear hunt she would enjoy the sport as much as her master, and run along side the huge beast with great courage and spirit. Many propositions were made to the warrior to sell or exchange the animal, but he would not hear of it. The dumb brute was his friend, his sole companion; they had both shared the dangers of the battle, and the privations of the prairie travelling; why should he part with her? The fame of that mare extended so far, that in a trip he made to San Francisco, many Mexicans offered him large sums of money; nothing, however, could shake him in his resolution. In those countries, though horses will often be purchased at the low price of one dollar, it often happens that a steed well known as a good hunter or rapid pacer, will bring sums equal to those paid in England for a fine race horse.

One of the Mexicans, a wild young man, resolved to obtain the mare, whether or no. One evening, when the Indian was returning from some neighboring plantation, the Mexican laid down in some bushes at a short distance from the road, and moaned as if in the greatest pain. The good and kind hearted Indian having reached the spot, heard the cries of distress, dismounted from his mare and offered any assistance: it was nearly dark; and although he knew the sufferer to be a pale-face, yet he could not distinguish his features. The Mexican begged for a drop of water, and the Indian dashed into a neighboring thicket, to procure it for him. As soon as the Indian was sufficiently distant, the Mexican vaulted upon the mare, and apostrophized the Indian:—You fool of a red skin—not cunning enough for a Mexican; you refused my gold, now I have the mare for nothing, and I will make the trappers laugh when I tell them how easily I have outwitted a Shoshone. The Indian looked at the Mexican a few moments in silence, for his heart was big, and the shameful treachery wounded him to the very core. At last he spoke:—Pale face, for the sake of others, I may not kill thee. Keep the mare, since thou art dishonest enough to steal the only property of a poor man; keep her, but never say a word how thou camest by her, lest, hereafter, a Shoshone having learned distrust should not hearken to the voice of grief and woe. Away, away with her! let me never see her again, or in an evil hour the desire of vengeance may make a bad man of me.

The Mexican was wild, inconsiderate, but not without feelings; he dismounted from the horse, and putting the bridle into the hands of the Shoshone, "Brother," said he, "I have done wrong, pardon me! from an Indian I learn virtue, and for the future, when I would commit any deed of injustice, I will think of thee."

REVENUE MARINE.

The annual report of the officers in charge of the Bureau of the Revenue Marine Service, was received and laid on the table, in the House of Representatives, on Thursday.

The report states that there are fourteen revenue cutters in active service, viz: At Eastport, Portland, Boston, New York, New London, New York, Delaware, Baltimore, Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, New Orleans, and Lake Erie. Also, two iron steamers in the same service, recently constructed—the Legare, upon Ericson's plan, ordered to Key West; and the Spencer, upon Hunter's plan, stationed at New York.

The report states that the performances of these steamers have not realized the expectations of those by whose order they have been constructed, and that their cost has far exceeded the expectations of the Department. Four other steam cutters are being constructed; one at Oswego, on Lake Ontario, one at Boston; one at Pittsburgh; and one at Buffalo. Contracts have been made for the supply of Bituminous coal at Key West, at $7.87 per ton; at the mouth of the Mississippi, $8; for anthracite at New York, $4.75; at Boston, $5.87, at Oswego $5.95. The estimated expenditure on revenue boats attached to custom houses for the current year amounts to $34,762; and the estimated expenditure on the revenue marine for the current year, including the steamers Spencer and Legare, since they were commissioned, amounts to $220,435. The amount of payments, which have been made upon the construction and outfit of revenue steamers, up to 1st December, 1844 have been—

For the John Tyler, at Pittsburgh, 400 tons,	$68,468 48
For the Jefferson, at Oswego, 343 tons,	65,077 38
For the Spencer, at New York, 398 tons,	70,770 27
For the Legare, at New York, 304 tons,	34,000 22
For the Dallas, at Buffalo, 391 tons,	56,254 05
For the McLane, at Boston, 369 tons,	66,793 95
	$425,286 35

Effect of Millerism.—A painful instance of the effect of this delusion was witnessed in the Recorder's Court last week, in the case of a woman of respectable appearance who was arraigned on a charge of grand larceny. It appeared in evidence by her own confessions, as well as otherwise, that concerning the consumption of all things was soon to take place, and not having means as she supposed, to make suitable preparations, she resorted to theft to procure her ascension robes. Evidence of former good character was produced, besides which the owner of the stolen property, who knew he, well, was very anxious for only a slight punishment. But the stern requirements of the law demanded otherwise, and she was sentenced to the State prison at Sing Sing for two years.—Buff. Com. Adr.

Perilous Adventure at the Falls of Niagara.—An occurrence of the most thrilling interest took place at Niagara Falls yesterday afternoon, attended with imminent peril to the lives of two individuals, but resulting in a most happy and providential manner.

The new bridge to Iris Island is over a frightful rapid, where the current is from 20 to 30 miles an hour, and is only about 100 or 150 yards above the brow of the great precipice or perpendicular fall. A carpenter of the name of Chapin was engaged with others in covering the bridge, and while at work upon a staging about a hundred feet from Iris Island accidentally lost his footing, and was precipitated into the rapids and in the twinkling of an eye swept away toward the great cataract. Speedy and inevitable destruction seemed to await him; but fortunately he was uninjured by the fall, and even in the most hopeless condition retained self possession. Turning his eye towards the only point of hope above the fearful precipice, he succeeded, with dexterity in swimming, in effecting a landing upon a little island some twenty feet in width and length, the outermost of the group of little cedar islands situated some 30 or 40 yards above the falls, and about equidistant from Goat Island and the American shore.

There he stood for an hour, looking calmly and beseechingly back upon the numerous spectators who lined the bridge and shores, but with whom he could hold no conversation on account of the distance and the roar of the rapids.

There is a man in the village of the Falls known by the name of Robinson, of extraordinary muscular power, great intrepidity, and with an admirable boatman—and he was probably the only one that could have been found within fifty miles—who generously volunteered his service to attempt reaching the island in a boat and bring Chapin off. A light boat of two oars, similar in construction to the Whitehall race boats, was soon procured, and he embarked.

He proceeded with great caution and consummate skill, darting his little boat across the rapid channels, and at the intervening eddies holding up to survey his situation and recruit his strength for the next trial. In a few minutes he neared the island, but a rapid channel still intervened, sweeping close to the island, and rendering the attempt to land very difficult. He paused for a moment, and then with all his strength darted across and sprang from his boat—his foot slipped, and he fell backward into the rapid current.

With the spectators it was a moment of thrilling interest and breathless silence; his boat seemed inevitable lost, and himself in fearful jeopardy. Retaining however his grasp on the boat, he sprang in, and again seizing his oars brought up under the lee of the little island. All again felt a momentary relief, but still the great hazard of the enterprise remained to be overcome. A cool head and strong arm only could effect it. Robinson proved equal to the task. Taking his companion on board, in the same careful and deliberate manner, though at an infinitely greater hazard and labor, they effected a safe landing on Goat Island.

There the spectators assembled to give them a cordial greeting. A scene of great excitement ensued—the boat was drawn up the bank, and it was moved and carried by acclamation, that a collection be taken up upon the spot for Chapin and his noble-hearted deliverer, Robinson. It was a generous one, and was thankfully received; but the reflection to Robinson that he had rescued a fellow-being under such circumstances will be to his generous heart a much richer one. After the collection, Robinson and Chapin took their seats in the boat, and were carried in triumph on the shoulders of their neighbors to the village.

The intense interest of the whole scene was heightened by the presence of Chapin's wife and children, who stood on the shore, watching with unavailing horror and agony what seemed his inevitable and fearful fate. With what devout and heartfelt gratitude must they have thanked God, when the husband and father stood once more safe by their side.—Buff. Com. Advertiser.

LETTERS FROM THE OREGON TERRITORY.

Linnat, Oregon, 1844.

The fisheries of this country are immense. Foremost among all the fish of this, or any other country, is the salmon. Of the numbers of this fish taken annually, in the Columbia river and its tributaries, it would be impossible to state. They have been estimated at ten thousand barrels annually, which I think is not too large. The salmon is a beautiful fish, long, round and plump, weighing generally about twenty pounds, very fat, and yet no food of any kind is ever found in the stomach. What they eat no one can tell. Sir Humphrey Davy supposed that the gastric juice of the salmon was so powerful as instantly to dissolve all substances entering the stomach. The salmon in this country is never caught with the hook; but they are sometimes taken by the Indians with small-scoop nets, and generally with a sort of spear, of very peculiar construction, and which I will describe. They take a pole, made of some hard wood, say ten feet long and one inch in diameter, gradually sharpened to a point at one end. They then cut off a piece from the sharp prong of a buck's horn, about four inches long, and hollow out the large end of this piece so that it fits on the end of the pole. About the middle of the buck horn they make a hole through which they put a small cord or leather string, which they fasten to the pole about two feet from the lower end. When they spear a fish, the spear passes through the body, the buck horn comes off the pole, and the pole pulls out of the hole made by the spear, but the buck horn remains on the opposite side of the fish, and he is held fast by the string, from which it is impossible to escape. All the salmon caught here are taken by the Indians, and sold to the whites at about ten cents each, and frequently for less. One Indian will take about twenty per day, up to an average. The salmon taken at different points vary greatly in kind and quality, and it is only at particular places that they can be taken. The latest and best salmon are caught at the mouth of the Columbia; the next best are those taken in the Columbia, a few miles below Vancouver, at the Cascades, and at the Dalles. Those taken at the Wallamette Falls are smaller and inferior, and are said to be of a different kind. What is singular, this fish cannot be taken in any considerable numbers, with large seines.

This fish is too shy and too active to be taken. I believe no white man has yet succeeded in taking them with the gill. The salmon make their appearance in the vicinity of Vancouver, first in the Klaskanus. The best salmon are taken in June. The sturgeon is a very large fish, caught with a hook and line, and is good eating. They are taken in the Wallamette, below the Falls, and in the Columbia at all points, and in Snake river as high up as Fort Boise.

Navigation.—As I have before stated, the navigation of the Columbia is good to the Dalles, with the exception of the Cascades. The river near the ocean is very wide, forming bays, and is subject to high winds, which render the navigation unsafe for small craft. The difficulties at the mouth of the river will rapidly diminish as the business increases, and they have regular pilots and steam tow boats. Ships pass up the Wallamette some five miles above Linnat, where there is a bar; but small ships go up higher, and to within seven or eight miles of the Falls. Above the Falls, the Wallamette is navigable for steamboats about fifty miles. Tom Hill river is navigable for canoes and keel-boats up to the forks, the distance I cannot say. The navigation of this, the first section, is much better than that of the second section.

Water Power.—The water power of this country is unequalled, and is found distributed throughout this section. The water power at the Falls of the Wallamette cannot be surpassed in the world. Any quantity of machinery can be put in motion. But the good water power is not confined to the Wallamette Falls. Every where on the Columbia and Wallamette rivers there are mill sites as good, but not so large as the Falls. Most of the mill sites in this country are over-shots. But we have not only the finest water power, but we have the finest timber.

Timber.—The timber of this section of Oregon constitutes one main source of its wealth. It is found in inexhaustible quantities on the Columbia and on the Wallamette, just where the water power is at hand to cut it up, and where ships can take it on board. The principal timber of this section is the fir, white cedar, white oak and black ash. There are three kinds of fir, the white, yellow and red, all of them fine timber for plank, shingles, boards, and rails. The white fir makes the best shingles. The fir is a species of the pine, grows very tall and straight, and stands very thick upon the ground. Thick as they stand upon the ground, when you cut one it never lodges, for the reason, this timber never forks, and the limbs are too small to stop a falling tree. You can find them in the vicinity of Linnat, from eight feet diameter to small saplings; and the tallest of them will measure about 225 feet. In the Cascade mountains and near the mouth of the Columbia river they rise to the height of 300 feet. The fir splits exceedingly well, and makes the finest boards of any timber. I have ever seen. I cut one tree from which I sawed 24 cuts of three foot boards, and there are plenty of such trees all around me, yet untouched. The white cedar is a very fine timber, nearly if not quite equal to the red cedar in the States.

The wild animals of this the first section of Oregon, are the black bear, black tailed deer, ragoon, panther, polecat, rabbit, wolf, beaver, and a few others. Deer and wolves are plenty. We have no buffaloes, antelopes, or prairie chickens here, but in the second section prairie chickens are plenty. As for the birds, we have the blue-jay, larger than the jay of the States, and deep blue. We have also the nut brown wren, a most beautiful and gentle little bird, very little larger than the humming. Also, a species of bird which resembles the robin in form, color and size. Also, a bird that sings the liveliest night, but although I have heard them often, I have never seen one. The bald eagle, so well described by Wilson, is here found all along the rivers, but he has here to catch his own game, as there are no fishawks to do it for him. The eagle here feeds principally upon the dead salmon that float down the rivers for you are aware, perhaps, that out of the myriads of salmon that ascend the rivers of Oregon, not one ever finds its way back to the ocean. They are never found swimming down the stream, but their last effort is to ascend. The eagle also feeds upon wild ducks, which he catches as follows:—He darts at the duck while in the water, and the ducks dives, but as soon as he rises to the surface, the eagle, having turned himself, strikes at the duck again, and the duck again dives. This manoeuvre the eagle continues until the duck becomes tired, when the eagle nabs him just as he rises to the top of the water. The duck seems to be afraid to attempt escape upon this wing. We have also pheasants very abundant, and they are most excellent eating. Like old Ireland itself, there are no poisonous reptiles or insects in this section of Oregon. The only snake is a small harmless garter snake, and there are no flies to annoy the cattle.

Mountains.—We have the most beautiful scenery in North America—the largest

est ocean, the purest and most beautiful streams, and loftiest and most beautiful trees. The several peaks of the Cascade range of mountains are grand and imposing objects. From Vancouver you have a fair and full view of Mount Hood, perhaps the tallest peak of the Cascades, and which rises nearly sixteen thousand feet above the level of the Pacific, and ten thousand above the surrounding mountains. This lofty pile rises up by itself, and is in the form of a regular cone, covered with perpetual snow. This is the only peak you can see from Vancouver, as the view is obscured by the tall fir timber. At the mouth of the Wallamette as you enter the Columbia, you have a view of both Mount Hood and Mount St. Helens. From Linnnton you have a very fair and full view of Mount St. Helens, about fifty miles distant; but it looks as if it was within reach. This peak is very symmetrical in the form of a regular cone, and nearly, if not quite, as tall as Mount Hood, and also covered with perpetual snow. This mountain is now a burning volcano. It commenced about a year since. The crater is on one side of the mountain, about two thirds the distance from its base. This peak, like Mount Hood, stands far off and alone, in its solitary grandeur, rising far above all surrounding objects. On the 16th February, 1811, being a beautiful and clear day, the mountain burned most magnificently. The dense mists of smoke rose up in one immense column, covering the whole crest of the mountain in clouds. Like other volcanoes, it burns at intervals. This mountain is second to but one volcanic mountain in the world, Cotapaxi, in South America. On the side of the mountain, near its top, is a large black object, amidst the white pure snow around it. This is supposed to be the mouth of a large cavern. From Indian accounts, this mountain emitted a volume of burning lava, about the time it first commenced burning. An Indian came to Vancouver with his foot and leg badly burnt, who stated that he was on the side of the mountain hunting deer, and he came to a stream of something running down the mountain; and when he attempted to jump across it, he fell with one foot into it; and that was the way in which he got his foot and leg burnt. This Indian came to the Fort to get Dr. Barclay to administer some remedy to cure his foot. From a point on the mountain immediately back of Linnnton, you can see five peaks of the Cascade range—as we passed from the Attila to Dr. Whitmarsh's, we could distinctly see Mount Hood at the distance of about 150 miles.

Climate.—The climate of this, the lower section of Oregon, is, indeed, most mild. The winter may be said to commence in about the middle of December, and end in February, about the 10th. I saw strawberries in bloom about the first of December last in the Pallatry Plains, and as early as the 20th February, the flowers were blooming on the hill sides. The grass has now been growing since about the 10th February, and towards the end of that month the trees were budding and the shrubbery in bloom. About the 28th of November, we had a spell of cold weather and a slight snow, which was gone in a day or two. In the month of December we had very little snow, and it melted as it fell. In January we had a great deal of snow, which all melted as it fell, except one which melted in three days. The ground has not been frozen more than one inch deep the whole winter, and ploughing has been done throughout the winter and fall. The fact with which I now write, has stood in a glass tank, and on a shelf, far from the fire, in a house with only boards nailed on the cracks, during the whole month of January, and has not been frozen, as you may see from its good color. As regards rains in the winter, I have found them much less troublesome than I anticipated. I had supposed that no work could be done here in the rainy season; but a great deal more out-door work can be done in the winter season than in the western States. The rains fall in very gentle showers, and are generally what you term drizzling rains, so light that a man can work all day without getting wet through a blanket coat. The rains are not the cold, chilly rains that you have in the fall and spring seasons in the east, but are warm as well as gentle. Since we have been here, I have witnessed less wind than in any country I have been in; and I have heard no thunder, and only seen one tree that had been struck with lightning. If the fall timber we have here were in the States, it would be riven and blown down, until there would not be many trees left. The rains are never hard enough here to wash the roads or the fields. You can find no gullies washed in the roads or fields in this region.

Commercial Advantages.—I consider the commercial advantages of this country as very great. The trade with the Sandwich Islands is daily increasing. We are here surrounded with a half civilized race of men, and our manufacturing power will afford us the means of creating a home market besides. South America, the Sandwich Islands, and California, must depend upon us for their lumber. Already large quantities of stinkies and planks, are sent to the Islands. We shall possess have a fine market for all our surplus; but, until this country is settled, we shall have a demand at home. Most of the vessels visiting the Pacific, touch at the Sandwich Islands, and they will be glad to obtain fresh supplies of provisions there. The Russian settlements must obtain their supplies here. We have China within our reach, and all the islands of the Pacific. There can be no competition with us in the way of provisions, as we have no neighbors in that line. I consider Oregon as superior to California. The climate of that country is too warm for men to have any commercial enterprise. Besides, in California, pork and beef cannot be put up; and consequently, the grazier loses half his profits. For a commercial and manufacturing people, the climate of Oregon is warm enough. We can here preserve our pork and beef, and we have more fine timber than they have in California, and better water power, and not the droughts they have there. I do not wish a warmer climate than this. A very warm climate enervates mankind too much.

Towns.—This is a new item in the geography of this country, and one that I have never seen before. But of late towns have become quite common. As all the towns yet laid out in the country are upon the water, I shall begin at the mouth of the Columbia, and come upwards. First, there is old Astoria revived. Capt. Applegate and others are now laying off a town at old Astoria, to be called Astoria. They have not yet sold any lots. Next is Linnnton, laid off by Burns and McCown. This place is on the west bank of the Wallamette river, four miles above its mouth, and is the nearest point on the river to the Pallatry Plains, and the nearest eligible point to the head of ship navigation for large vessels on the Wallamette. Next in order is Oregon city, laid out by Dr. McClellan, at the Falls. At this place there are four stores, two saw mills, one grist mill, and there will soon be another built by the Doctor to contain about three hundred of stores. There is quite a village here. The last town I shall mention is Champe, on the Wallamette, at the head of navigation. I do not know that any lots have as yet been sold at that place.

Business of all kinds done in the Territory is very active and times are flourishing. Lazy men have become industrious, as there is no drinking or gambling here among the whites; and labor meets with such ready employment and ample reward, that men have more inducements to labor here than elsewhere. This is as yet, no country for lawyers, and we have the most peaceable and quiet community in the world. Mechanics find ready employment, as well as ordinary laboring hands. Farming is considered the best business in this country. This may be seen at once from the prices of produce, and its easy production. The business of making and putting up butter, which is here never worth less than twenty cents, is very profitable. Good fresh butter, I am told is never worth less than fifty cents, and often one dollar per pound in the Pacific Islands. There are now in operation, or will be this summer, mills enough to supply the population with flour. There are several mills, both saw and grist, in operation up the Wallamette, above the falls. There is no scarcity of provisions at the prices I have stated; and I find that our emigrants who came out last year live quite comfortably, and have certainly improved much in their appearance. When an individual here has any idle time he can make shingles, which are worth four dollars for five and five dollars per thousand for cedar. Any quantity of them can be sold at those rates. We have the finest spruce timber in the world, and vessels often take a quantity of timber for saws. The saw mills at the Wallamette Falls, cut large quantities of plank, which they sell at two dollars per hundred. Carpenters and other mechanics obtain three dollars per day and found, and ordinary hands one dollar per day and found. The fir timber of this country makes excellent coal for blacksmiths; and what is singular, neither the fir nor cedar, when burned, make any ashes. It has been supposed that the timbered land of this country will be hard to clear up; but I have come to a very different conclusion, from the fact that the fir timber has very little top and is easily killed and burns up readily. It also is not so seasoned very soon. It is the opinion of good farmers, that the timbered land will be the best wheat land in this country.

VERY SHORT PASSAGE FROM VERA CRUZ.

The fast sailing barque Eugenia, Capt. Louis Biscoe, arrived Tuesday morning in 13 days passage from Vera Cruz. She sailed there on the 12th. She brings very important intelligence.

Among the passengers in the Eugenia is the Hon. Caleb Cushing, who comes home with the treaty he had negotiated with the Mexicans. He left Mexico on the 27th of August, a date twenty three days later than before received.

Mr. Cushing was attacked and robbed by a set of bandits, at El Pinal, near Puebla. He lost many private papers of great value.

They had received the account of the election of Mr. Polk in Mexico, but they were so much engaged with their own affairs that they paid no attention to the fact.

There were at the Island of Sacrificio, the British frigate Spritan, just arrived from New Orleans; British frigate Inconstant and two French brigs of war, but no Americans.

The principal towns, and indeed, all the country have pronounced against Santa Anna, who with a small force has fled to Queretaro.

The revolution passed off very quietly, no blood having been shed. The former revolutions being carried on by one party of military against another, resulted in much bloodshed—but this movement coming from the people, as well as the soldiers, made it general, and hence the little commotion or excitement of a disagreeable nature.

Santa Anna had but little chance of overcoming this movement, and it was a matter of conjecture whether he would attempt to escape or deliver himself up—he very probably will endeavour to gain over the opposite General, by bribery or similar means, but in this it is thought he will not succeed. In case that he is taken prisoner, the people will probably demand his execution, as they seem to think his liberty will be dangerous to the Republic.

The markets were in a very bad state, with little hope of improvement. The departments of Sonora, Sinalva, Jalisco, Zacatecas, and Aguascalientes were in a state of revolution, and in the military possession of General Paredes.

General Santa Anna (with Cortazar) had military possession of the departments of Queretaro and Guanajuato. Catalizo, Santa Anna's President in Texas, and his ministers, were prisoners in Mexico. Congress had reassembled, after its forcible dissolution by Canizales, and a temporary constitutional government, was installed, composed of—

General Jose Joaquin de Herrera, President of the Council of government, charged officially with the function of executive.

D. Luis Gonzago Cuevas, Minister of Exterior Relations, State and Police. D. Mariano Riva Palacios, Minister of Justice, Public Instruction and Industry. D. Pedro J. Echeverria, Minister of Finance.

D. Pedro Garcia Conde, Minister of War.

It was already known that the three departments of Mexico, Puebla, and Vera Cruz, had declared their intention of adhesion to the provisional Government; and there is no doubt that most of the other departments will also support the Congress, and new provisional Government.

LATER FROM BUENOS AYRES—SEIZURE OF THE ARGENTINE SQUADRON.

By the barque Catharipa, at this port, says the Baltimore Sun of the 31st ult., we have Buenos Ayres papers to the 10th of October. The British Packet of that date has an article complaining of the seizure of the Argentine squadron by the American frigate Congress, some of the particulars of which we published some time since, which it represents as one of the grossest outrages recorded in the maritime history of the civilized world. The Packet adds:

We rejoice, in the meantime, to hear that no attempt is made on the part of the United States agents in this country, to extenuate the heinousness of Capt. Vorhees' offence; and we do trust that the government of the United States, viewing the affair, in all its bearings, will hasten to make that reparation which it cannot withhold, without seriously compromising the honor and rectitude of the republican character, which it is pre-eminently called upon to sustain. It would, indeed, require a more than common degree of hardness to undertake the defence of the capture of the Argentine squadron, which, even admitting the truth of the allegation that some of the merchant ships fired by the Oriental schooner of war Sincala, in pursuit of the fishing boat, and struck the American barque Rosalva, could not be characterized, but as an unprovoked and perfidious act of hostility. For, independently of the fact of no previous inquiry having been instituted, and much less of any demand of satisfaction having been made, with equal justice might the English, French, or Brazilian naval forces in the bay of Montevideo have been held responsible for that act inasmuch as the Sincala was as much under the control of either of them, as of the Argentine squadron. And as regards the forcible removal of the six seamen, under the pretext that, having concluded the term of service for which they had engaged, they were impressed; even allowing, which is not the case, that they are all American citizens by birth, this is an assumption of authority, at variance equally with the law of nations, and the common law of the United States, as may be seen by the report of a trial in the United States Court of Judicature, which we insert elsewhere for the confusion of Captain Vorhees' Montevideoan apologies.

Montevideo is represented by the Buenos Ayres papers as in a deplorable state, and its population fast diminishing. But this is an old story, and must doubtless be received with some allowance.

THE GRAFTON MURDER.

Taov, Dec. 25, 1841.

The Sheriff and one of his deputies, accompanied by two officers of the city police, in compliance with the requisition of the District Attorney, proceeded to Grafton yesterday morning, for the purpose of arresting, if possible, the murderers of Enisha B. Smith. It has been generally understood that since the murder, many of the Indians had become alarmed and had seceded, so that no apprehensions were entertained of any serious resistance. Indeed it is asserted, that the death of Smith was the result of mere personal malice.

The Sheriff returned last evening with two prisoners from Grafton. Their names are, Norman Goye and Henry Lund, and they were arrested upon the Coroner's warrants. The officers found the men engaged in their usual avocations, and arrested them without difficulty. In fact, every assistance was afforded him by the Anti-Renters themselves, who manifested much regret at the unfortunate occurrence. It is believed that one of the prisoners is the murderer.—Albany Atlas.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 22, 1845.

EXCHANGE FARMS.

We are informed that many of the Latter-day Saints, in Iowa, in several counties in this State, in Indiana, in Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, Michigan, and other places, have farms that they wish to exchange for property, or farms in the vicinity of Nauvoo, or in Hancock county. This is all right, and now is the time to do it. Send on the description of your property, and what you want in exchange, and bargains can be made. Have your farms advertised in the Nauvoo Neighbor, and your business can be transacted through the medium of the regularly appointed agents of the church, that go out from Nauvoo to all parts of the United States. The present is certainly a fair opportunity to exchange farms, and we hope the saints will improve it.

THE WEATHER.

There has not, for several years, been such curious weather; the warmth of Spring has been succeeded by a breeze from the north west, which reminded every body, that pinching was fair play in the winter, in the same ratio that dis-appointment was the common lot of life. We have had soft south breezes; warm west winds; nipping north blasts; vivid lightning; loud thunder; heavy showers, and a mild winter; and yet the weather seems as changeable, and violent as that portion of the people which now and then breaks out in a mob or riot.

It may seem strange to compare the weather to a riot, but when we have indulged ourselves in the temperature of May in Italy, with a cloudless sky, and an air balmy as the zephyrs of Eden, to be suddenly attacked by a "north-wester," sharpened by a long grinding of the naked prairies, it feels boisterous, and gives us strong symptoms of a cold snap.

The fact is, the weather is unsteady; the people are unsteady, and the government seems to have caught the same spirit. What such uncommon changes mean, time will soon reveal; and let the "divinity" in every person, say, what he ought to do, to be prepared for "coming events." Warm as April now.

One great consolation is, after a storm there comes a calm; and so after the wicked rule, the righteous reign.

A QUESTION.

Who sells flour without inspection? Just as like as not, the police will hunt their owners.

Congress.—This body is as busy as ever, but as nothing of interest to us, or this part of the country, has, as yet, transpired, we have not noticed their proceedings. Should any thing come to pass in that political association, worthy of notice, we shall advertise our readers of the fact; but truly, our faith on that head, is smaller than a tobacco seed—great bodies move so slow.

The Book of Glory.—If we judge from history, of what is the book of glory composed? Are not its leaves dead men's skins—its letters stamped in human blood—its golden clasps the pillage of nations? It is illuminated with tears and broken hearts. [Foreign Paper.]

The truth glitters in every word of that Book. It is an epitome of thought that flashes through the mind like light in a dark room.

When those "men of renown" before the flood, began the profane, they left a rule for after ages to follow. "From the wicked goeth forth wickedness." And then every skin was filled with a chapter. The chapters since the flood may be headed, in part, Nimrod, Nebuchadnezzar; Xerxes; Alexander, Cesar; the Kings of Babylon, en route, Buonaparte, with many that only serve as notes at the bottom of the page, while the sections, and paragraphs were meted out of the "little brief authority," which not only made the world weep, but heaven too. O man! wicked man! will not the unquenchable fire write flais to the book?

One word for Graham's Magazine; for, to say the least, that publication, as to method, matter, and manner, stands at the head of American Periodicals. Enterprise, talents, taste, and the fine Arts, are so successfully exhibited in that painful, that it recommends itself.

The "Spirit of the Times", Philadelphia, says:—

Graham well deserves the unprecedented success he has met with. When we reflect that he came to Philadelphia at twelve years of age, "a farmers boy," with a capital of ten dollars in his pocket—that by his industry and patient study, laboring under the day and studying at night, he was admitted to the bar of this city with honor, as we happen to know from his examiners—that his first essay in the literary field was as an assistant Editor with us in the Times—that he subsequently took hold of an old exploded magazine called "The Cassel," and by indomitable energy and perseverance has raised his book to the highest popularity in this country and Europe within a few short years,—we hail his success as that of a self made man richly merited, and honorable to him and the country. What young man in England, or any part of Europe, could have done the same?

Self made men, self made works, and self made nations, should be the motto of a great people, and the motto of the Temple of fame: Liberty and literature for ever.

Mormons.—The Illinois House, by a vote of 108 to 4, have referred a bill repealing the Mormon Charters, to the Judiciary Committee. That is right.

It ought never to have been granted in the monstrous form in which it was granted. The vote on the question of reference was, we may say, unanimous, the four nays being Mormons. Its passage is not doubted by a like majority.

This action shows plainly enough the folly of any sect leaning upon the arm of a party.

The opposition led on these Mormons, step by step; they gave an extravagant charter to get their votes; that done, and there being no farther or immediate need for their help, they are tossed overboard without a passing sympathy or a friendly parting. So it will be with all bodies of men who sacrifice self respect, or duty in the hope of gaining some selfish end by an unnatural or unholy alliance with any party.

If these Mormons had been dealt rightly with, or the Legislature of Illinois had treated them as they would have done any Christian body, we should have been spared the violence and murders, which have occurred in or near the Mormon settlement. Upon the Legislators of that State rests the responsibility of this violence and these murders. This retribution (not yet exhausted) meted out to Illinois, must be seen and understood by her citizens.—Cincinnati Gazette.

The above is a common sample of a portion of newspaper Editors, who meddle with other peoples' business, right or wrong. The idea set forth is, that the Legislature of Illinois, as a speculator, bought the Mormons by an unconstitutional charter in order to secure their votes; i. e. that they gulped a community by illegal power; and then were obliged to authorize the "violence" or murder of the Saints to check the progress of the Mormons. "This retribution [NOT YET EXHAUSTED!!] meted out to Illinois, must be seen and understood by her citizens."—understood much better, however, by men who have seen the actors, who, like worms in trees, are eating their way into the heart of the constitution: If such villains were not necessary to the violent murder alluded to, how can they say, the "violence" is not yet exhausted? That's the tie that binds them!

RUMORS OF WAR.

We copy from the New York Herald, a specimen of the "Anti-Repnt" outbreak in the Empire State. It looks to us, as if there was no liberty in the war, and no liberty in gathering rent in a free country. Revolutions, however, never go backward, and as the United States rose by revolution, they seem on the high tide of successful experiment to fall by revolution. But to the extract:

THE TROUBLES IN HUDSON—MOVEMENT OF THE TROOPS.

The sixty mounted men under the command of Captains Heath and Krack, left town Tuesday afternoon in the boat for Hudson. They are provided with four days' rations, and will probably come back as sound as they went.

The troops went up the river in the Utica, accompanied by Brig. Gen. Storms. Col. Stewart remains in command of the remaining companies of the 1st regiment, and will follow the General with pieces of artillery, if necessary.

We have received the Proclamation of Mayor Curtis of Hudson, dated Dec. 26, from which we extract the following paragraphs:—

PROCLAMATION.

Citizens of Hudson: The Sheriff of the county, supported by the determined energy of a handful of individuals, chief among whom, ranks our most respected fellow citizen, Joseph D. Monell, Esq., has arrested persons charged with being the ringleaders of the rebellion. Information which can be most implicitly relied on, has been received, that their aiders and abettors in this and other counties have threatened to rescue these prisoners at any and all hazards; and it is necessary to accomplish that purpose, to fire this city! An express sent by the Sheriff of this county, to the Attorney General of this State, at Albany, was intercepted, and for a time detained in the county of Rensselaer. A contemplated rescue of these prisoners was discovered on Saturday last, and prevented only by a prompt and general rally of the friends of Law and Order at the Court House. The design of effecting a rescue, we are informed, is not yet abandoned.

The Executive of this State has furnished us with 500 stand of arms, and a large supply of ball cartridge. An efficient force of one hundred armed men enlisted for thirty days, with four pieces of artillery, and all under the command of Capt. Henry Whiting, late of the U. S. Army, is now stationed at the Court House: The Hudson Light Guard, under command of Capt. E. Cowles, are fully supplied with ammunition, and ready for duty at a moment's warning. The Albany Burgess Corps, a gallant band of citizen soldiery, by the invitation of our Common Council, arrived here yesterday under the command of Major Franklin Townsend, and reported themselves to me for duty. They have in charge one piece of artillery and 360 stand of arms, forwarded by their commander-in-chief for the defence of our city.

It is desirable for the city of Hudson to organize an armed force of 500 men. Such an organization has already been commenced, under charge of a proper committee. Our oldest and most respectable citizens have already joined it; and when completed this corps, together with the Hudson Light Guard, will be under the command of Colonel Charles Darling; and in case of alarm, will rendezvous at Davis' City Hall. Arrangements have been made by which the approach of a hostile force will be known and reported long before its arrival, and notice given to the citizens by ringing the bell of the Presbyterian Church. An efficient city patrol is also constantly kept up. And now, citizens, let us do our duty; prompt action now may, and no doubt will, eventually save much treasure and many lives.

CYRUS CURTISS, Mayor.

From the New York Herald.

ABOLITION VICTIMS.

The people of the southern slave-holding States are determined to give a few practical lessons to the wild enthusiasts amongst the abolitionists who visit their territories, and really we are not at all surprised at this determination. The newspapers during the last few weeks have given us an account of the trial, conviction and sentence to the Penitentiary for several years, of Walker, in Missouri; the Rev. Mr. Torrey, at Baltimore; Miss Delia Webster, of Kentucky, and of Mr. Kelly, in Virginia; and there is, besides, another who is still under trial, a lot of whom have been guilty of assisting negroes to run away from their masters. In addition to this, we recollect that Mr. How, the agent of the Massachusetts abolitionists, who went to South Carolina, escaped rather hastily from that State, and another agent, Mr. Hubbard, who has gone to New Orleans, will no doubt make as expeditious an exit.

These trials and convictions ought to teach the wild enthusiasts who are operated on by the Abolitionists of the North, to take care and conduct themselves with propriety when they go to the Southern States. But we rather fear that no advice will be taken in that quarter. The Convention proposed to be held at Washington will perhaps furnish them with a wider and more impressive scale. If that Convention of "two hundred Abolitionists" assembled in Washington, we should not be at all surprised to see a committee of ten thousand of the Southern States go to Washington and capture the whole.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights.—[Declaration of Independence.] that among these, negroes may be sold as slaves for life, and that men and women may be sent to the States prison for any length of time, for assisting slaves to obtain liberty (code of laws)—and this America is the "asylum of the oppressed" (!)

Crime ought not to be licensed by law. The abolitionists are wrong; the slaveholders are wrong; and the laws are wrong—so there is but one way left to right the matter; and as the people have guessed their way down into the swamp of disgrace, let them guess their way up to honor, once more, or Kill themselves for being free, And die to keep their negroes.

LEGISLATIVE PROCEEDINGS.

We copy the following debate on the charter of Nauvoo, from the Illinois State Register.

MR. ANDERSON, from the committee on Banks and Corporations, reported back the bill to repeal the city charter of Nauvoo, and recommended its passage.

Mr. Collins said he was one of the minority of the committee,—that while he thought the charter ought to be repealed and all that part concerning the Legion, was wrong in principle, yet he was not in favor of leaving the people of Nauvoo out of the pale of law altogether. He was in favor of granting them a charter, with a very limited power. And the minority of the committee had prepared a bill for this purpose. It was well known, that the city owed a large debt, from the payment of which they would be relieved unless this new charter passed.

Mr. Anderson said that the majority of the committee had determined to report back the bill before the petition from Nauvoo had been received.

Mr. Collins said that this being the case, he would move to refer the bill back to the committee on Banks and Corporations.

Mr. Herndon was opposed to referring the bill back, because he believed the report would be the same.

Mr. Benedict said all the members of the committee were present at the time the bill was determined to be reported back, except one member who had been sick since the opening.

Mr. Backenstus strongly advocated the motion to refer the bill back. He was certain that the action of the committee would be different after they had read the petition from Nauvoo.

Mr. Benedict said he hoped the bill would not be referred. He made some further remarks concerning the alleged unconstitutionality of repealing it.

Mr. Babbitt said that the chapter partook of two qualities—public and private. It has been frequently decided by the Supreme court of the United States, that the Legislature had no power to repeal charters where rights were acquired by individuals. He hoped the bill would be re-committed; and if it was in order, he would move its reference to a select committee.

Mr. Davis of McLea said that the case on was fast passing away, and it was idle to refer bills back and forward, to different committees.

Mr. Anderson hoped the bill would not be re-committed; and he hoped this question would be a test question, whether this Legislature was in favor of repeal or not. For one, he wanted the charter repealed, for he was desirous to see what the city of Nauvoo would do with the people of Illinois, after they had repealed their charter. If the people of Nauvoo would respectfully ask for a new charter of limited powers, he was ready to grant it. Mr. A. said the committee was desirous of getting rid of the subject. The committee were anxious to get at the Banks, who were not winning up fast enough, to suit the views of his constituents.

Mr. Collins said he was glad to see the zeal of the Chairman of the committee on Banks and Corporations, recurring to the subject of the Banks. It was but the other day, he had urged him to enter on the subject, but he was very cool on the subject.

Mr. Babbitt said if there was one spark of democratic blood in the veins of gentlemen they would not desert with one set of people different from another. Where was the justice, the democracy of those, who denied rights to certain citizens of the State which they granted to others. He did not wish to disturb the ashes of the dead, he did not wish to urge this House into a state of excitement, upon dark scenes that passed before our eyes but a little while ago—he desired that whatever was done on this subject, should be done without reference to petitions or religion, but with reference only to the justice of the case.

Mr. Benedict asked whether the gentleman from Hancock was in order, in discussing the merits of the bill on a question of simple reference.

The Speaker said it was the most difficult part of the duties of the Chair to decide such questions. He had permitted the discussion so far, and the gentleman from Hancock could proceed. He was in order.

Mr. Babbitt said he was done. He only asked the gentleman from Will to withdraw his motion to refer to the committee on Banks and Corporations, so as to let the bill go to a select committee.

Mr. Collins withdrew his motion. Mr. C. said that while he was up, he would explain one of the provisions in the bill proposed to be brought in by the minority of the committee. It was in reference to some voluntary companies.

Mr. Logan acknowledged that he entertained deep prejudices on this subject—but God forbid that they should influence him on this subject. He moved that the whole subject be referred to the committee of the whole and made the order of the day for Wednesday next.

Mr. Ross said he could not see why gentlemen should oppose the reference to a select committee. He thought that if the gentleman from Sangamon would put himself in the position of the people of Nauvoo—if he would look at the case as of, for example, that bore upon his own constituents, he would change his course on this question. Mr. R. asked whether the spirit exhibited by the Chairman of the committee on Banks and Corporations was either just or humane? That gentleman was in favor of unconditional repeal because the people of Nauvoo had said they would appeal to higher authorities. What would the gentleman from Lawrence attempt to crush the spirit of liberty? Would he expect the people of Nauvoo to approach the footstool of the legislature on their knees, like humble slaves approaching their master? Mr. R. said he had never been governed by the spirit of religious bigotry, and while he was one of the strongest opponents of this charter at the time it was adopted, he believed that the people of Nauvoo should be placed upon an equal footing of equality of rights as other citizens of the State.

After considerable further discussion, in which Messrs. Miller of Adams, Bennett, Benedict, Blair, Logan, Woodford, Yates, Gregg, Hays, Lott, Anderson and Pitner participated, the question was taken up referring the bill to a committee of the whole for Wednesday next, and carried.

Adjourned till Monday.

American Candles.—The London Times remarks that the late importation of American candles by the New York packet ship England, at Liverpool, said to be a novelty in that port, is not so at the port of London. For a considerable time past, adds that paper, "The London and New York line of packet ships have been in the habit of bringing large quantities of American composition candles, which, on being landed, are immediately placed in bond for exportation. A merchant has informed us that several ships which lately sailed from the docks for India, China, and other ports, were supplied with this description of candles, and that the importers, after paying freight, &c., realized a profit of about 2d. per lb."

REGULATIONS FOR THE PUBLISHING DEPARTMENT OF THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS IN THE EAST.

Dear Brethren.—Are you not all aware that very many, if not all, of our men, women and children are turning authors, and publishing works purporting to be illustrative of the doctrine of the saints. Some of them are badly written, and some of them are mixed with error, and very many of them which are true and useful are borrowed, in part or in full, from our standard works which are already extant; and therefore, these new vamped pieces or tracts are not particularly needed; besides, there is another consideration—vast sums are expended by men who have but little experience in publishing, and perhaps pay double for the paper and printing, and all this into the hands of those who feel no interest in our cause.

In this way thousands of dollars are drawn from the saints and from the elders, while the temple cause is neglected. All these things are out of order and must come to an end; or else those men who have experience, and whose business it is to write and publish the truth, will have to cease and have no more to do with publishing, for they, and the others too, cannot find support in the business so as to make the works pay for themselves.

We have now three departments, duly appointed by the presidency of the church, viz: the Nauvoo office, under the management of Brother J. Taylor, the English department, under Brother W. Woodruff, and the New York publishing department, now committed to my charge.

These three great emporiums of light, truth, and news, are quite sufficient until the work enlarges and other similar establishments are appointed by the Twelve.

The church, therefore, is hereby instructed not to patronize, purchase, or support any publication pertaining to our cause, except they emanate from one of these three offices, and under the sanction and authority of those who are appointed to manage this matter.

Let the books, tracts, periodicals, pamphlets, &c., of Mr. B. Winchester and others no longer be republished by the saints. Let the "Times and Seasons," "Neighbor," "Millennial Star," and "Prophet" be well supported, together with the standard Hymn Book, Book of Mormon, and such other works as are, or may be, published by authority as approved standards; and this will be all the church is able to do at present. Considering the tidings for the temple and the duties of charity and hospitality which are required of them.

The public are also cautioned that no works will be considered as a standard by the saints concerning their principles, except they are published by the authorities above named.

P. P. PRATT.

New York, Jan. 1st, 1845.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Nauvoo, Jan. 17, 1845.

As much has been said concerning stealing and secreting property in this city, for the purpose of giving an impression abroad that Nauvoo was a grand Depot for concealing stolen property, and that the Mormon community was concerned in it—I will state, that so far as my knowledge extends, concerning the matter, I have ascertained that stolen property has been brought by way of Nauvoo, from the country, and then crossed over the Mississippi river to Iowa, and back into the Territory some ten or twelve miles; where the thieves have some friends to conceal stolen property.

There seems to be a connection of these friends there or fifty miles back into the country on this side of the river, who, with five or six in this city, seem to have a line for running stolen property through Nauvoo to the Territory of Iowa; and I have good reason to believe that those in the country on this side of the river, those in the city, and those in the Territory, are one clan, but they are not Mormons; nor have the Mormons any fellowship with them.

I have taken pains to go with a person from the country, with a writ, and have searched every house suspected, till the person was satisfied, and till I was satisfied myself that no such property, as claimed, was in the city.

I have good reason to believe that scoundrels stay in Nauvoo, and when stolen property comes into the city, they are ready to pass it on to the Territory, and screen themselves under the cloak of Mormonism, in order that the Mormons may bear the blame. If people will satisfy themselves as I have done, they may find a "Depot" in the regions of Iowa, containing the greater part of the property charged to the Mormons.

I would state further, that the Mormons had no agency in the searches I made, but that I made them, at the instance of men from the country, and that I spent three days in the Territory of Iowa, searching into the facts and matters, and my statements are made up from personal observation.

A Gaze Over the Promised Land.—The remarkable geographical position of Jerusalem—first requires our notice.—When the Israelites, under Moses, after their long sojourn in the desert, hovered on the lofty ridge of the Moab Mountains above the Promised Land, their eyes wandered over the deep valleys and rugged hilly ranges, to the Mediterranean sea. At their feet was the long deep basin of the river Jordan, running through a most luxuriant scene of cultivation, into the Dead Sea; Jericho and her groves were right over against them, on the further edge of this valley, of which is deeper than the Mediterranean. Beyond this the eye ranged over a wild sea of hills, extending more than twenty miles towards the coast, broken into ravines, and affording, along its highest central ridge, many strong positions, still identified by their Arab names, such as Gibeon, Michmash, and others, in the midst of which stands Jerusalem, the hill-fort of the Jebusites, the most impregnable and important of them all.—The approach on every side but the north is difficult, and easily defended, as, during the eventful history of the city, has often been proved. Beyond Jerusalem the hill country gradually sinks into the plain of the sea coast, where Joppa and Caesarea are situated.—Walks about Jerusalem, in 1842.

Too Bad.—Yesterday morning, a fat, healthy looking man about 40 years of age, dressed in comfortable clothes, and thick Monroe boots, with fishy eyes and small bright red peaked nose, emerging from a solid, unmeaning face, walked into the Mayor's Office, and stated that he had a complaint to make against the Guardian of the Poor. He said he was a native of Ireland, had been six months in this country, five months and three weeks of which he had spent in Blockley Almshouse, and the other week begging, and that the Steward of the Almshouse had sent him out without drabers, long boots, or a great coat.—Phil. Ledger.

A letter from Stockholm, published in the London Times, says that a most interesting discovery has been made in the secret repository of the Equestrian Order, viz: several chests full of documents which have not been examined for 30 years. Among them are original documents concerning the Revolutions of 1729, 1775, and 1789. Most of the documents are written, and some elegantly bound, and several have silver clasps.—Ceyer's third volume of the papers of Gustavus causes some sensation.

From Hayti.—Joseph Bullin and Dr. Caniarato arrived on the 25th ult., in the Marion Gage, from St. Domingo. They came as commissioners from the Spanish part of the Island to the United States, which part has been declared independent of the Haytian Government, and recognized as a separate Republic. They desire to open a trade between their republic and the United States, to have its independence acknowledged, and to negotiate amicable treaties with us.

INSTRUCTION OF SLAVES.

The Presbyterian Synod of Virginia, at its late meeting, reported the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That it be recommended to all the ministers belonging to this Synod to preach to the colored people specially and steadily as far as practicable.
2. That this Synod would recommend wherever it may be practicable, the establishment of Sabbath Schools for the oral instruction of the colored people.
3. That it be recommended to the members of the several churches within our bounds to adopt, wherever it may be necessary, some systematic mode for the religious instruction of the servants in their families.
4. That the several Presbyteries belonging to this Synod be required to take the supervision of this whole matter, require the several churches under their care to report annually to them on the subject, and that they make annual reports to the Synod.

The Alabama Baptist State Convention, at a recent meeting, passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That this Convention do solemnly recognize the duty of using all practicable and legal methods for communicating religious instruction orally, to the people of color within our borders;—and finding more than a quarter of a million of them within the limits of Alabama we feel it to be our duty, to provide for their moral and religious interests.

Kidnaping.—Two young colored men freedborn, were stolen from Wilmington a few nights ago, and taken, it is supposed, to some one of the slave marts. As soon as they were missed, the abolitionists started a chase, and traced them so far as to leave little doubt that they had been to Maryland, and passed into the hands of a professional slave-trader. It is yet doubtful whether they will be found and rescued.

In the pursuit, many other cases were heard of, showing the horrible extent to which kidnaping is carried on in Delaware. Fifty or sixty persons, it is said, have been stolen from the lower part of the state, within the last six months, and we have the most respectable authority for adding, that men who are in habit of taking up runaway slaves, almost invariably fell into the practice of stealing the free. A perfectly natural result.—Pen. Freeman.

Captain Kidd's Ship.—The Journal of Commerce contains long article upon the operations which are under way upon the vessel in the Hudson river, supposed to have been sunk there by Captain Kidd, the famous pirate. About fifty men are engaged in building a coffer dam around the wreck. Affidavits are published from which it appears that some time ago the wreck was bored, and the augers brought up against some hard substance, apparently metallic. After a number of experiments, portions of this metal were brought up and ascertained, upon assay, to be gold 96-16 carats fine.

Kidd's Pirate Ship.—The works for raising this vessel are going on. Capt. Cram, the engineer of the operations, bored into something which he judged by the clanking of the augers and by placing the hand on the shaft, was a cask or barrel of specie. In one case the bit, or point of the drill, was coated with a white substance like silver; on another occasion a piece of silver came up. It was brought up from about eight feet below the deck of the vessel. Where is Doubtless.—N. Y. Tribune.

A dreadful hurricane burst on the island of Cuba on the 4th ult., and was also felt severely in several of the British Islands, though not to the same extent. Upwards of seventy vessels are said to have been driven on shore in the island of Cuba. The loss of life and property has been dreadful. About seventy persons have been killed; but the damage done to property has not yet been ascertained. The city of Havana presented the appearance of a town that had just been bombarded and sacked. The hurricane has been felt in other places of the West Indies, though not with so much violence. The damage, however, must be enormous.

Progress of Mob Spirit.—It is fully time for the sensible people of this country, of all parties to unite, both morally and physically, and in every form, to put down that insurrectionary and mol spirit, which every now and then breaks out in various parts of the country; under some pretext or another. We have now the "anti-tax" insurrection in Maryland—the "anti-bond" people in some parts of the West, who are holding meetings and declaring that the State debts ought not to be paid—the Dorrites in Rhode Island, who in some respects are equally lawless and insurrectionary, although some portions of the politicians have undertaken to defend Dor and his movements. But, above all, we have the "anti rent" disturbances in this State, which have now attained a most alarming magnitude.

All these spring from the same lawless spirit and ought to be put down by public opinion, and the authorities acting in obedience to it at once. The truth is that these ebullitions and isolated eruptions of the mob spirit, was fanned and encouraged by the miserable politicians of both the great parties. Let us look back for instance on the conduct of the two parties during the recent Presidential contest. Did we not see the New York Tribune on the right side, and the New York Plebeian, on the democratic side, both encouraging and defending the lawless proceedings of the anti-rent mobs in Rensselaer and other counties in this State? This course was pursued by these miserable politicians, for the purpose of getting the votes of a few of these anti-renters in the various counties. It is now time for all parties, and all the great masses of the people, who are the conservators of this government, to set themselves in direct opposition to these lawless mobs, and particularly against the miserable and contemptible politicians, who encourage them in the hope of catching a few votes.—N. Y. Herald.

The celebrated Randolph will case was progressing in the Superior Court, at Petersburg Va., on the 16th inst, with a prospect of occupying three months.

The Council of Boston, by a vote of 33 to 6, have instructed the Mayor to apply to the Legislature for powers, to introduce water from Long Pond into the city.

The Mobile papers announce the death of Martin Darrand, Esq., one of the oldest and most respected merchants of that city.

We learn from the Cherokee Advocate, that George Lightninglag, a young Cherokee, lately fell from the top of a ladder and was killed.

Mr. Fletcher Webster, Secretary to Mr. Cushing's mission, with the salary of a chargé d'affaires, is to return home in the spring.

Jacob Barker, of New Orleans, is said to have won $180,000 on the late Presidential election.

The owners of trotting horses in New York have petitioned the Governor to appoint a "fast day."

Some students at Madrid, lately dissected a body, and found the heart on the right side.

Three large spots (one extraordinary large) are now visible on the Sun's disc. Benton says that the Texas debt is $22,000,000.

On Friday a man from New Hampshire, named Austin was arrested for forgery in Boston. He said that he did not know it was any harm. Poor fellow.

Trouble in Maryland.—The Baltimore papers contain an account of an outrage committed at Bel Air, in that State, by a body of men who call themselves the "Anti-tax men" or "Refructors." It appears that the tax collector of Hartford made an attempt to sell the property of a man named Shadrack Street, and when the sale commenced, the mob began a violent assault on the bidders, and the collector, seriously wounding several persons and effectually breaking up the sale.

A Pirate.—We copy the following from the log-book of the ship John Marshall, arrived at this port last night from Rotterdam. Nov. 29th, lat. 37 51, long. 10, at 8 A. M. saw a brig and schooner to the leeward; the brig with her starboard tacks aboard, the schooner hoisted with his fore-top sail to the mast. Next morning saw the same schooner; she came near our lee quarter, then huffed up and kept within four miles of us.

She hoisted Genesee colors, at the same time she had a black flag hoisted at her main. We hoisted colors, when she pulled down her black flag. She luffed across our stern and went full down to the windward, and kept in sight of us, on the same tack. At 10 o'clock, P. M. saw a light to the leeward; in half an hour on her coming up with us very fast, called all hands on deck. At 11 30 she crossed our stern and went out of sight to windward, and hoisted a light. We tacked ship and stood N. E. for four hours; fortunately a breeze sprung up cloudy and squalls. At 4 A. M. tacked to the Westward. At daylight could not see her. On the 12th we saw a schooner which we took to be the same. She was a long black schooner of 130 or 140 tons; appeared to be an American built vessel, hull and sails new; saw a great many men on deck, and apparently a battery. Capt. Poyntress, passengers and crew have no doubt but what she was a pirate. They supposed she had boarded the John Marshall in the morning, had they not made their escape in the night.—Journal of Commerce, 25th inst.

A True but Strange Story.—One of the strangest circumstances came to light in this city the other day, every link in the chain of events being equally mysterious and remarkable. A lady, who keeps a stock store in Sixth street, missed, the other day, a splendid black scarf, of a rich and peculiarly figured silk. Of course she suspected a number of persons. She discharged her poor washerwoman who happened to be in the store at the time, accused her saleswoman, and also a dealer, who had been examining the scarf just before. This dealer was terribly annoyed by the accusation and sorely perplexed. But mark how he and others were relieved, and the guilty one discovered, by a simple accident! Some time after this, the dealer stepped into a milliner shop in second street—the only one he ever visited—and there he beheld, being worked up into a bonnet, a piece of silk, which he believed to be the identical one in question. He carried a piece of it to the loss. She knew it was the same! The milliner said the bonnet was to be finished, and called for that evening. A constable and a warrant were produced, the lady denied she was questioned about the silk, declared she bought it, desired to show at what store, the party proceeded to the shop of the lo-er, the lady there confessed her guilt, and faint! She was taken before Alderman—fainted again, was bound over in $200 to answer for her sister for security, and after a painful scene, the curtain dropped!

The culprit is a lady belonging to good society, and with her sister keeps a fashionable boarding-house in a fashionable street, is a member of a church, and reputed to be a pious and highly respectable lady. We give no names because we do not desire to add one pang to the sufficiently mortified parties, but merely to mention the outlines of the singular story, in order to show how innocence was acquitted and the really culpable mysteriously found out.—[Philadel. Paper.]

More Trouble Brewing.—From the tone of an article in the New Orleans Courier, we are led to believe that the Hon. Henry Hubbard, who has been appointed agent of Massachusetts, to reside at New Orleans, will meet with no better reception than his colleague Mr. Hoar did in Charleston. The Courier says:—

"The object of these people is to try the right of States to imprison free negroes for coming to them, and to bring the question before the Supreme court of the United States. They would do well to save themselves all this trouble—for the right to imprison or send away suspicious or dangerous characters is exercised by every community under heaven, and will not be abandoned we hope, at least by the people of Louisiana, based as it is on the sacred principles of self protection, which is before all human laws and institutions whatever."

The British Minister some years ago protested against the confinement of some negroes belonging to a vessel of that nation in Charleston, but he became satisfied that confinement was not incompatible with the laws of nations, at all events, he abandoned the question; and British subjects, being colored, are imprisoned whenever they have the misfortune to plant their feet within the limits of South Carolina.

Should the Hon Henry Hubbard happen to broach his abolition doctrines here he will stand a good chance of keeping company in the same building with his black fellow citizens of Massachusetts.

CEBA. Our files of Cuba papers are to the 11th inst. from Havana, and the 8th from Matanzas. The grand ceremony of the benediction and laying the foundation stone of the new Light House at Havana, took place on Sunday, the 8th inst. The Captain General attended by all his officers, the Archbishop and all the clergy, the Nobility and a very large concourse of citizens were on the spot. The harbor filled with small boats, the ships dressed off with their gayest colors, all together made it quite a gala day. At half past five o'clock, the Captain General, accompanied by the Earls of Santa-terania and Fernandina, and various other gentlemen, ascended the steps, and there in a small, elegant hall was the mortar, the hammer and trowel of silver. After the ceremony of laying the foundation stone of "la Reina nuestra Señora," that of O'Donnell was laid, followed by the solemn benediction, and a short oration, pronounced by the Archbishop. The whole concluded by a grand salute from the Castle and all the vessels of war. In a box of bronze, placed in the key-stone at the entrance, was deposited a description of the light, &c. There will be two inscriptions—one at the right side of the entrance, in marble and letters of gilded bronze, as follows:

YEAR OF 1844
ISABEL SECOND, Raigning.
The Board of Direction,
The Captain General of the Island,
Don Leopoldo O'Donnell, presiding.
This work was conducted by the body of Engineers of the Army.

The other inscription is to be at the side of the tower which fronts the sea, at a convenient elevation, that those entering port may be able to read it. The letters will be two feet high of inoxidable metal, and as follows.

O'Donnell.
1844.
This light will be 142 feet above the level of the sea, and can be seen at a distance of fifteen miles from the port. The light was made in France, by Mr. Fresnell. It is composed of four distinct parts. The investigations relative to the insurrection are still progressing at Matanzas.

ILLINOIS LEGISLATURE.

Springfield, Jan. 15, 1845.

In the House of Representatives, of the State of Illinois, upon the unconditional repeal of the Nauvoo charter?

Mr. Babbitt of Hancock county arose and said, he had waited to see what direction this bill would take, he had not intended to enter into the debate at this time, neither should he, had the friends of equal rights seen fit to come up in defence of those principles involved in the bill before the House, being the immediate representative of that people and knowing the present degree of prejudice and excitement existing against them, he could not in justice to himself and his constituents remain longer silent, and sit here quietly by and see their rights endangered without endeavoring to put this matter in its true light before those who were called upon to act, as he was confident he could in some measure remove the existing prejudice against the citizens of Nauvoo. He had remained silent from the consideration of a belief that this democratic legislature would see justice done every portion of the inhabitants of our State, and protect them in the secure enjoyment of equal rights and privileges.

In the first instance it was urged against the Mormon people that they committed frauds and aggressions in Ohio, swindled the community, and were expelled from the State; this he begged leave to say was false. They were not expelled nor driven from Ohio, and as evidence of their conduct and character, there he would refer gentlemen to the letters and testimony of the ex-governor of that State, the governor of Illinois, recommending this oppressed people to our kindness and attention, and his request upon Congress to consider their grievances and extend to them protection and relief.

The Kirtland Bank operations are charged upon the Mormons as a crime, but what is its true history. It was at first a Safety fund institution, and had its origin and control by Mormon influence would have been only in accordance with the spirit of the times. Similar institutions flourished in other places and in other States. But sir, this concern was not owned and conducted exclusively by Mormons, men of every religious denomination had a hand in its creation, there stockholders, directors, and Mormon citizens lent their aid by their operations. You never have heard an outcry against them in Ohio, and to my knowledge there never was one of that body convicted for any crime or offence against the laws of that State. They left it with their own accord for the purpose of removing to a place where they could obtain more land in one body, that they might settle down near together, which is but natural for any other class of men.

Follow them to Missouri, and what is their history there. They first settled in Jackson county, and were driven to Clay. Their numbers rapidly increasing, jealousy was excited, and a false pretence alleged against them of stirring up mutiny with the slaves, for the grounds of this suspicion it will only say that the Mormons like many others believe that slavery is an evil, yet sir, they are in every respect anti-slavery, and they do not undertake to dictate any mode of emancipation of the slaves. The citizens of Clay county held meetings and appointed a committee to wait upon the principal men amongst the Mormons and advise them to remove to some more unsettled part of the State. They accordingly purchased of the government a most entirely the county of Caldwell, to which they removed.

They were not left a long time in the enjoyment of peace, even in their new possessions, difficulties did not however break out first there, but in a small settlement of Mormons on the Missouri river, called De Witt. Here they had purchased so rapidly that jealousy was aroused, a large army was collected, surrounded the town and threatened the inhabitants with extermination. They were forced to treat with the lawless banditti, and agreed to go to their new location in Caldwell county; but this did not satisfy the hellish feelings of the mob; they followed them to their new abode and made several attacks upon them; then an armed force was called out under command of Gen. Atchison and others, who were successful in dispersing them, but what was the next news, that went abroad through the State, that the Mormons were in arms, that they were slaying all before them, burning houses and confiscating property. A committee was sent to the governor, who without going to the seat of difficulties himself, or sending an agent to learn the facts in the case; without law or precedent except in the person of a Nero or Caligula, issued an order to Gen. Clark to exterminate the Mormons, regardless of sex or age, which order was executed. An armed force assembled who commenced the work of slaughter by a number of men and children.

They finally stood their murderous hands, on condition that the Mormons should surrender up all their leading men, and leave the State forthwith. To which they agreed acting upon the principle that life was dearer to them than possessions, and liberty more desirable than slavery. They therefore in the dead of winter, destitute and miserable, started for this State, where they were well received.

They had been driven from place to place in Missouri, their press destroyed, some of their number inhumanly butchered, and they were driven by force of arms to Illinois, where they were kindly treated, until they increased so that they were able to control the selection of officers in their immediate vicinity, as soon as that was the case, political aspirants who were not able to secure their influence and support, commenced a warfare upon them, have charged them with crime; and what was the crime? It was simply the free exercise of the right of suffrage in the selection of public officers. I had thought it a democratic doctrine that the majority should rule, but it is said the Mormons do not exercise that right as other religions do not. They vote as unit, the reason for this is, they are forced into it in self defence. They go to the polls and find an anti-Mormon ticket there, and can do nothing else consistently with their interests. It is not to be expected that any people will vote for the favored enemies instead of their friends. Is it to be expected they will vote for men who are pledged to the destruction of their rights, as some are who occupy seats in this General Assembly.

The great and alarming hue and cry about Mormon outrages, violence and crime, were raised by those political demagogues who could not receive their votes and thus obtain promotion at their hands, and they have succeeded in imbuing the public mind with prejudice, with a view to effect their expulsion from the State.

A great deal is said and alleged against the Mormons in the City of Nauvoo, for the use made of the Habeas Corpus act by their Municipal Court, if any persons not actuated by preconceived prejudice will learn the facts in the case, they will find that persecution has driven that people to it in self defence. No demand was made by the Governor of Missouri for Joseph Smith, until he had been two years in this State, and that demand was instigated by his violent enemies here. Mobs came from Missouri, kidnapped Mormons, took them away, tied them up, whipped, and inhumanly treated them, when no charge of offence could be alleged against them. The governor of this State demanded or requested the surrender of all persons guilty of such acts that they might be brought to justice, which was disregarded and a request made for the delivery of the Smiths and Mormon leaders to the authorities of that State. This plan was concocted here, and what kind of justice could they expect from those who had thus oppressed, driven and followed them with their insatiable vengeance to Illinois?

A further plan was laid to take Mr. Smith, he was arrested and a writ of Habeas Corpus resorted to, but to save him from their ruthless hands, from whom he or any other Mormon would have but little else to expect than certain death.

Great complaint is also raised against their city ordinances which were passed for the express purpose of deterring men who were sent from Missouri to perpetrate their acts of violence, and hang about Nauvoo to carry out effect and execute the base designs of baser men.

They were passed for bunkum, and they had the desired effect. Those men who were hovering about the city of Nauvoo waiting an opportunity to wreak their vengeance upon the devoted heads of the Smiths left, and those ordinances were immediately repealed; none of them were put in force; they were only created as weapons of defence to deter the commission of crime and the perpetration of acts of violence. We hear a great deal about the rights of the old citizens of Hancock county being sacrificed. This is the signal, whoop and war cry of political demagogues; men who are not worthy to receive the suffrages of any people; men who for their own promotion would willingly sacrifice the civil and religious liberties of others, and endanger the peace, and destroy the best interests of our State.

You hear of Mormon outrages, Mormon murders, and Mormon courts; while in Hancock county, not one single officer of the court is a Mormon, and in the empanelling of Jurors special care is taken, that not one Mormon shall be put upon them to do away with the groundless apprehensions and foul calumnies that might otherwise be heaped upon them, on the score of legal injustice and judiciary corruption. Yet even this precaution has not been able to screen them from unmerited reproach, and the slanderous attacks of unprincipled place hunters and political jokers. Long catalogues of crimes have been prepared against the Mormons, in order to effect if possible their expulsion from the State. Bogus making, thieving, horse stealing, counterfeiting and bigamy, has been sounded from one part of the State to the other, to awaken the prejudice and arouse the hostilities of an excited populace against that proscribed class of the community, in hopes an array of populace rage might extirpate or drive them from their homes. (Did the speaker) the Mormons resist the execution of the law? In some instances they resorted to unjustifiable self defence to keep out of the hands of their persecutors; it was but to escape a certain and summary death, with which they had been publicly threatened. What had they to expect from men who openly avowed their nefarious designs, and even said they had their bullets run for twelve months for the express purpose of shooting Mormons, if they did not leave their possessions and their homes, and take refuge with the Indians in the recesses of the Rocky Mountains or in the wilds of the West?

I say would any man be expected to go to Carthage under such circumstances, when he had nothing to expect but an unrelenting persecution and a violent death? Among men who acknowledge no law, would they obey the commands of the Executive of our State, and said in derision of his power, "we have no governor, he is a Mormon governor."

The expenses of the Mormon war, as it is termed, are alleged against the citizens of Nauvoo; that expense occurred for the detention of violence, suppression of mobs, and was more properly speaking the Warsaw war. The troops were ordered out only for the purpose of getting the mob under command, that they might be kept from acts of violence.

The arms were demanded of the citizens of Nauvoo, and as soon as they were assured of the protection of the laws, they obeyed the order and gave them up.

They have always been ready and willing to submit to all laws, when there was even a prospect of protection under those laws, but it has not been so with the people of Warsaw; peace officers in the discharge of their official duties have been insulted and abused.

While people cry out against the outrages of the Mormons and their unscrupulous disregard to law and order, it must be recollected there is less crime in Hancock County, than in any other county of its size and number of inhabitants in the State. It is said Mormons protect each other and cannot be brought to justice. I have shown that the court was not Mormon, and can with much more propriety hurl back the charge upon the Mormon persecutors of Warsaw and Carthage, for there the prejudice is so strong and determination so fixed, to drive the Mormons from the land; that false allegation and perjury are not the greatest of their crimes. Men can be found to swear the innocent guilty, because they worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences and forsooth are Mormons. Thus originate the stereotyped editions of Mormon offences which go out abroad to prejudice every where the public mind—and men are here advocating the erection of new courts for other places (as the city of Chicago for instance), while they wish to take from us our police organization and municipal court, why is this? Is this in accordance with the principles of equal rights? Is this democratic doctrine, and shall acts like these go out from a democratic Legislature.

Repeat the charter of Nauvoo, prescribe her citizens by your public acts, and you tolerate and encourage the demon of mob violence that surrounds that people, and is waiting to feast upon their destruction. Already have their public journals claimed your sanction by the passage of an unconditional repeal of this charter through every branch of this Legislative body; already do they claim your endorsement to their acts of violence and deeds of wickedness, till finish the work you have begun, and you seal the signet of Mormon destruction. You sign their warrants for execution here in this hall, and send them forth but to be enforced; already have they sent out this message that the Legislature are with them; with them in their intolerant proscription and persecution; with them in the perpetration of violence and the commission of crime; yes, with them in the foul, cruel, and cowardly murder of the Smiths, who were in the hands and under the protection of the laws. Will you countenance by any act of yours cold and bloody murder, which would disgrace and stigmatize the name of pirates and public robbers.

Mormons are not confined to Nauvoo alone, they are spread and increasing throughout the length and breadth of our land, and while we are inviting emigration to our rich and uncultivated prairie's, we are by our acts of injustice driving actual settlers from our state; from a state too, where a majority pretend to be the advocates and devotees of equal rights; even Jack Mormons as they are termed are objects of particular vengeance, and only because they are willing to do equal justice to all. The cry of Mormon outrage comes up from the far south, while the counties near Hancock knowing the true history of that people commiserate their condition, and are willing to meet out to them even handed justice.

The use made of the habeas corpus act which is urged as a reason for a repeal of their city charter is but a justifiable one; it has been well called the great writ of right, and should not be curtailed.

He did consider that the unconditional repeal of their charter, would be an act of flagrant injustice, unwarranted by the democratic doctrine by which we pretend to be governed, nor called for by any existing facts nor justifiable cause. It was (he said) necessary for a city to have an internal police, and under the operation of that police, men might be thrown in prison or confinement, and the writ of habeas corpus was often indispensably necessary for the relief of those individuals.

Mr. B. continued, he would not have taken the floor at this time, but no one seemed disposed to arise in the defence of those principles which were deeply involved in the question before the house. It was a question of equal rights, and he had hoped to see gentlemen stand up in defence of those rights. There seems to be a disposition manifested here to prescribe that people for opinions sake.

We are told in defence of that position that they do not exercise their political privileges, in the same manner as other religious denominations do; they vote as a unit. To vote thus is not incorporated in their religion like other men, they are left free to vote as they may choose, but when they come to the polls and find an anti-Mormon ticket, then they are forced by direct opposition to unite; and what is the sin of union of feeling and concert of action? Would not the democratic party wish that all could see alike the true interests of the American people. Do not devoted christians pray that all may be of one mind, and bring about the happy days of millenium; but when one city acts as a body, design, force, corruption is the cry, and that people must be exterminated. "Consistency thou art a Jew!"

If the Mormons have done wrong, they were forced into the commission of that wrong, and in the matter of voting as one man were obliged to do it in self evidence; could it be expected of them or any other body of men, that they would support their enemies instead of their friends? I think not. The great secret of a party opposition, is that they are a kind of nag that will not carry double; they will not take all political parties on their backs, but I think gentlemen should not complain at that, they have carried them each in their turn.

Mr. Speaker I am well aware of the excitement which has prevailed. I know the bitter animosities existing against the Mormons, and prejudices which have been created by the free circulation of unfounded charges, and unmerited attacks upon that people; but what has already been done by the popular fury in relation to this matter, what has been the course of the anti-Mormon crusaders; has the character of their conduct been such as to merit your sanction and approbation, are you prepared to countenance their violation of law, order and justice, in the resorting to the violence of mobs, to effect the firm overthrow and expulsion of that people—are you prepared to signify mark them as the suitable objects of vengeance, and seal their destruction by insidious acts of legislation? What has been the course and character of their opposers? to what have they not resorted to carry out their nefarious projects? Have they plundered and embezzled the property of their neighbors? have they practised frauds and committed offences against high heaven by believing what some men term heresy? these are the crimes alleged against the Mormons, but those men who take upon them this unholy war of religious and political persecution have resorted to crimes of a deeper and darker hue; crimes that cry to heaven for justice, murder and treason have marked their progress in blood and infamy; go to Carthage and let the dumb walls of a prison house in mournful silence tell you of their cold inhuman butchery, which has fixed indelibly the foul stigma of murderers upon them; and what is still more they committed this act of unheard of treachery, at the very time the highest executive officer of the State who had pledged to the victims the protection of the laws, was supposed to be in the city of the devoted prophet, whose incensed populace it was expected would put him and his people immediately to death, calculating that to enrage the already too much excited inhabitants in the surrounding country, that they might raise enemies and sack their city and drive them, men women and children again from their possessions and their homes to seek once more shelter from want and persecution, amidst the cold unfeeling charities of the world. If men here upon this floor are willing to lend their countenance to deeds like these, I want they should come out and show their hands. Tell us so and not evade the question. It may be thought I am too independent, I can not help it. It airs the blood of my fathers within me, who fought and even died for liberty and in the advocacy of just and equal rights, I cannot eringe and play the sycophant.

My friends advised me not to speak upon this question, as I was styled a Mormon it might increase the existing prejudice of members upon this floor. I waited for some one to appear before the committee of the whole House, but the silent and summary manner in which that committee arose, reported progress, and recommended the passage of the bill inclined me to the opinion that we were to have a kind of funeral procession here, and without ceremony bury the rights of Mormon citizens.

Who could after seeing the spirit manifested here of proscription, blame the citizens of Nauvoo for sending men to represent them in the halls of legislation. He hoped the matter would be again referred, and some respect paid to the remonstrance of 1300 citizens of that city, which had been presented to this honorable body. Other cities had transcended their chartered rights as well as Nauvoo, even in the city of Springfield a public lecturer has been fined by the common council for daring to lecture upon a science without a license; had this been done in the city, and under the authorities of ill fated Nauvoo, the cry would have gone out, and unmerited censure heaped upon the Mormons. He just then, regard the principles of equal rights, and sent out to the citizens of every portion of our State even handed justice, forget not your duties in the madness of prejudice, but act in this matter with prudence. If the privileges of the Nauvoo charter are too extensive, if it grants power exceptionable, repeal those provisions, and leave them in possession of their just rights.

THE ANTI-RENTERS.—THE MANNER IN WHICH THEY HOLD THEIR LEASES.—THE CAUSES OF DISCONTENT.—REPORT OF JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

1. The Manor of Rensselaerwick extends from a point twelve miles below, to a point twelve miles above Albany, North and South and to a distance each side of the Hudson of twenty four miles; it is therefore 24 miles in length and 48 in width, embracing the counties of Albany and Rensselaer, the cities of Albany and Troy, and some villages excepted; its population is 50,000.

2. The title to the land rests on these grounds: Holland in order to encourage emigrants, made liberal offers to Patrons who should plant colonies in New Netherlands. Killan Van Rensselaer, at various times from 1630 to 1637, purchased lands from the Indian chiefs, in presence of the Governor, making payment in full. These purchases were confirmed by the authorities at Fort Amsterdam; by the Dutch Government at home; by the English in 1654 again in 1685; and still again 1704, and finally by the State of New York in 1821, by a provision of the constitution saying, that nothing in that instrument shall affect any grants of land within the State made by authority of the King or his predecessors. The Judiciary Committee, in the legislature last year, said expressly that if this was not a good title "there can certainly be none in the State."

3. Most of the Manor is settled under perpetual leases, by which tenants hold the farms in perpetuity, with a reservation to the proprietor of mines and streams the right to erect mills; and cut timber for them; the right of ingress over the land; he paying for the land so used; and a quarter of the purchase money on every alienation of the estate otherwise than by will. The tenant is bound to pay a yearly rent in wheat, four fat fowls and a day's service, to pay all taxes.

4. The rents paid by the Heldeburgh and Rensselaer farmers, are ten bushels of wheat per one hundred acres, and the average of the whole manor is eleven bushels per one hundred and fifty acres, less than one bushel to nine acres.—These are the prominent facts concerning the tenants by which these lands are held. The title of the proprietor is perfectly good; the rents are very low, and the whole is held according to express agreement. The grievances complained of by the tenants, and which are made the pretexts for rebellion, and refusal to pay the rent are thus stated: 1. They allege a want of title in the landlord—this has been disproved; and if it were well founded, they certainly have no better title than the proprietor. 2. Some of them complain because they pay wheat instead of money. There can be no practical grievances in this provision as with money wheat can always be purchased: the requisite amount can always be raised; and the arrangement was made expressly for the benefit of the tenants. 4. The pair of fowls and the day's service are represented as anti-republican—these have been always commuted at the market price, when desired. 5. The reservation to the landlord of a quarter of the money when the farms are sold, is complained of—but it should be borne in mind that it costs the holder nothing, that he agreed to the condition, that he gets three-fourths when he has no ownership in it; and above all, these quarter sales have very rarely been exacted, and may always be commuted at very small prices. 6. The reservation of mines and streams is complained of—but is part of the contract and practically it has no effect, as no mines have been discovered. 7. The tenants say they have paid for the land by paying rent for a series of years, and should therefore be its owners—the same would release a borrower from the obligation to repay the principal of a debt, when he has kept it long enough to let the accumulated interest equal the original sum. 8. Another complaint is that back rents have been allowed to accumulate;—that is as much the fault of the tenant as the proprietor; and moreover the late Patron made the most positive and benevolent provisions in his will for abatement in whole or in part of these back rents. 9. It is the tenants that have been degraded to vassals and serfs; the Judiciary Committee of the last Legislature have declared their belief that this grievance exists only in imagination.

These are the grievances of which the tenants complain; and no one can fail to see that they are utterly unfounded, or at least inadequate to justify the steps they have taken. The writer of the communication next alludes to the propositions that have been made to remove even these slight causes of dissatisfaction on the part of the tenants. The proprietors have never proposed, in new leases, to renew any of the objectionable clauses; but have been perfectly willing to unite with the tenants in cancelling all the old leases, and changing the mode of tenure so that wheat rent should be converted into money rent, and the farms purchased at the price of which the rent was to be the interest. The tenants profess to agree to these terms, but a difference arises as to the price of the wheat, and the rate of interest; the proprietors wish to take the average price of wheat for the last ten years, (which would be about one dollar twenty five cents), and to estimate the interest at five per cent; the tenants refused to allow over one dollar per bushel for the wheat, and demand the interest be estimated at seven per cent. The difference between these views will be seen at a glance—twenty two and a half bushels at one dollar and twenty five cents per bushel, are twenty eight dollars fifty cents, which would be the annual rent, and this at five per cent, would be the interest of five hundred and seventy dollars; the price of the farm on the proprietors' scale. On the other hand, twenty two and a half bushels, at one dollar, make the yearly rent only twenty dollars and fifty cents, and at seven per cent, would call for a principal of only three hundred and twenty two dollars on the tenants' scale. As this seems to be much the most difference of opinion involved in the case, we copy the following passage in vindication of the proprietors' claim from the communication of Mr. Van Rensselaer.

"The proprietors have in their favor, the consideration that the rate of interest on long and permanent loans, (such as these must be estimated,) has always been five per cent, which is the rate at the present time; and furthermore that money does not now command, even for a single year, more than six per cent.—The practical operations of the adoption of these two scales, would be that on the landlord's calculation the land would bring four dollars per acre, and on the tenant's calculation only two dollars. If it be added that the average price at which tenants have sold the farms on the Manor has been heretofore about twenty five dollars per acre, subject to the annual rents the fairness of the proprietor's calculations is more and more evident."

"The tenants, in addition to the low price at which they wish to obtain their farms in fee simple, demand that the day's service and fowls shall be thrown in without any commutation price; whilst the proprietors think that these are as much entitled to a fair money equivalent as the other stipulations of the lease. The Judiciary Committee express their opinion about the relief sought, as follows:—Your Committee are well assured that the tenants can have all the relief to which they are in justice and equity entitled, directly from the proprietors of the Manor."

Some heartless wretch advertises in the Times for a young lady, as assistant in a school from eight A.M. to eight P.M. for which she is to consider "board and washing a sufficient remuneration," and pay for her own lodging. We wonder whether there is a pump near that school.

THE BEST COWS.

You cannot be absolutely certain, when you purchase heifers, that you will have good cows, but by close attention you may acquire the art pretty accurately whether they will prove good. The first point is the udder; if this is not capacious or if it has not the power of becoming so, she never will be a great milker. Then the color of the skin will be important; if you would have rich milk it should be yellow, or rather a mahogany color; but you will want good teats to draw the milk; large teats, not standing close together, are a good sign. These are the most important points.

As to the form of the cow, you will not choose a large head and horns, for it costs too much to support them; nor long legs to make you hold the pail up from the ground, and require high fences. Long legs require too much support; they are not good even for travelling. Choose short legged animals whenever you have the choice, whether cows, oxen, horses, or hogs. Choose slender necks and tapering tails; straight backs and broad briskets, for such feed better and are less liable to disease. The cow's body should be large in comparison with her head and limbs, but it is not an object to keep very large cows or oxen, or horses on our farms, as a general rule. Middle sized cows, and those below it, you almost always find better milkers than large cows are.

In regard to the color of the body, a red or yellow, or a yellow brindle, is a indicative as any of a good rich milker. You cannot always determine, by any external marks, whether your heifer will prove a good cow. After trying her one summer, you can tell better, and you can then turn her off for beef, if you choose. On purchasing, you will have some regard to color as a matter of fancy. Nobody wants a black cow or a white one; and though part colored cows are endurable, no white man buys a skunk colored horse for his own keeping.

Mild and gentle cows are better than irritable animals, and will be more ready to yield their milk. By close scrutiny you can determine in some degree by the countenance and the motions of the heifer whether she is naturally docile; yet very much depends on her breaking—her treatment and education during the first season. Various treatment will make any animal vicious; still, there is a difference of character independent of education. Examine the eyes and the face of the heifer; a large mild eye, with a circle or halo around it is a good indication. The face should not be large, and the bones should all be small in proportion to the body. A large chest is evidence of good lungs and of a hardy animal. The hips should be well spread, for obvious reasons.

By proper attention to selecting and breeding we may just as well have a race of cows that will yield ten pounds of butter per week as five pounds. We know of no neat stock superior to our red Devon cattle—such as we meet with in all parts of New England.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

Improving Land by Green Manure.—It is believed by some that the best kind of vegetable growth for turning in, in the form of green manure, is Indian corn sown broadcast. If it is intended to apply lime to the land, it would be well to do so the fall before. Then, as early in the spring as circumstances will permit, sow corn broadcast, say three or four bushels to the acre, as soon as it has grown as high as it can conveniently be turned under with a deep-working plough turn it under, and immediately sow another crop the same way, turning that under as before, but with a medium plough run crossways of the previous furrow. In the middle and southern States, three crops can thus be turned under in one season. It is believed that no system of manuring or renovation, except the heavy application of stable manure, can compare with this plan in its results. If the land be very poor the first crop will be very light; but light as it may be, it will yet add a very considerable portion of the elements of vegetable nutriment to the soil; and thus the second crop will be greatly improved, and the third will be all that can be desired. It is believed that in this way four times as much improvement will be effected in one season as can be by means of clover in three or four years. For this purpose, farmers in the North should use the tall kinds of southern corn, as being of more rapid growth, and furnishing vastly more matter for the soil.—Cultivator.

CURING MEAT.

Hams.—The following mode of preparing hams, we have practiced for several years, and can with confidence recommend it to others.

For every one hundred pounds of meat take five pints of good molasses, (or five pounds of brown sugar), five ounces salt petre, and eight pounds of rock salt—and three gallons water, and boil the ingredients over a gentle fire, skim nix off the froth or scum, as it rises. Continue the boiling till the salt &c. is dissolved. Have the hams nicely cut or trimmed, packed in casks with the shank end down, as the pickle will thus strike in better. When the pickle prepared as above, is sufficiently cool, pour it over the hams. They may lie in pickle from two to six weeks, according to the size of the pieces, or the state of the weather. Beef or mutton hams, intended for smoking or drying, may be cured according to this mode, and will be found excellent.

Much of the goodness of hams depends on smoking. They should be hung at such a distance from the fire, as not to be heated. They should also be hung shank end down, as this will prevent the escape of their juices by dripping. Small hams wanted for immediate use, will answer with two weeks' smoking, but larger ones, and those wanted for keeping, should be smoked four weeks, or more.

Different articles are used for smoking. Perhaps sawdust from hard wood, where it can be conveniently had, is on the whole to be preferred. Corn cobs are first rate, and are said by some to make the sweetest smoke of anything.—Chips of maple and hickory, or the small twigs and branches of those kinds of wood, do well.

Religious Persecution in Norway.—It appears that the same intolerant spirit which disgraces the established Lutheran Church of Sweden, and which closed the mouth of that excellent man, Mr. Sepp, is manifesting itself in Norway. A small body of Quakers living at Starenger have been forced to appeal to the government for relief from the persecutions to which they are subjected by reason of their religious faith. They represent themselves to have been imprisoned for weeks because, for conscience' sake, they will not bring their children to baptism; besides other vexations and wrongs. This denial of religious freedom is especially odious to the Lutheran Church in Norway, because of the large measure of civil freedom enjoyed by that community; and also because, a very few years ago, the Lutherans of Norway and Denmark, as well as the British churches, were called upon to extend their sympathy and aid to the several persecuted Lutherans of Prussia. Scarcely has that storm passed when we find the Lutheran churches in Denmark and Norway persecuting, with a high hand, the Baptists in the former country and the Quakers in the latter.—It is high time that persecution for conscience sake was shamed out of Christendom; but it never will be so long as the unnatural alliance between church and state is permitted.—New York Evangelist.

Sub-Marine Battery.—The Baltimore American says:

"Experiments by the aid of Morse's Telegraph have been made this afternoon by Mr. Colt, inventor of the Sub-Marine Battery, which have resulted in proving at the distance of 40 miles, (from Baltimore to Washington,) that by igniting gunpowder and other combustible substances, he can blow up a ship with the same celerity and certainty as at only a few miles.

Mr. Colt has proposed to the Government to permanently fortify any harbor at a cost of not exceeding that of a steam ship-of-war, and guarantees its security against the combined fleets of Europe.

Why not extend it across the Atlantic and blow up Queen Vic.

The Cherokee Quarrel.—Fort Gibson, (Arkansas) Dec. 5, 1844.—The "Old Settlers" long talked of Council commenced last Wednesday. The Commissioners left here last Tuesday for the Council Ground, near the mouth of the Illinois river, about twenty miles from this post. Lieut. C. S. Lovell, accompanied them as Secretary. Report says, that John Ross and his followers, are very much opposed to the meeting, although it is generally supposed he has too much good sense to "bluff" against the United States authorities.

An Indian express arrived here about ten o'clock last night, from the Commissioners, upon the arrival of which, company II, of the 1st dragoons, (the only company of dragoons here at the time) were ordered to saddle up immediately, and repair forthwith to the Council Ground. They started about midnight. Lieut. R. H. Chilton, in command, taking with them eight days rations. The object of their trip is not known, as the order was a sort of a secret one. Conjecture says, it is for the purpose of preventing the Ross party from committing any outrages upon the Rogers or "Old Settler" party.

Enclosed, I send you a copy of the Proclamation issued by Governor Butler, U. S. Agent, and one of the Commissioners.

Should any thing of importance transpire at the Council, I will inform you of the same by the first opportunity.

Dec. 6.—Snow fell in this neighborhood, last night, about three inches deep, and it is still snowing rapidly.

The proclamation spoken of, printed in Cherokee and English, is one issued by P. M. Butler, the U. S. agent.—We give an extract.

"I proclaim, and declare, that letters have been directed to John Ross, Esq., principal chief of the Cherokee Nation, and people, and to Captain John Rogers, coadjutor of the principal of the complaining parties, to wit:

"The Old Settlers' and Treaty party, informing them that the honorable secretary of war has appointed the promised commission to inquire into and ascertain the true and exact extent of the discontent and spirit of hostility which prevails among the Cherokee people.—St. Louis Reveille, Dec. 18.

STATISTICAL.

The Commercial Fleets of Europe.—According to a statement of the Austrian Lloyd, (whose statistical accounts are to be depended upon) about the Commercial Fleets of the European States, England has 23,152, (according to others 27,715) ships of 3,047,418 tons.

France, 13,345 ships of 389,507 tons.

Austria 6179 ships of 208,551 tons. Prussia, 835 ships, besides coasting vessels, of 222,034 tons. Of these 217 belong to Stettin, 94 to Stralsund, 85 to Danzig, 84 to Memel, 54 to Barth, &c.

Hanover has 545 ships of 56,602 tons.

Mecklenburg, 327 ships of 46,260 tons.

Oldenburg, 8 ships of 1200 tons.

Hamburg, 337 ships of 57,102 tons.

Lubeck, 71 ships of 4752 tons.

Bremen, 215 ships of 63,032 tons.

The number of coasting vessels of the seven latter States, (Prussia included) is estimated at about 6000 of 551,144 tons.

Holland, has 879 ships of 214,281 tons.

Belgium, 139 of 25,416 tons.

Denmark, 963 of 95,364 tons; not a small part of which belongs to Holstein, which has a considerable coasting trade of North Russia, on account of the number of ships wanting.

South Russia, has 10 large ships, all the Russian ships, used in commerce, are estimated at 239,000 tons, coasting vessels included.

✶ The Bank of the State of Missouri, has published a statement of its affairs, and those of the Branches, by which it appears that the gold and silver coin on hand amounts to $1,973,441 58; and the circulation to $1,365,970 00. A greater disproportion has never been exhibited in any institution that we have ever heard of. The bills discounted up to the 31st of December, 1844, amounted to $1,058,672 82; and there was due depositors $1,367,452 33.—[N. Y. Sun.

THE BARON ROTHSCHILD.—The millionaire had been overtaken in the street by a shower, and no hackney coach presenting itself, stepped into an omnibus which was passing by.

Arrived opposite the Exchange, he made a sign to the conductor to stop, alighted, and was walking towards the temple of gold, absorbed in the financial operations of the day.

"Stop," cried the conductor, "you have not paid your fare."

"Oh! I forgot," answered the Baron, and commenced a search in his pockets, which proved to be, unfortunately, empty—a fact which he announced.

"No humbug, farceur," said the conductor; "you must fork over, and be sharp about it too, for I can't wait here all day."

"I am sorry I have no sous, but here is my card, and—"

The conductor threw back the card, and cut short the Baron's apology with a volley of oaths.

"Insolent fellow, I am the Baron de Rothschild!"

"Connais pas—I want my six sous!"

The banker, furious, and at the same time amused, drew from his pocket-book a coupon of 50,000 francs government five per cent stocks, and handing it to his persecutor, demanded the change.

Just at this moment a friend came by, and, greatly to the relief of the astonished conductor, paid the six sous, which he pocketed, and then, as if struck with remorse, made a low bow, and assured the Baron, that, if he was really out of money, he would lend him ten francs with pleasure.

Mob in Portland.—The Portland Argus of Friday gives the following particulars of a religious riot in that city.

The meeting at the City Hall last Tuesday evening was one of the largest ever congregated in that building; and yet to the disgrace of our city, the meeting broke up in a row, and ended in mobbing two quiet men, S. S. Foster and Rev. J. M. Spear, who were badly beaten and maltreated. And what makes this matter more disgraceful to our city than any other mob that has preceded it, is the fact that Mr. Foster was a silent listener to the Rev. Mr. C. Sparry's lecture against Popery, and did not utter a word, nor shew the slightest disrespect towards the speaker or any one in the meeting; neither did Mr. Spear, except after the lecturer had finished his address, and in the midst of a row, he remarked that some one had invited a discussion and ought to be heard.

The lecturer in many of his statements, grossly misrepresented the papists and abused and belied the democratic party, especially those who usually assemble in Tammany Hall, New York. And had the few Catholics or democrats, who were present, attempted to gag the lecturer or create a riot, then from the Whig presses and pulpits we should have heard and seen the most alarming and exciting harangues against those who would not quietly listen to any and every kind of abuse that might be said against democracy or Catholicism.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 29, 1845.

NAUVOO CHARTER.

The State Register of the 21th says: "On Tuesday last the House took the final vote on repealing the charter, which passed in the affirmative—yeas 78, nays 36. Every vote cast in the negative, was by a Democratic member."

They that kill the prophets, of course, would kill laws and charters, but they can't kill the truth! and what difference will it make whether the sun rises in the east and sets in the west, or rises in the west and sets in the east?—night will come upon the world as soon one way as the other.

NAUVOO.

Some bass-wood editors think the Mormons distorted Hebrew and made Nauvoo: which they imagine means beautiful rest. Every scholar, having a Hebrew bible, may read in the 52d chapter, and 7th verse of Isaiah:

"Mah Nauvoo gnal lanhaureim," &c. How beautiful upon the mountains, &c. Now where is the distortion? The word "rest" must have been added by an unfledged gnaubarian.

RICH AND POOR.

We see, by the New York papers, that they of that godly city, are publishing an account, in a book, of "their wealthy citizens." This is the way of the world, but how much more heavenly it would be, to tell the tale of the poor citizens! Truly, as the philosophers say:—the rich of this world, are like fox-fire; their heat is cold; their light is darkness, and their substance is rotten wood.

MILLERISM AGAIN.

The "Midnight Cry" gives the just time, that old father Miller has fixed upon for the beginning of the Millennium: That is, "to-day—to-day—and to-day until the Lord comes."

This is decidedly the wisest turn the old man ever took, but he may continue his "to days" for forty years, and if Jesus Christ comes then, the world will have been turned upside down, to sling out the present crooked and perverse generation.

Take notice, all, when the Lord comes, he will come in the "clouds of heaven," and every eye will see him, and his "sign" will be seen in more magnificent splendor than was his "star in the east," and perhaps, it will precede his coming as long before hand, as the day-star does sun rise. At any rate there will be an earthquake large enough to move the islands out of their places, and throw down the mountains: We shall all know the time.

The Franklin (Mo.) Register, thinks the Mormons possess spirit, "whatever may be said of their peculiar religious or political opinions;" and that the Mormon temple will cost $400,000"—[which will be nearer one million]

The reason for all these things is, we have better religion, better politics, and a better plan for a temple:—all founded in direct revelation, just like the bible and apostolic gospel; and then we have the Book of Mormon extra; showing who made the antiquities of America, &c.; and the and so forth, is all the beauty of it.

Stick a pin there.—The pin factory at Waterbury, Ct., turns out two barrels of pins a day, and each barrel contains 4,000,000, making 2,496,000,000 a year; which at fifty cents per thousand, would retail at the moderate sum of one million two hundred and forty-eight thousand dollars!

THE TRADES MEETING.

We have not published the trades meetings of last week and this, in order to give the Agricultural and Manufacturing Association a chance to report, and commence the dim in the Mississippi on a permanent basis. Every thing seems to be about ready to commence operations, and we have no doubt successfully.

The weather still continues mild, and mostly pleasant. The thermometer rarely goes more than three or four degrees below zero. Should the winter continue so, we might be almost tempted to exclaim like little Frank: "O that it was always winter!"

Recorders Court.—Since April, 1844, up to the first of January, 1845, there were one hundred and six persons brought before the Recorder for the commission of crime: 59 for larceny; 10 for robbery; 7 for passing counterfeit money; 2 for burglary; 1 for perjury; 5 for conspiracy to defraud, and the others for obtaining money by false pretences; concealing goods, enticing slaves from their owners, &c. Of the number of persons so charged, 62 were committed to the county jail to answer before the Criminal Court, the others were discharged.

The fees of the Recorder, for the services rendered by him in these cases, amount to some $240; those of the City Marshal to $180. Of these fees, however, these officers do not receive a cent, as by an act of the last session of the Legislature, magistrates and other officers under them, in this city and county, are required to perform duty under the criminal law of the State without compensation. In all other counties, where comparatively few offences are perpetrated, ample provision is made for the pay of justices and constables.—St. Louis Organ.

✶ So Gov. Ford hit it in, allowing that the city of Nauvoo had fewer criminals than other surrounding cities, naming St. Louis as one. The fact is, the whole Mormon community, have not had one-fourth the number of criminals of the above in fourteen years, perhaps not a tenth. The truth makes us free.

We understand that Lemuel Andrews, Sheriff of this county, has received authority from Gov. Ford, to remove the Indians from the county east of here.

If they go quietly, no force will be used, otherwise sufficient force will be raised to compel them to leave. Mr. Andrews will see it done, too.

We copy the above from the Upper Mississippian. This is all right—the Indians and old citizens are two nations. Oil and water will not mix.

For the Neighbor.

Dear Sir,—You will notice that Governor Ford in his message to the honorable Senate, and House of Representatives, touching the late circumstances, that resulted in the death of Generals Joseph and Hyrum Smith at Carthage, that he observes, "that the Common council," of your city, "possessing legislative authority only," sat in judgment under pretence, as a court before whom "a very curious trial was had, which resulted in a judgment of that body, that the press," (in question) "was a public nuisance, and ought to be abated, and ordered the Mayor to see it done; thereby violated the law, in assuming the exercise of judicial powers," that the "mayor," in making his warrant to the city marshal to that effect, "violated the law in ordering this erroneous and abused judgment to be executed;" that upon their arrest for riot, the "municipal court erred in discharging them," from arrest, on a writ of Habeas Corpus "that the whole proceedings of the mayor, the common council, and municipal court, were exparte, irregular and illegal, and not to be endured in a free country." Now sir, if these facts are perfectly true, and authentic, as he has asserted; equally so it is, that those authorities have subjected themselves, to some judicial investigation.

This lesson however, presented, as it has been, by the Executive, to the Legislative department of state, may be an endowment to profit, by the erroneous ensample, and not fall into the same or a similar error. It indeed, it could be shown, that the Common council, were irregular in the act of declaring, by ordinances, what shall be a nuisance, and removing the same, according to the delegated power granted them; and if the municipal court, who had power conferred by the charter, to issue writs, of Habeas Corpus, in all cases arising under the Ordinances of the city; and as he further asserts, an ordinance did exist to that effect within the city, if they did finally err, in the discharge from arrest for riot. Query whether that act of legislation, and discharge of the court, would not remain in force, until some superior court, (whose proceedings were neither, erroneous, nor curious, nor yet as irregular, exparte, illegal, and in violation of law) could properly adjudicate the matter, and pronounce them void, in a manner, and form that could be endured in a free country. And further could that responsibility be constitutionally assumed by any Legislative or Executive body of the state, without subjecting them to the same searching inquiry.

And last, if not least, is the solution of this question at an end, or is it yet to be solved by some Judge of a court of competent jurisdiction, to review the acts of pretended legislation, as well as that of an executive functionary?

If any Legal gentleman will have the politeness to answer or solve the above queries; with tact, and taste, to be tolerated and endured by free men, in a land of freedom, and religious liberty, they will doubtless confer a favor upon an humble citizen of Iowa, in the exercise of the freedom of speech and of the press.

France.—The mixture of licentiousness and despotism in France is the strangest possible. Of stable, rational, intelligent, guarded, and well grounded liberty, either civil or religious, the people have as yet but little idea. They have never been educated for it; and as individuals, the deficiencies of early education are very rarely compensated, and very difficult to be made up, soon the nation the want of an education unto sober liberty will long be felt. They passed at once from despotism to the excess of licentious anarchy, and from superstitious fidelity and blasphemy; and the pendulum having had its swing in that direction, will now perhaps pass again into the contrary extreme. At any rate, there are no fixed principles. The same man may blaspheme the Christian religion and its Divine Author with impunity, who shall be shut up in prison if he does the same, or any thing approaching it, in reference to the Roman Catholic religion. A new Voltaire would be hailed in France, and again crowned with laurels; while a new Luther would probably be condemned, silenced and incarcerated.—Corr. N. Y. Evangelist.

In the lullaby of Darien, the right of asking in marriage is lodged in, and promiscuously exercised by both sexes, without the least hesitation or embarrassment; and in the Ukraine the same thing is carried further, the women more generally court than the men. When a young woman falls in love with a man, she goes to his father's house, and reveals her passion in a most tender and pathetic manner, and promises most submissive obedience. Should he make excuse, she resolves to persevere, and takes up her lodging there; should he capture obstinate, the church takes her side, her kindred are ready to avenge her honor, and he has no method but to banke himself to flight, till she is otherwise disposed of.

From the story of Sams in an Edinburgh, it would seem that the young men of Israel were denied the power of asking a female in marriage. Samson saw in Sannah one that was beautiful, and he said to his father, "I have seen a woman of the daughters of the Philistines, now therefore get her for me to wife." But his parents objected; he, however, did not elope; or threaten to go to Texas—he merely repeated, "get her for me, for she pleases me well."

The capture of the Buenos Ayres squadron.—The Boston Daily Advertiser remarks, that both the original account of the capture of the Buenos Ayres squadron blockading Montevideo, and the subsequent information of it, have come through the British Packet, a paper so entirely under the influence of Rosas, that it seemed probable that the view most favorable to the Buenos Ayres squadron, and least so to the American Commander, had been given. The following extract of a letter from a very respectable house in Montevideo, explains that the vessel that fired upon the American brig was acting "in concert" with the Buenos Ayres fleet. We shall doubtless have a satisfactory explanation when our government receives despatches from Capt. Voorhees. The letter from which we quote is dated October 19.

"In consequence of a schooner under Montevideo colors, but in concert with the Buenos Ayres squadron blockading squadron, having fired upon the American bark Rosalva, Capt. Voorhees, of the United States Frigate Congress, obliged them all to haul down their colors, but subsequently released them upon the commanding officer disclaiming any participation in the act."

The correspondent of the N. Y. Journal of Commerce thinks the U. S. States will gain at least $10,000,000 by the contrivance of Gov. Shamon with the Mexican Government, inasmuch as in case of the annexation of Texas at the present moment, no one will expect this country to pay an indemnity to a quasi hostile power, for any territory to which she may lay claim.

Cast-Iron Stereotype.—Experiments under the superintendence of Herr Dasse, inspector of mines at Ribland, in the Duchy of Brunswick, with a view to make cast iron, as the cheaper and more durable material, applicable to the preparation of stereotype plates, have resulted in the publication of a cast iron stereotype edition of the Bible, published at Nordhausen; the price of which, with marginal readings, is 29 ggr., or 26 cents.

Riot in Staten Island.—We learn from the New York Express, that some of the workmen employed on the house, at N. Brighton, belonging to Mr. Rhodes who had a small balance of under $200 due them from the contractor, but not from the owner, on Saturday or Sunday behaved in a most riotous manner. They took possession of the house, barricaded the entrances, and prevented any other persons from getting in. The Sheriff called out a posse, and finally succeeded in arresting several, one of whom was lodged in jail at Richmond. The others were bailed out.

It appears from the Report of the Chief Topographical Engineer, that there is applicable to the service of improving the navigation of the Ohio below the falls, the Mississippi, the Missouri and Arkansas, for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1845, the sum of $191,440. It is calculated that nearly the whole of the sum will be expended within that time. It is proposed, that an appropriation of $240,000 shall be made for the year ending June 30th, 1846. And this

A WILD GIRL AND WILD MAN.

About a century ago the forest of laux, was so thick, and so little known in its vast extent, that more than one person was lost in its depths. A singular circumstance occurred at that period, which may give an idea of the perfect solitude of its solitude. A young girl, about sixteen or seventeen, was found there in a savage state; she had been a denizen of the shades from the age of seven or eight. All that was known of her was, that she had been left by some other little girls in the woods, having been surprised by the snow. The shepherds who found her conducted her to the hospital of Manon, she never spoke, nor gave any signs of recollecting the past; they gave her grass and vegetables to eat, but she continued to droop, and in a very short time died of grief for the loss of her liberty. About twenty years afterwards a wild man was seen in the same forest; he was very tall and strongly built, hairy like a bear, active as a lizard, and perfectly harmless. His delight was in coursing the sheep and dispersing them—uttering loud peals of laughter at the confusion he created. Sometimes the shepherds sent their dogs after him, but he never suffered them to keep up with him. Nothing was known or traced respecting his history, and he appears to have finished his wild career in the forest; probably he was some child left by accident or design in that savage solitude, where, like Orson, some bear nursed him, but who never found a Valentine to restore him to humanity.—Bearn and the Pyrenee.

WOMAN.—Perhaps a more just and beautiful compliment was never paid to woman than the following from Judge Story:—"To the honor, to the eternal honor of the sex, be it said, that in the path of duty no sacrifice is with them too high or too dear. Nothing is with them impossible, but to shrink from what love, honor, innocence and religion require. The voice of pleasure or of power may pass by unheeded; but the voice of affliction never. The chamber of the sick, the pillow of the dying, the vigils of the dead, the altars of religion, never missed the presence of the sympathies of woman. Timid though she be, and so delicate that the winds of heaven may not too roughly visit her on such occasions she loses all sense of danger, and assumes a preternatural courage which knows not and fears not consequences. Then she displays the undaunted spirit which neither courts difficulties nor evades them; that resignation which neither utters murmurs nor regrets, and that patience in suffering which seems victorious over death itself."

SAW MILL IN A CAVE.—Four miles from Bowling Green, Ky., the traveler passes a perpendicular precipice of about one hundred feet, not twelve feet from the path he travels. As I came up to it I heard a tremendous noise, apparently under ground. I looked down from the dizzy height, and saw men below engaged in some kind of work. Prompted by curiosity I clambered down the rock not far distant, by the aid of stumps and small trees, when lo, I beheld, directly under the road I had crossed, a large flour, and also a saw mill, they both go by the name of CAVE MILL. All the machinery is directly under the rocks, in a spacious and very curious constructed cave. A stream of water runs into the cave, then passes under ground, large enough to drive the works of both mills; and it shows itself next, four miles distant from the place of exit, where I was told, is another flour mill, the works of which are carried on by it.—[Star of the West.]

Dr Wolf has arrived in Persia, broken down in constitution, robbed of every thing he had and with a debt of 6000000 (L. 2600), which he was forced to promise to pay to the infamous Naye Abdol Sumait Khan. Had it not been for the Persian ambassador, he would have been put to death, even after having made that promise. The brother of the Naye was to accompany the doctor to Teheran, and if the money is not paid, he will be obliged to go to prison in Persia. Dr Wolf states, in his letter to Captain Grover, that Lieutenant Wyburd of the Indian navy (who was sent on a secret diplomatic mission to Khiva, in 1835, and has not since been heard of), has been murdered at Bokhara.

The following lamentable accident happened a short time ago near Grindewald, in Switzerland. A poor woman, named Baumann, was crossing a wooden bridge over the Lutichens, with four children, two going before her, a third led by her hand, and the fourth a baby, carried in her arm. While watching the progress of the two eldest, she made a false step, and fell into the torrent with the two younger, who, with their mother, were drowned, for want of assistance, the two eldest remaining two hours crying on the bank, which they had safely reached. At length the three lifeless bodies were found, and carried to the hospital at Grindewald, where an old man, sick in bed, was so struck by the piteous sight, that he died suddenly.

The priests in three Catholic Churches of Dusseldorf have hurried from the pulpit anathemas against Eugene Sue for his attacks on the Jesuits.

From Hayti.—Through the correspondence of the Courier des Etats Unis, dated St. Domingo, Nov. 16th, we learn that Pedro Santana has been nominated President of the Dominican Republic, which appears to have adopted a regular constitution. There were great rejoicings at Santo Domingo, St. Christophe, and other towns upon the announcement of the nomination. The President took the oath of office at a sitting of the Congress on the 12th Nov. The Constitution of the Republic has not yet been published. The Courier's correspondent states, however, that it adopts the boundaries of 1793, and the divisions recognized that year into provinces and communities; and that it accords the amplest civil rights to strangers residing in the Republic, and the rights of citizenship to all present citizens, and to such as shall marry a Dominican woman, or possess agricultural establishments in the Territory. Public rights are placed upon the basis of the Haytian Constitution of 1843, and the Catholic religion declared to be that of the State. The Legislative power is to be exercised by a Congress, composed of fifteen Tribunes and five Counsellors. The first President is elected for eight years. At the expiration of his term the tenure of Executive power is to be for four years. His powers are greater, in most instances, than we give the President of the United States. [Picayune.]

Heavy Loss.—A gentleman in Tennessee agreed, for twenty dollars, to give one dollar for the first electoral vote Gov. Polk should receive over Mr. Clay, and doubling it in geometrical progression for the majority of the electoral college. The sum lost amounts to $30,893,457,407,430,103,221.

The other day a woman was suddenly, but safely delivered of a fine boy, at the entrance of the Bank of England, Bristol. The bank has never before had such a deposit, and not knowing what to do with it, they had mother and child conveyed to the hospital, where both are going on favorably. Such are the transitions of life—born amidst gold, reared amongst paupers. The little fellow is to be called Croesus, and it is to be hoped the Governor and company will stand sponsors.

TWO STORES.

DAVID D. YEARSLEY has opened two Stores, one in the building lately occupied by Gen. Joseph Smith as a store, on Water street, the other on Mulholland street, a little east of the Temple, the Keystone Store, where he will accommodate his friends and the public, with Dry Goods and Groceries to their hearts desire. A quick "pie" being better than a slow "bit,"—he means to sell cheap for cash and produce.

One man can not do everything, nor have everything, but he means, with two stores to do a double business, and keep a good assortment of Crockery and Hardware also.

Being fond of company he wishes all to call and see.

ANOTHER SECT.

The New York Herald, makes the annexed comments; and giving also the extract, &c. It is all well enough—sects, societies, and socialist, together with religious speculators; political gamblers, and black-mail world's men, but when Bennett of the Herald logged into the account, Mormonism, like Winfield's negro, he dirtied his new coat for nothing!

HIGHLY INTERESTING FROM SKENEATELES.

AN INFIDEL COMMUNITY ORGANIZED.

We have received several copies of a strange journal, issued at Mottville, Oneida county, New York, by a new social organization, who call themselves the "Skeneateles Community."

This community is founded on open and avowed infidel principles—opposition to Christianity and all other religions—for they look upon Christ and Moses as on the same level with Mahomet and Buddha. They muster nearly one hundred persons of both sexes—occupying and cultivating a farm of several hundred acres, situated on the shores of the lovely lake of Skeneateles, in Oneida county, in western New York. They publish a journal weekly, called the Communist, in which appear all their views, doctrines, and movements.

Annexed we give a number of most strange and singular extracts, exhibiting their views and actions.

This community had its origin in the efforts of John A. Collins, who is a believer in this new system of socialism, derived partly from Fourier, and other socialists in Europe. These people form an isolated community among themselves. They marry and are given in marriage—but only as long as they see fit—they have all property in common—and express, openly every opinion in religion, or philosophy, that they believe to be true.

This is truly infidelity in a state of organization—and, during the next few years, many new theories, and new movements will be attempted all over the country. Mormonism and Millerism are too ignorant, and too vulgar for the times. The Skeneateles formation is the most startling of all.

LOVE—MARRIAGE.

Love, in the most comprehensive sense of the term, is that universal good will which flows out in acts of kindness towards all that come within the sphere of its influence. In a restricted sense, it denotes the attachment which is felt between two persons of the different sexes, beyond mere friendship. This more restricted meaning of the word has also two different senses: sometimes to designate that strong and permanent affection which steadily seeks the good of its object, at other times, it signifies no more than the transitory attachment arising from mere animal desire. In this last and lowest sense of the term, love can be considered no more than a blind instinct, a selfish propensity.

That persons may act up to their duty in the marriage relation, weak, erring nature stands in need of every possible guard. Thus from time immemorial, we have heard of the plighted faith between lovers, and its solemnization in the presence of those whom they most venerate. I may be told that it is absurd to promise to love; because our affections are not always in our power. With all due deference to the example of those who have gone before me, I must say, that the pledge of "loving till death parts" the affianced pair, seems susceptible of improvement. Love, it is true, has its appropriate objects. We naturally love that which is lovely. So far as an object is presented to the mind in the light of a hateful one, we cannot love it. But love is partially under the control of the will. One of the parties in married life has it in his or her power to cherish or to obliterate the feelings of love, according as their attention is habitually turned towards the excellencies or the faults of the others. It is, to a very great extent at least, in one's power to restore harmony where it has been interrupted, by overcoming evil with good. This is the grand panacea which, if perseveringly applied, is destined to cure the moral maladies that have so long poisoned the foundations of domestic, as well as every other department of human life. A promise between the affianced parties to treat each other with kindness and fidelity till death parts them, is not liable to the above objection. This requires nothing more than the will of one party to fulfil it. I can treat my worst enemy with kindness, though his own behavior might be so base as to leave little room for either love or respect. I can show him my self-respect, and the example that is due to all around me by acting up to every honorable engagement, though he may have wholly swerved from them. There is one species of slavery that is not accounted dishonorable, viz: that of being a slave to one's word. At least, if any one deems it a dishonor, it has not been my misfortune to be acquainted with him, and to learn his character in that respect.

The length of my residence in the community has been a year. My opportunities for observation have been as good perhaps, as those of any one in it. During that time my attention has been habitually, and anxiously directed to whatever in manners and character seemed calculated, to strengthen society. I will now state a few general facts in relation to the subject before us, leaving others to draw their own inferences. For the past year there has been on an average, a dozen families of married persons residing here. I can safely say that no exhibitions of unkindness have been made in my presence between a man and his wife in any of its forms—I am satisfied that scarcely any thing of the kind has occurred at this place. The average number of old and young during the year would fall between sixty and seventy. With the single persons I have become well acquainted. The general behaviour of the young of both sexes is marked by decorum. Have never heard an obscene song sung here—scarcely any expression of double entendre. The songs used among a people are allowed to furnish the best indices of character. Those commonly sung here, partake of the spirit of the various moral enterprises in which the generality of its members have been engaged, as the temperance, antislavery, dietetic, and above all, the social reform. These are occasionally interspersed with others of the narrative, descriptive, or sentimental kind. There is scarcely any thing in vogue of the light, the frivolous, and the low: such for instance as the Jim Crow songs.

In dress there is a prevalent taste for plainness among our females as well as others; much more than in common society. Though prior to our assemblage at this place, some of us, at times, attended vanity fair, the fondness of finery is fast dying away.

One more view may be taken of manners here, which from its generality may be considered rather the expression of opinion, than the assertion of general facts;—and that is, a comparison of the indications of character here with those of the Church. As the Church verily think they do God service, by saying hard things of us, there is little danger of our conceding too much in their favor. But there is no doubt in my mind, that so far as licentiousness is concerned, the church is much more free from it than the common mass of society;—the world around them. In speaking of the Church, reference is had in my mind to that with which I have been chiefly acquainted from my infancy, the various Protestant sects of New England, and New York.

1st. So far as dress is indicative of modesty, the example here is in advance of the church.

2nd. In decorum of conversation, we are at least on a par with them.

3d. In the use of the combined powers of Music and Poetry for moral effect, we have the advantage.

4th. With regard to diet as evidence of moral purity, the advantage is all on the side of manners here, as none of the numerous Churches has as a Church, issued its manifesto against the use of meat, grease, tea, coffee and the insidious train of condiments, stimulants, and narcotics, but appear contented under their bondage in Egypt, provided they can have the use of its flesh-pots.

R. S. ORVIS.

LATER FROM MEXICO.

Santa Anna on his march to the Capitol—propositions from the acting government for a parley refused—Paredes in his rear—Texas—Duff Green, and the President.

We are under many obligations to the officers of the J. M. White, for papers sent to us in advance of her arrival, from the month of the Ohio. These papers are of the 15th, and furnish Mexican and Texas news of great interest. Unfortunately for us, the papers of the 14th were not sent, containing more detailed accounts of the news. We give such as we have, expecting to be put in possession of the missing papers by the first arrival. The following article is from the Picayune of the 15th:

Santa Anna—Mexico.—After pondering carefully over the papers received in this city on Monday from Mexico, some additional gleanings from which will be found in another column, it must be confessed that it is as difficult to form a positive opinion upon the result of the war now waged there, as it was when we had but glanced at some scattering files. When one regards the enormous numerical superiority of the party supporting the acting government over the forces of Santa Anna; when he considers how simultaneously, and unanimously, and apparently without preconcert, the Departments have declared against him; it would appear impossible that the tyrant should maintain his position for a day. He has no point upon which to fall back in case of defeat; he controls not a foot of territory save that occupied by his armed forces; and what is of far more consequence, the sinews of war, all the revenues of the country, are at the disposal of his foes. From the Pacific coast of Mexico, Gen. Paredes commands all the revenues which may accrue from the customs. On the Gulf Vera Cruz, Tampico and Matamoros are subservient to the administration of Gen. Harrison, and from these sources of supply Santa Anna can derive no support. It may be recalled that in one of the former civil convulsions of Mexico, this single advantage of controlling the revenues of the nation was one great cause which gave Santa Anna his ascendancy over Bustamante, whose army in abandoning him, were in a great measure influenced by his inability to pay them.

Viewed in these various aspects, the position of the arrogant dictator, who for years has lorded it over this beautiful land with the wilfulness of an eastern satrap, would seem utterly desperate. But he puts the boldest front upon the matter; he even boasts his enemies, and makes them tremble in their shoes at the mere rumor of his approach. We cannot know what is his present numerical force; but it is manifest that the tyrant is not startled at the desertion of Corazar, who has taken with him a command of over three thousand men. He has marched down upon the capital, and the acting President of the Republic, and the Commander-in-chief of the forces under Congress, hold parley with him. They intend him to spare the effusion of blood, and guaranteeing his personal safety, conjure him to yield himself to the judgement of Congress upon his acts. He replies disdainfully, and insists that Herrera shall at once surrender to him his proper authority, and he backs his demand by pointing to the army which supports him. In the meantime, Herrera and Bravo are preparing for a protracted and vigorous siege of the city; they are throwing obstructions in the path of the usurper; they are calling upon the nation; upon the citizens, and upon the army; as late as the 24th of December, to unite to resist the advance of Santa Anna. But this may be but a patriotic and commendable desire to prevent unnecessary slaughter, while Santa Anna's bolder course may have been dictated by a sense of the desperate extremity in which he is placed. This is the view taken of it by the most intelligent of the editors of the capital, who write of his audacity as springing from an excess of frenzy amounting almost to insanity. It will be borne in mind too, that Paredes is advancing from Jalisco by forced marches, for the protection of the capital, at the head of a strong force. It may be that the general's shut up in Mexico, await but his arrival to begin the offensive. If they are true to each other and the Government, and their troops stand by them, we see not how Santa Anna can save himself from destruction upon the first effort which may be made to overwhelm him. But if they stand still and give him an opportunity to tamper with the soldiery, and with some leading officers who have shown themselves more solicitous of personal aggrandizement than the welfare of their country it will go hard if he does not yet retrieve the fortunes of the day. Still, his prospects appear desperate indeed. In no other country than Mexico could he hold out for an hour; nor should we be surprised to hear by the next arrival, that he had been ignominiously shot in the capital. We doubt if he possesses the magnanimity to yield to his fate, so far as to avoid the effusion of blood by arrogating voluntarily his assumed powers, and we feel assured that should he triumph, his victory will be most sanguinary and disastrous in its results. We hope for better things, and feel confident, even should he regain possession of the city, that he cannot hold his power long. The inhabitants of Mexico cannot and will not live under such grievous misrule.

Since our last, more of our private correspondence has reached us, and we have had time to run over all our exchanges. We do not find however, in either, much to lay before the reader. It is quite certain that down to the 23rd of December no action had taken place; that the leaders of the Government were using every effort to prevent a final recourse to a conflict of arms; and that Santa Anna maintained as bold a front as if he were at the head of a large and well-appointed army. In the city of Vera Cruz, from which we have most copious intelligence, the opinion is unanimous that the downfall of Santa Anna is beyond question; but by the citizens of that town it would seem that he was hated more cordially than in any other part of the country.

On the 1st inst. a reinforcement of 1000 men were expected daily in Vera Cruz from Campeche, which would swell the force of regulars and militia collected there to oppose the advance of Santa Anna, to upwards of four thousand men.

It was known in Mexico on the 22d of December, that Gen. Paredes commenced his march on the 11th inst. from Guadalupe, to attack Santa Anna. It was supposed that he would be at Guadalupe by the 20th at the head of 5000 men. On the 25th, news was received in Mexico that he was on his march to aid the troops of the capital; and his troops, it was thought, would number at least six thousand from the reinforcements he would receive while on the route. He was proceeding by forced marches.

Gen. Bravo entered the capital on the 22d. He was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the army and entrusted with the defence of the city the day following and two days subsequently 2500 troops of the division he had previously commanded, arrived in the city.

The reception of Gen. Bravo was marked by every expression of enthusiasm. Crowds went to meet him, and he was escorted to his quarters by a dense column of citizens.

A son of Santa Anna was made prisoner near Puebla on the 16th of December, while endeavoring to escape from that city, accompanied by four dragoons. One of his sons has been represented as a young man of remarkable cleverness, but in his stature he is almost a dwarf, and although possessing much talent, is terribly deformed. It may be that this is the same son. He was arrested by some guards attached to the tobacco excise.

The extreme rancor of the Mexican press to Santa Anna, is one of the most striking features in the impressions we gather from the late news. It shows how debased the conductors of that press must have been, or how severe the censorship exercised by the tyrant in the day of his power, for until now there were but a few papers in the country, which could find themes so grateful as to sound the praises of the well-deserving of his country.

The consideration which the officials of the Acting Government, even after the revolution of the 6th of December, showed towards Santa Anna in all their communications with him, is conspicuous; from the letter of the 7th of December, from the Secretary of War, depriving him of his command, and devolving it upon Cortazar; down to Gen. Herrera's letter of the 27th of December. In this particular, the courtesy observed towards him by the Government is utterly at variance with the fierce and sanguinary denunciations of the press.

Gen. Ignacio Basadre, the ex-Minister of War, the principal instigator of the decree of the 29th of November, suspending the sessions of Congress—which was the pretext for all the demonstrations against Santa Anna in the capital—was arrested at Tula and taken back to Mexico.

Gen. D. Melchor Muzquiz, one of the most illustrious champions of Mexican Independence, died at the capital on the 14th of December.

Extract of a letter dated at Mexico, December 27th, 1844:

"The city is strongly fortified; all the youth of Mexico have volunteered as common soldiers to defend the city. This morning the government received news that Tabasco had pronounced, and that Arista is marching rapidly at the head of his troops to aid this city. Santa Anna is now at three leagues distance, and it is now at all it will be this evening or to-morrow—though this appears to me impossible, as he has not more than 4,000 men, against a force of more than 20,000. Santa Anna is closely followed by Paredes and Galindo, with 4,000 men, who are continually harassing his rear. It is the opinion of most persons here, that there will not be a single shot fired, and that Santa Anna will be obliged to surrender at discretion. The Chambers have just issued a proclamation declaring the city of Mexico to be under martial law, and stating that the first shot Santa Anna fires, he will be declared an outlaw."

Yucatan.—A letter dated at Merida, December 30th, states that a few evenings previous an attempt had been made, by the populace, to raise an insurrectionary movement against the present Governor of that department, (Jose Ybarbo Lopez) and to declare in favor of Gen. Yman. The attempt was promptly put down.

From the Western Journal.

Weston—Its Trade, Growth and Prospects.—Weston we understand, was first laid out in 1838; and now is a handsomely built town, with a population of about a thousand, embracing all trades and professions. That its trade is large is not to be wondered at, when it is known that it is in the heart of a country unsurpassed in fertility, and improving beyond precedent. Platte county is second only to Boone and St. Louis in wealth and population, according to a late census; and we are assured that, at this time, it is, in population, only behind St. Louis. Weston is the principal shipping point in the county, and much the largest town. The steamboat arrivals, the past season were one hundred and thirty-two, commencing in February and ending in November, with heavy freights to and from the place, as well as seen by the amount of its exports and imports, certified to by our merchants; and had the past season been one of abundance with the farmers, the trade and business would have been augmented in proportion; as it was, the crops on the bottoms were destroyed by high water, and throughout the country they were greatly below an average. That a town of this magnitude should grow up in seven years is not more surprising than that Platte county should now have a population a little short of 20,000.

Recent estimates of its commerce, the past year furnish data by which it will be seen that it already, in the amount of its business, takes rank with much larger and much older places.

Exports.—The exports in the aggregate the past year, consisting of hemp, tobacco, wheat, &c., is over $450,000.

Imports.—During the same time, the merchants have imported, in goods, &c., $300,000.

This, it will be observed, is only the exports and imports which passed through the hands of the merchants; there being a large amount, not included, that passed through other hands.

We have 16 dry goods houses, 8 commission houses, 2 drug stores, 10 family and other groceries, 2 tin shops, 1 brewery, and mechanics and tradesmen of every description.

There is one other thing which deserves mention, from its importance: we allude to the expenditure of about $4,000 for the improvement of the wharf, which is now, certainly the finest on the river, and shows a commendable public spirit.

Affair of Honor.—A hostile meeting was had between Mr. Thos. Butler King and Mr. Chas. Spalding, on Monday, the 6th instant, at Amelia Island. Weapons, pistols—distance, ten paces. Two shots were passed without effect, when, on the intervention of friends, the affair was adjusted, and the parties exchanged friendly salutations. The difficulty originated from some circumstance connected with the recent canvass of the two gentlemen while candidates for Congress before the people of this district. We refrain from comments, and only mention this satisfactory settlement of the matter because there has been considerable excitement in regard to it in the public mind, and because we feel assured that the announcement will cause much real pleasure among the friends of both the gentlemen.—[Savannah Republican.]

The Bell of Boston.—Great crowds were collected a few days since in Bowdoin Square, Boston, to witness the hanging of the magnificent new bell prepared for the belfry of Rev Mr. Cushman's Church. The bell is the largest one in New England, weighs 4000 lbs.—six hundred more than the one on Brattle street Church—and was cast at the Foundry of Hooper & Co., in that city. It is said to be a remarkably fine toned instrument.

Education.—The following beautiful paragraph is from an article in Fraser's Magazine:

"Education does not commence with the alphabet. It begins with a mother's look—with a father's nod of approbation or sign of reproof—with a sister's gentle pressure, or a brother's noble act of forbearance—with handfuls of flowers in green daisy meadows—with birds admitted but not touched—with creeping ants and almost imperceptible emulsi—with humming bees and glass bee hives—with pleasant walks and shady lanes—with thoughts directed in sweet and kindly tones and works, to nature, to beauty, to acts of benevolence, to deeds of virtue, and to the source of all good, to God himself.

"William," said a carpenter to his apprentice, "I'm going away to day, and want you to grind all the tools."

"Yes, sir."

The carpenter came home at night.

"William, have you ground all the tools right sharp?"

"All but the handsaw," said Bill, "I could not get quite all the gaps out of that."

Discovery of a vast Catacomb.—The Austrian Ambassador, M. Prokesch, and Professor Ross, in exploring the island of Miros, have discovered a vast catacomb, containing at least a thousand tombs cut in the volcanic tufa. The walls of this subterranean cemetery are covered with Greek and Roman inscriptions of from the second to the sixth century. Most part of the tombs themselves have been opened and are empty. This was done, no doubt, by the barbarians of the north, who in the middle ages destroyed so many Hellenic monuments, respecting the dwelling places of the dead as little as those of the living.—[Boston Transcript.]

Mortality among the Fish.—The shores of Long Island, New Jersey and Delaware, are lined with millions of dead fish while thousands are found floating in every direction. The cause is yet unknown. It has been noticed that the water is discolored and looks blacker than the ordinary sea water, in the infected district, which reaches from near the east end of Long Island to the cape of Virginia. Immediately on entering the brown water, the fish are seized with convulsions, rise to the surface, and die in a few minutes.

Popularity was never better exemplified than in the case of a Dutch Governor of New York. "I vas," said he, "the most popular Governor New York ever has. I goes into office mit a very larsh maschorties and I gess out mit a very larsh maschorties. I always does tings mit very larsh maschorties."

The Mississippi Annual Conference recently met at Port Gibson, and adjourned on the 20th ult. Conference sends delegates to the Convention which meets in Louisville, Ky., on the 1st of May, 1845, to organize a Southern Church.—[The Arkansas Conference has also decided unanimously in favor of a division of the Church.]

We learn from the Albany Daily Advertiser that a serious riot occurred at Geneva, New York, on Christmas night, caused by an attack made, as the Geneva Courier says, by a gang of Irishmen, armed with clubs, axes and crowbars, upon three men by the names of Lacey, Wait and Sessions. Lacey was severely, and it is feared fatally, injured, and now lies in a critical state. Seven of the rioters have been committed for further examination.

Suspension.—A lady residing in the interior of Kentucky, now on the side of 80, who is living with her husband and in the enjoyment of good health, being so enamored with the character of Mr. Clay, that, in the event of his defeat, she protested that she would have no more children to bear the curse of Polk misrule.

Rev Charles T. Torrey, convicted at Baltimore, of the abduction of slaves, had received his sentence. On the first indictment, he is to be confined in the penitentiary, from December 28th, 1844, to 2d of April, 1847. On the second indictment, until 2d of April, 1849. On his third indictment, until 2d of April, 1851. A very large number of persons were in attendance, to hear the sentence, and at the request of the prisoner, it was pronounced privately.

Immense Fortune.—William, of Georgetown, British Guiana, has learned that he is heir to a fortune of one million and half pounds—about seven million of dollars—deposited in the Bank of Amsterdam, Holland, which was deposited by his uncle fifty years ago. He knew that he was the heir, but had lost the means of claiming the property, as well as all knowledge of the Bank in which it had been deposited. He was already in considerable circumstances, the reward of his industry as an adventurer in British Guiana.

The impunity with which assassination is committed in Paris, appears almost incredible. The Rue de Rocher, which on Tuesday last was the scene of a tremendous fire, and was on Wednesday the theatre of a most audacious murder. Thomas W. Dorr.—Messrs. Turner and Burgess held their third and last interview of two and a half hours with Gov. Dorr on Saturday last. The father of Gov. Dorr, in company with one of the inspectors and the warden, was permitted to see him on the 22d of August last. His father and mother visited him on the 19th of December last. The father has had that permission twice since that time. These are the only visits which have been permitted since his commitment on the 27th of June, 1844. The door is now again closed.

Gov. Dorr has authorized his counsel, Messrs. Turner and Burgess, to take the necessary steps for suing out a writ of error from the supreme court of the U. States, and to associate with themselves such others as counsel as they may deem expedient; to whose entire management, as heretofore, his case is confided. Preliminary steps for further proceedings have already been taken. A petition for a writ of error has received the signature of Gov. Dorr.

Although Gov. Dorr is much confined in body by his confinement, he sustains himself with an equal mind under all the inflictions of his enemies.

FROM THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Here I am, among Messieurs (the Savages of the Hawaiian Islands); the fellows who killed Captain Cook and are part of his crew; the reformed cannibals, a thousand times more gentle than your reformed gamblers and reformed drunkards. Imagine what a triumph to the cause of religion and sound morals, to bring a race of men to relish an honest piece of surlin, in preference to a slice of a strapping fellow a posteriori, done brown on the coals. I left you my old friend, on the Battery, and here am I, after having doubled Cape Horn, settled down a subject of the king of the Congo Islands—keeping quite a snug store of tea, sugar, soap and candles, and likely to do well. I send you a file of the Poly-nesian, a journal published here, and partly or secretly edited by Mr. Commissioner Brown, the old reporter of the Boston Atlas, quite a useful fellow in his way, and a great favorite of the king. By the way, I think the Hon. Secretary of State, G. P. Judd, is a Stonington man—where on earth will not our Yankee brethren go for a gleam of good luck—well, I like the clear, transparent air of this climate—living cheap and the people becoming pious and sober. They have given up eating little babies as we do sucking pigs, and I am in hopes that by proper discipline, we may work these fellows into shape. I enclose you an extract from the journal giving an account of the arrival of the King, and a funny display it was among the copper-colored gentry, but this is the age of good reforms.

His Majesty had been expected for some days previous to the 30th, but the vessel on board of which he had embarked with his suite from Lihaina, did not come in sight until nine o'clock. A. M. Tuesday, when the firing of a gun, and the hoisting of the large Hawaiian ensign, on the battery on Punch-bowl Hill, announced the fact. His Excellency, Governor Kekunua immediately left the harbor in his new and beautiful barge to meet his majesty. At twelve o'clock, a little squadron, consisting of the schooner Hoikaka of Pulu, Victoria, and the new vessel recently built at Hawaii, came abreast of the town, the salute of twenty-one guns was fired on Punch-bowl Hill. Soon after, the vessels with a fair breeze, entered the harbor, and his majesty and suite embarked in the barge for the shore, the Hawaiian flag flying in the stern, and the royal standard at the bow. In passing the United States ship, Warren, her yards were manned and a royal salute fired, both of which attracted attention for the beautiful precision with which they were executed. His Majesty's household troops, 150 strong, and a company from the fort, all 350 muskets, were drawn up at the landing to receive him. The troops looked well, were neatly accoutred, and their officers made quite a showy appearance in their new uniforms. His Majesty stepped ashore amid the music of the band, and the roar of the cannons from the water battery, and with the Queen on his arm, attended by the Hon. Secretary of State, G. P. Judd, their Excellencies the Governors of Oahu and Maui; the high chiefs, A. Paki, C. Kanahia, and Col. J. Williams, under escort of the military, proceeded to Mauna Kikila, the building fitted for his Majesty's service while he remains in town. A large concourse of people were assembled to witness the royal cortege.

Her Royal Highness the Premier, with the ladies of her court, soon after landed from the Palau, and were received by the military under arms. Mauna Kikila, the band playing the wai 'God save the King.' His Majesty, during the remainder of the morning, was waited upon by the officers of his government and of the troops. The royal party were in excellent health and spirits. Royal audience was given at eight o'clock in the evening to the representatives of foreign powers, and the residents generally, who were received by their Majesties the King and Queen, Her Royal Highness the Premier, and the ladies and gentlemen of the court. The saloon was illuminated for the audience, and the friends of the Honolulu, this friendly assemblage of all parties, with the glitter of uniforms and the rich and tasteful dresses, both of the Hawaiian ladies and foreign residents, rendered the spectacle both novel and pleasing.

We cannot refrain from noticing the good taste displayed by the captains of the English vessels, William Ackers and Cacicine, in their decorations of their respective ships on this occasion. The other vessels also wore their ensigns and signals, and the harbor presented a lively appearance.

The protraction of the festival during the remainder of this week compels us to defer a description of the festivities until our next, when we shall be enabled to give the account in full.

A Panther killed by a Girl.—The Orange (Texas) paper gives the following account, which occurred near Douglas, Nacogdoches county:

A panther came into a house in which there was no person but a young lady and her little brother. The young lady, being very busy attending to her little household affairs, did not see the panther until he had got entirely into the house; but as soon as she discovered him, she called to her little brother to bring her the axe. After waiting some time for this weapon, (still holding on to the panther,) the young lady then told her brother to bring her the smoothing iron, with which she soon succeeded in putting the intruder to death. The screams, during the encounter of the heroine, were heard by some of the neighbors, who went immediately to learn the cause; but when they arrived, they found her the conqueror, and viewing with much composure the lifeless body of her frightful intruder.

Disolution of the Union.—The Abolitionists of the east are again demanding the immediate abolition of slavery in the southern states, or else a dissolution of the Union. A petition, calling for a national convention to extirpate slavery, or dissolve the Union with the southern States, has been circulated all over Massachusetts for some time past, and is now published in the Boston Liberator. (Mr. Garrison's paper) it will probably be brought before Congress in a few days.

First Come First Served.—After the ball at Birkenhead, on the occasion of laying the first stone of the new docks, there was a general scramble for the hats, bonnets, cloaks, and great coats. It seems that the waiters had helped themselves rather too freely to champagne, and feeling their incapacity to fulfil their duties, had gone home at an early hour, to sleep off the fumes of Mead. The consequence was, that when the ball was over, as the waiters had taken the tickets with them, it became a very difficult matter to distribute the garments to those who came with their duplicates to redeem them. In the utter despair of a strict distribution, the whole of the articles left in pledge were brought out and thrown in a heap into the middle of the room. Every person fell to, and helped himself. Gentlemen got four-and-nines for real beavers, and many a lawyer, who came with a Chesterfield, was obliged to walk home with a Wrapsal. One gentleman was compelled to put on a Dunstable bonnet and a plaid shawl, and when he got home, was refused admittance by his own wife. But the most melancholy case was that of an old lady, who, addy-shrak and to walk to her hotel in a dry Macintosh, and an oil skin sou'wester. The company must have felt to a ticket, that if property has its rights, it has its losses too, when taken to an evening party. The inquiries after hats, cloaks, and tippets, have been very numerous ever since.

From No. 1's Messenger.

The Priesthood.—A friend sent us the following queries—

1st. Was the High Priest of the temple allowed to drink?

2nd. What was the punishment for a breach of duty and propriety, and was any difference made between a learned and an illiterate priest?

The High Priest held his office for life and in peculiar privileges and honors was next to the King; the minor priests being in the arctic line was an hereditary office, and consequently strong legal enactments were required to preserve the purity of worship. The High Priest was to be without personal blemish of any kind, was accounted the most holy and to excel all his brethren in comeliness, learning and accomplishments; he was the mediator between God and the people, and had to make atonement for the sins of the whole nation. He was amenable to the law for offences as others; might be deposed and put to death for sin, for no man was above the laws. In the day time he remained in the temple, in a chamber called the parlor of the High Priest, in the evening he returned to his private residence where he remained with his family. He paid no visits excepting to the house of mourning. Never conversed with the community—never went to the public high—he could not be compelled to give testimony in court, and was surrounded with all kinds of guards and checks to sustain the reverence due to the sanctity of his character.

Priests were prohibited drinking wine or any strong liquors during the time they were officiating at the altar. At other times they were permitted to drink wine, and it was considered no violation of the law if they drank no more than one fourth part of a log, which contained an egg shell and a half, and if they exceeded that measure they were profaned; but if a priest was intoxicated with any kind of liquor during his service it did not invalidate his ministrations, nor was he to be put to death, but was to be scourged. Wine never was to be drunk in the day time.

A difference was made between a learned and unlearned priest, but as they were all sacerdotal, being of the seed of Aaron, they could not be deposed for ignorance, but an oblation was never given to an ignorant priest and when it was their turn to minister at the altar proper instruction was given. The laws respecting the priesthood of the temple, if faithfully carried out, rendered them as pure as men possibly could be on earth—and great profit may be derived in the present age in studying and enforcing those laws by all who are admitted to clerical orders—they are all admirable in wisdom, caution and propriety.

U. S. Court.—Erickson's propellers.—Important decision.—In the United States court setting in New York, the jury have decided the propeller of Mr. Erickson to be an invasion of the patent of John B. Emerson, who is thus declared to be the original inventor. A verdict was given for Mr. Emerson for $3,575; stated to be the largest amount of damages ever rendered in that court in a patent suit. The defendants are engine builders in New York, engaged largely in the manufacture of the wheel, known as the Erickson propeller.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 5, 1845.

THE WATERS CURSED.

In another column is an account of the destruction of fish on the coast, from Long Island to the shores of Virginia. This is all according to the prophecies of John the revelator and Joseph the seer. The waters were blessed in former days, and cursed in the last days; and when the angels begin to be poured out, the people, unless they repent, will be cursed too, with a sore vexation.

We have just seen a communication from a gentleman of high respectability in this State; written to a gentleman of this city, relative to our policy as a people which present to us rather a novel appearance.

The gentleman proposes that in consequence of the bad feeling, which has existed between the inhabitants of the surrounding country, and the inhabitants of the city of Nauvoo, to avoid collision and future difficulty between the parties, he would recommend to us that we petition Congress to lay us off a portion of territory, where we should have the privilege of making our own laws; subject however to the constitution and laws of the United States, and in many respects similar to a territorial government; that we should have ten years to pay for the land unless Congress should in consideration of our persecutions as a recompense in part for our losses, give us a free deed of it. He makes many remarks relative to our internal regulations which we cannot now particularise. He further recommends us to interest the legislature of this State in our behalf, and also to get up petitions to be signed by the inhabitants of the surrounding country, who he doubts not will readily aid us in our designs. The document is ably written; it shows great research, and forethought and reflects great credit on the writer. The gentleman states that he has shown his views to several of his friends, who entirely coincide with him in his views.

The gentleman who received the communication does not feel himself authorized to have it published; but has written to his correspondent for that privilege, it granted, we shall take pleasure in laying it before our readers.

It is not proposed to remove us from Nauvoo but for many to go as we think proper.

NEIBAUR'S MATCHES.

A sample of Nauvoo matches was handed us the other day, which, whether they be called percussion, touch, friction, reaction or locomoco, had lucifer enough in them, to catch fire almost as quick as lightning. We say go ahead with the matches, but beware how you handle them, lest you inflame their luciferation.

Osprey.—We forgot to say last week that the steamer Osprey, which had lain at Montrose, opposite this city for some time, left her moorings for St. Louis, on the 28th ult.

If weather and water permits, we shall expect her to ply as usual, as a regular packet, touching at Nauvoo, weekly and punctually.

ANECDOTE.

Two travellers regulating on stories, one said I saw a guide board in Ohio, on the right hand side of the way with a hand pointing—

M. 63 Aguat-huan hguat-hguap-hguaw To which the other replied, he saw a sign in a hamlet in Illinois, which read: 'Close your eyes and men dead hear.'

It must have been a tailor's sign.

THE WEATHER.

Since our last, the weather has chopped round as ———— as the cold chills. The wind, (W. N. W.) is as keen as a razor; the ice runs something like the beginning of winter, and people out of doors show strong symptoms of a cold snap.

LAW AND GOSPEL.

It would be of great benefit to the church, and many times, save the saints money and trouble, if the Elders, through the aid of the churches abroad, could furnish the 'Twelve' at Nauvoo, with the latest Revised Statutes of each State and Territory. (Prophet please copy.)

THE LAKE OF SODOM, OR DEAD SEA.

This mysterious water was anciently called the 'Sea of the Plain,' from its being situated in the great plain of Jordan; and the Salt Sea, from the extreme saltiness of its waters;

the East Sea, because it lay eastward of Judea, and in contradiction from the West, or Mediterranean Sea. It is designated by Josephus and the Greek and Roman writers, Lacus Asphaltites, that is, the bituminous lake, on account of the vast quantity of bitumen with which its waters are impregnated. Its more frequent modern appellation is, the Dead Sea, from a tradition that no living creature can live in the vicinity of its saline and sulphurous waters. This has been disproved by the testimony of several modern travellers, particularly Maundrell, Chateaubriand, and Stephens. This lake, which is about seventy miles long, and from ten to twenty broad, occupies the southern extremity of the Valley of Jordan, and covers what was once the Valley of Siddim, a rich and fertile valley, in which stood five cities commonly called the cities of the plain, Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboim, and Zoar, the first four of which were destroyed by fire, while the latter was preserved at the intercession of Lot. This mysterious lake is described as a sea of molten lead, bounded on either side by a range of lofty and barren mountains. A perpetual silence hangs over it; not a wave or ripple disturbs its surface; its shores are seldom traversed by any footsteps of the wild Arab, not a boat of vessel of any description has ever been known to cross it from the time it engulfed the guilty cities of the plain to the present day; not a bird builds its nest or pours forth its strains of melody within the precincts of this doleful region, and a few dry and stunted shrubs are the only vestiges of vegetation to be seen in its vicinity. Fannist's Survey of the Holy Land.

Who can read the foregoing, without thinking that hell is in the midst of the earth? But, says the learned clergy, hell, like heaven, is 'beyond the bounds of time and space.' In reply let us observe, that is an opinion without proof, whereas Moses says: 'For a fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains.'

Sure enough 'hell' is in the midst of the earth, and when Sodom and Gomorrah were destroyed they sunk down to hell, and the water covered up the unhallowed spot. Jude knew this when he wrote:

'Even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them in like manner, giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.'

Nor is it less apparent that Ezekiel was ignorant of the location of hell, when he was relating the great return of Jacob from his captivity, and Sodom and other rebellious cities, or churches, from their captivity in hell, when he left such marvellous prophecies as this:

'When I shall bring again their captivity, the captivity of Sodom and her daughters, and the captivity of Samaria and her daughters, then will I bring again the captivity of the captives in the midst of them:

'That thou mayest hear thine own shame, and mayest be confounded in all that thou hast done, in that thou art comforted unto them.'

'When thy sisters, Sodom and her daughters, shall return to the former estate, and Samaria and her daughters shall return to their former estate, then thou and thy daughters shall return to your former estate.'

Restoration! what will the sectarian world do when 'hell delivers up her dead?' and the sea delivers up her dead and all are judged according to their works? Surely only will we see the cross of Christ, and Calvary jail, as well as some other notorious places.

No wonder we have earthquakes, hot springs and convulsions in the earth; if the damned spirits of six thousand years, ante-diluvians, Sodomites, Egyptians, apostates, officers, and mobbers of Babylon, which have gone down into the pit quickly, act like their fellow servants of this generation! No wonder the earth groans and is in pain to be delivered as saith the prophet. But we will stop for the wisdom of God is past finding out. 'Inhabitant in the sea,' in the earth, and under the earth; prisons for disobedient spirits in the regions of space, and 'outer darkness' prepared for hypocrites, where they can weep, and wail, and gnash their teeth, after they receive the angel's resurrection!

The mystery of God!—Towns covered up with lakes; and cities hid with seas; and dead a person, and hell a person, and both now reigning in the midst of their dark abodes; and finally will ride upon the earth on pale horses with power, and kill and starve the wicked to recruit their dominions; and then after all yield in a just judgment and go into the lake which burns with fire and brimstone!

COMMUNICATIONS.

BR. TAYLOR.—Sir: Will you please to give place to a few lines in the Neighbor and Times and Seasons?

I observe in the New York Prophet, a hint to the Elders, concerning the circulation of our valuable periodicals. Why is it, they ask, that there is no more interest manifested among the Elders in enlisting support or subscription for our periodicals?

For one I will answer the question. While I have been preaching abroad in the world from place to place, the question being asked of me so many times by the saints: Why do not my papers come? I sent the moneys long ago to pay my subscription for the year, and have received but two or three numbers. Why is it that I do not get them? My reply has been: I am, then, that the Post Office Department is, as the Indian said of the white man, very unskillful. Realizing the very few that has been received by our brethren abroad, in proportion to the many that have been mailed at our establishments, my heart has failed, and I have not had courage to ask men to pay their money; fearing they would never get their papers. But this difficulty, we trust, will soon be obviated.

For the Neighbor.

A FABLE.

Once upon a time, a few eagles being invited by the hawks, ravens, owls and turkey buzzards, inhabiting a plain by the side of a great mountain, to partake of the common privilege to hunt for a living with them; accepted; and these carnivorous birds, feeling themselves greatly honored by the company of eagles, in a council of ornithomaney, granted a writ of freedom while there should be day to hunt, or night to sleep, on the ground that the Creator made the land and water, as free for one portion of his Creation as another. But as soon as the eagles began to make nests and pursue the common vocations of eagles, the hawks, ravens, owls and turkey buzzards, together with the crows throughout the wilderness began to prepare for an eagle hunt! but the eagles with the loss of a few 'spread eagles,' acted wise enough to blude the general massacre premeditated.

The next move of the hawks, ravens, owls, turkey buzzards and crows, was to invite the geese and peacocks to come into a pos lequicon and talk away the freedom of the eagles; which they did.

Now the eagles having never disgraced the glory of an eagle, by stooping to treachery, corruption, and hypocrisy, concluded to make a proclamation to all the eagles in the world, that they might all pray to the God of all flesh to pronounce the judgment written. And while they were speaking—these fowls held a spree, and were drunken, and were fighting among themselves—when, lo, and behold, the wild beasts of the earth, came out of their thickets, like lions pierced with hunger, and devoured them up—and the eagles sat upon the top of a high mountain and gloried!

Moral.—When officials in ermine and lace descend and associate with wicked and corrupt men, to injure the innocent, and degrade the virtuous under the cloak of power, they generally meet an omniscient rebuff, which leaves them to fester in their own infamy, while honesty sits on the paladium of liberty, and hisses avarice and meanness meet their reward!

TOM'S AGE OF REASON?

TRADES MEETING.

Tuesday Evening,

January, 28th 1845.

Elder John Taylor, in the Chair,

W. R. Foster, Sec. pro. tem.

The chairman made some remarks in relation to the best manner of proceeding in building the dam, and particularly insisted upon having every thing that might be put into the company funds for that purpose, reduced to its cash value.

Mr. Durfee, of the Committee appointed to confer with the Nauvoo Agricultural and Manufacturing Association, made a report. He also made some observations concerning the arrangement that ought to be made between the Trustees in Trust and the N. A. & M. Association in reference to the ownership of the dam. The whole concern might be vested in the Trustees and their successors, and the N. A. & M. Association lease it, for the consideration of one tenth of the income.

Mr. Hawes said, the Trustees have claim on it, which claim they propose to relinquish for one tenth; the balance would be stock, under the control of the Association, &c.

Mr. Durfee exhibited a plan of the dam, which would consist of three Piers, each 40 feet long, ten feet wide and fifteen feet apart, and averaging twelve feet in depth, planks to be put down between the piers, and the spaces covered with plank also, the whole forming a permanent dam, and a bridge 40 feet wide and 80 rods long.

Mr. Turley, of the Agricultural and Manufacturing Association made some remarks, respecting the union of the two Societies, but said he had no plan to propose.

The chairman said, he had formed no particular plan, suggested the propriety of having a meeting appointed to discuss the best plan of union. He made some general remarks respecting the nature of the Association of which he had, in the commencement of the meetings, been chosen chairman, said no constitution had as yet been prepared—felt averse to any thing of the kind—there might be an organization, something like the Priesthood, &c., and was followed by

Mr. Amasa Lyman, who spoke at some considerable length respecting the proper manner of organization, and of the nature of the charter of the Nauvoo Agricultural and Manufacturing Association. If it was not liberal enough to cover and protect the interests of the farmer, as well of the mechanic, and every interest, he did not want any thing to do with it. It might perhaps be liberal in its provisions to justify us in acting upon it in building so small a thing as a dam across the Mississippi, but if its capital stock could not be increased beyond 500,000 dollars, he wanted nothing to do with it.

The chairman read from the Times and Seasons, the charter of the Association, and remarked that perhaps it might be best to act upon its provisions in building the dam in order to secure some technical legal advantages.

Several persons expressed doubts of its affording any such advantages and doubted the propriety of acting under its provisions at all.

Mr. Lyman thought it likely, an extra session of the Legislature would be called; and the charter be repealed.

after we had got two or three of the piers built.

Mr. Hawes said he was satisfied that nothing but great things and liberal things would satisfy this community. He spoke of the great advantages which would result from a proper organization and combination of various interests, and showed that if the farmers and the builders, and the shoe makers, and the wood cutters, and the lumber men, and men of various other occupations were each to form associations, and organize into companies, the vacant prairies would be extensively cultivated, the laborers be fully employed, the idle ploughs all put into use, the lumber which floats past us down the Mississippi be secured for our own use, and every body be vastly benefited, and have enough to drink and wear.

Mr. Roberts spoke of the good success which the Coach and Carriage Manufacturing Association had thus far met with. They had organized without any connection with the charter under discussion, and he thanked God they had done so, for their business would be facilitated in a tenfold greater degree without it than with it. He felt much obliged to the chairman for opposing him in his efforts to be united with it when they were trying to get organized.

The chairman observed that he saw in the beginning that it would not answer to connect the Coach Makers Association with the charter of the Nauvoo Agricultural and Manufacturing Association; and he had as little confidence as any one in the stability of the charter, not that they can take it away legally, this they cannot do; no dependence can be placed upon the actions of the Legislators of Illinois, in granting charters, for they will grant them, and then cry for them again, as little boys cry for marbles, when they have given them away. There is no such confidence to be placed in them as in a common man.

They granted us a city charter with perpetual succession, and took it away again in about four years. They have violated their word and the faith of the State, and have shouldered the murder of the Smiths at Carthage jail by receiving into their midst, and screening from public justice by the exercise of the Legislative prerogative, one of the men indicted for murder—upon the old supposition that the king can do no wrong; therefore he thought we had better have nothing to do with it, for it would be a curse rather than a blessing to us, and if he had his way, he would go in for repealing it, for this we could do legally and the Legislature could not.

Mr. Hawes moved that the charter of the Nauvoo Agricultural and Manufacturing Association be repealed. Carried unanimously.

Moved by Mr. — that notice be given in the Neighbor, that the charter is repealed. — Carried unanimously.

The chairman presented a plan of organization for the Trades Union, as follows:—First, twelve men to be appointed, forming a living constitution, with President, Secretary, &c., to take the lead in the concern.

2nd.—Separate Trustees to organize themselves, and have their own laws, and be subject to the others, which was adopted unanimously.

Elder Taylor, and Elder Lyman, were appointed a committee to select the names of twelve men and present them to the next meeting for adoption or rejection.

Mr. Ripley was appointed to write an account of the contemplated dam, its advantages &c., and to make a plan of it.

Adjourned to Tuesday evening next, same place.

REPORT OF THE AUDITOR OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS, (OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS)

Auditor's Office,
January, 15, 1845.

Hon. the Speaker of the Senate:

Sir, In obedience to a resolution, directing the Auditor to report what amount would be added to the State revenue upon the condition that the Legislature, at its present session, should take the land tax from the counties, I have the honor to submit the following statement and accompanying table.

It will readily be seen what number of counties have failed to report to this office under a resolution of the House, directing an immediate return of the aggregate amount of taxable real estate in the several counties of the State;—what amount was levied on real estate for State and county purposes respectively; what amount on personal property for the purposes. Had these counties in obedience to instructions addressed to them under the authority of the resolution alluded to, have reported, the aggregate of taxable real estate would be increased in round numbers, about $3,500,000.—making a gross aggregate of about $54,000,000 of real estate subject to taxation. This amount is doubtless far below the true estimate, for in many cases, town property is not counted in the aggregate of real estate, and in one instance, it is put down as personal property. The entire amount of real estate taxable for 1844, had it all been faithfully assessed, would, without doubt, have reached the sum of $60,000,000. The value of such property for the current year (1845) may be safely estimated at $70,000,000. In all the northern counties (in many of which there has heretofore been no taxable real estate) that source of revenue will be greatly increased.

The amount of revenue, derived to the State at twenty cents on every hundred dollar's worth of real estate is, you will find from the table, $110,788.62; which sum being added to that derived from personal property, in connection with the sums charged against those counties which have failed to report, will make the amount set down against the several collectors of the State for 1844.—See Auditor's report, December 6th, 1844.

The amount of personal estate, taxable for 1844, rejecting the above excepted counties, is $16,413,341.20

The amount of State revenue derived to the State from personal property for the year 1844, leaving out the delinquent counties is

From real estate for county purposes it is, for the same year, 195,560.76

Adding said delinquents it would swell the above sum to upwards of 210,000.00

From personal estate for county purposes, with the same exceptions, it is, 63,515.90

Adding there, however, will increase this sum to 70,000.00

Making a gross aggregate from both sources of $280,000, levied in the several counties of this State for county purposes.

Adding the aggregates, levied from all sources and you have the gross amount of $430,000.

Adding the whole amount of revenue levied on real estate for county purposes, at the rates adopted by the several county authorities, to the amount levied for State purposes, on real estate (including the delinquent counties in both cases) and they make the sum of $320,788.62.

Adding the sum derived to the counties from real estate to the whole amount of State revenue, and you have about $353,000.

Excluding the State revenue arising from personal property, and adding the residue to the amount of county real estate revenue, and you have about, $322,000.

These calculations are all predicated on the various levies imposed by the several county authorities who have control of the subject.

I have the honor to be, Most respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

W. L. D. EWING, Auditor.

Repeal.—Outrage in Quebec.—It is our painful duty to record the perpetration of some disgraceful outrages in Champlain street, on Tuesday last. About 8 o'clock, a mob, variously estimated at from 800 to 600 persons, bearing with them two blazing tar barrels, (taken from Mr. Jones' wharf and shouting for "O'Connell and Repeal," paraded this street, breaking the windows of every house in which no light was visible.—This destruction was indiscriminate; Catholics, Protestants, Repealers and Anti-repealers, suffered alike; and the windows of the Catholic church, the Mariners and Wesleyan chapels, wherein no lights could have been expected were demolished. Huge stones were hurled for this purpose of destruction; in several instances breaking sash and panes. At Johnson's tavern, the damage inflicted was very great, and so incensed was he that, after warning them to desist, he fired and wounded one man in three places with small shot—a sailor of the Clio, we are told.

They returned here again at ten o'clock, menacing his life, when he again fired upon them, wounding one more. Mr. Leek at the Cove also fired, and while preparing to give a second shot, was knocked down by a stone thrown at him. It is said that three persons have been wounded, but not seriously. Mr. Conolly, J. P. endeavored to disperse the rioters, but could not succeed in doing so; he, however, persuaded them, when about to retire, to throw the blazing barrel, which they had thrown down on the wooden pavement, in Sous-le-Fort street, over the wharf; in so doing they were nearly setting fire to the steamer Charlevoix. The police were too small a force to contend with the rioters. Yesterday evening a company of the 431 Light Infantry marched down to the Queen's wharf, to suppress an expected renewal of these scenes of violence, but their services were not required. We are informed that the actual Repealers were in no way connected with this riot, and are glad to find, by the resolutions of the Association, given elsewhere, they have promptly vindicated their innocence, and boldly denounced any of their associates who may be detected to have been implicated. Two men have been arrested.—Barrett, a bailiff of the Vice Admiralty Court, and one White, who is now in jail in consequence of not being able to procure bail for his future appearance. —[Quebec Mer.

JAIL STATISTICS.—The secretary of the commonwealth has made the following return of the whole number of prisoners (including debtors) in all the jails and houses of correction during the year ending Nov. 1, 1844: 4012—males 3229; females 703. Adults 3618; minors 494; white persons 3818; colored do. 295; married do. 754; not stated whether married or not 3253; able to read or write 1493; addicted to intemperance 1073; confined for debt 548; confined for insanity 38; natives of Massachusetts 763; natives of other States 480; natives of other countries 760.

Criminal offences, and the number of prisoners under each head.—Adultery and lewd conduct 117; assault 309; burglary 33; forgery 19; homicide 9; intemperance 945; keeping of brothels 52; larceny 694; making or passing counterfeit money 43; perjury 6; rape 2; vagrancy 75; all other criminal offences 1200. Total commitments, to jails and houses of correction for crimes 3505.

Persons whose nativity is not given in the returns 2000; remaining in confinement Nov. 1, 1844, 559; average cost of the board of each prisoner, per week $1.58; estimated value of labor in houses of correction $13,179.44; total amount of expenses of jails and houses of correction the past year $47,731.97.—[Post.

Old Bibles.—There is a Bible in Maine that was printed in London in the 16th century. In Boston there is a Queen Elizabeth Bible, printed in 1595. There is somewhere in the Union a copy of the oldest edition of the Bible printed in 1462. Father Robins, of New Hampshire, has the Bible upon which the first Congress was sworn in. This is the most valuable of all.

National Project.—A Washington correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser says, that Mr. Cushing has a project in view for the establishment of a more direct intercourse with China, by lines of steamships, by way of Panama and the Isthmus of Darien, and that the government is prepared to offer facilities for the execution of the project.

THE NAVY.

The three new sloops of war, Portsmouth, Jamestown, and St. Merys, built upon plans of the naval constructors, now at Norfolk are nearly ready for sea, and there is much curiosity to have their relative sailing qualities tested by a trial of speed. They will probably sail together in a few days.

The officers of the U. S. ships Macedonian and Decatur, held a meeting at Port Praya, on the 7th of November last, and adopted resolutions expressive of their respect for the memory of the late Surgeon Woolfley, of the Decatur. They also resolved to enclose a spot of ground near the town of Port Praya, and there inter the remains of their deceased fellow officer.

A letter from Commodore Perry, of the African Squadron, states that the cases of the African fever reported on board the U. S. ship Pebble were of a mild character, with none of the malignant symptoms usually attending it.

The U. S. steamer Princeton, Captain Stockton, arrived at Norfolk on the 8th instant, and it is stated, is to go to England for another to be manufactured there for which orders have been sent out.

The President Elect.—In reply to an invitation from Messrs. Joseph L. Merrick, Charles Macgill and others, a committee of the friends of Mr. Polk, at Hagerstown, Md., inviting him to pass through the town on his way to the seat of government.—Mr. Polk courteously thanking them, says—I regret that it will probably be out of my power so to do. Necessary and pressing duties will detain me at home until the early part of February next, which will require me to proceed by the most direct route—occupying the shortest time—to Washington city. I shall most probably cross the mountains, overland from Wheeling, and go by railway from Cumberland direct to Washington.

CANADA.
Canadian Parliament took a recess on Friday of 17 days.

The Montreal Herald states that the canals have returned to their shanties, and commenced a system of outrage on the line of the Lachine canal. They are said to have beaten Mr. Angus McPherson, a merchant of the interior and left him for dead.

The British American Land Company having sold during the last year 14,457 acres of land in the eastern townships, on an average of 14s. per acre, on the credit system. Many of the purchasers are French Canadians.

Wm. B. Robinson Esq., has been appointed a member of Her Majesty's Executive Council.

SELECTED.

Town.—The rose that all are praising.
The God that others worship is not the God for me;

He has no parts nor body and cannot hear nor see—

But I've a God that lives above—

A God of power and of love—

A God of Revelation—O, that's the God for me;

O, that's the God for me; O, that's the God for me.

A church without Apostles is not the church for me;

It's like a ship dismantled, afloat upon the sea.

But I've a church that's always led,

By the twelve stars around her head—

A church with good foundations—O, that's the church for me—

O, that's the church for me, &c.

A church without a Prophet is not the church for me;

It has no head to lead it, in it I would not be;

But I've a church not built by men,

Cut from the mountain without hands;

A church with gifts and blessings—O, that's the church for me, &c.

The hope that Gentiles cherish is not the hope for me;

It has no faith nor knowledge, far from it I would be.

But I've a hope that will not fail,

That teaches safe within the veil—

Which hope is like an anchor—O, that's the hope for me, &c.

The heaven of ascetics is not the heaven for me;

So doubtful its location, neither on land nor sea.

But I've a heaven on the earth—

The land and home that gave me birth—

A heaven of light and knowledge—O, that's the heaven for me, &c.

A church without a gathering is not the church for me;

The Savior would not own it, wherever it might be.

But I've a church that's well-dout,

From false traditions, fears and doubts,

A gathering of nation—O, that's the church for me, &c.

Extraordinary Phenomenon.—We noticed recently the extraordinary destruction of fish on the eastern shores. The following is from the New York Sun:

We are sorry to hear that the mortality among the fish on our shores is spreading with alarming rapidity. The infected district already embraces the entire coast from near the east end of Long Island to the capes of Virginia, extending out into the ocean for a distance of one to three miles. We learn from several intelligent citizens, some of them Sandy Hook pilots and captains of coasting vessels, that the shores of Long Island and New Jersey, and Delaware are lined with millions of dead fish, while thousands are found floating in every direction. The cause of this strange calamity is yet unexplained. It has been noticed that the water in the infected district is discolored; and looks blacker than the ordinary sea water.—Immediately on entering the brown water the fish are seized with convulsions, rise to the surface, and die in a few minutes. It seems to us that our scientific men should investigate this phenomenon as speedily as possible. Many persons fear that on the approach of summer, a pestilence may result from the putrefaction of dead fish already thrown upon the coast, while the loss and injury to our great shell fisheries, the season of which is approaching, may be very disastrous.

The great volumes of fresh water from the Hudson and other rivers in this vicinity, seems to keep the infected waters of the ocean from entering our bays and harbors. Should the infection find its way into our bays and rivers the result would be deplorable.

A New Treaty.—A treaty has been entered into between Major Wm. A. Strong, Governor P. M. Butler, Col. J. S. Logan and Thomas L. Judge, Esq., Commissioners on the part of the United States, and the Chiefs of the Creeks and Seminoles, by which the difficulties between those two nations and their claims on the United States are satisfactorily adjusted.

The treaty we learn contains the following stipulations:

The Seminoles, who have, since their removal from Florida, been scattered among the Creeks and Cherokees, principally, are to be gathered into one district in the Creek country, and form a constituent part of that nation, preserving, to a certain extent, their nationality. They are to have their mined affairs distinct; a representation in the National Council, proportioned to their numbers, and the right to enact their own municipal regulations, but subject to the general laws of the Creeks. After their arrival in the district of country set apart for them, which lies between the Canadian and Little rivers, the Seminoles, in addition to former stipulations, are to be subsisted for six months, to receive, for five years, one thousand dollars per annum, in agricultural implements, and two thousand dollars in goods for fifteen years.

The Creeks, in lieu of the country thus granted to the Seminoles, will receive, in addition to the present school fund, three thousand dollars per annum, making the whole school fund seven thousand dollars per annum, which will be paid them for twenty years.

Upon the signing of the treaty, we learn, that great and general satisfaction was expressed by the parties, and that eloquent talks were delivered by the celebrated Wid Cat on the part of the Seminoles, and on the part of the Creeks, by Opothe-yo-ho-la, who is certainly one of Nature's orators.

In view of this treaty, we congratulate both Creeks and Seminoles, the former in the acquisition they have made to their strength and numbers, and the latter in having at length secured to themselves a home and resting place.—[Cherokee Advocate.

More Trouble in the Episcopal Church.

We find in the Episcopal Recorder, published at Philadelphia, an article headed "Recent Developments in New York," in which it is stated that almost of conspiracy has been discovered among some of the members of the General Theological Seminary in this city, the object of which appears to be to render the institutions, as far as practicable, subservient to the principles and policy of Rome. It is said that the association has its common seal, with C. U. (Catholic Unity) upon it, its secret meetings, and its correspondence with the Papal authorities in this vicinity. The Recorder states that the 7th of January has been appointed for the trial of the offenders by the Faculty, and calls upon the Bishops to meet the solemn responsibilities which such developments devolve upon them as the visitors of the General Theological Seminary of the church.

Literature in Egypt.—The folly and waste of publishing one-sided lying history is thus exemplified by a recent traveler in Egypt. Mehmet Ali has established a printing office at Cairo, a shabby concern, but which issues papers and books. The latter, generally history and poetry, have hitherto met with but little favor from the Arabs; whether the blame is to be attributed to their poverty or their want of taste. Mehmet Ali's author-meet with, in fact, but few buyers, so that the records of their labors, piled up in warehouses, are abandoned as a prey to rats and mice, or to be decomposed slowly under the influence of the climate. The reason is obvious. No pains are taken to adapt the publications to the wants and predilections of the people, who care little for histories which dare record no truth, if it happen to be displeasing to the Pasha, and who have little relish for poetry which derives its inspiration from a state of society which has no analogy to theirs.—[Noah's News.

Chinese Oath.—The mode of administering an oath in the courts of justice is far too extraordinary to omit mentioning. The Chinese upon being placed at the bar, are not sworn to tell the truth, either by reverence or fear of their gods, but by the formality of cutting a cock's head off. Thus, upon any doubt being had in regard to what they state, they are instantly executed by this, to them, the severest of all trials, and which I was assured, they would on no account undertake, provided they were not thoroughly certain that they were then stating the fact—their assertions of the truth their statements being couched in the following terms:—I hereby swear I am ready to cut the cock's head off to the truth of what I now say. This is the form of a Chinaman's oath, now used in the courts of justice at Hong Kong.

[Campbell's China.

For the New York Ladies.—A New York correspondent writes in an interior paper as follows, putting a deal of truth in a very small space:—"Speaking of Broadway, it's wonderful to see the infinite variety of dress, exhibited by the ladies, on this grand promenade. Talk about New York Fashions—why, what are they? Not ten ladies, on the street in a beautiful day, can be seen, who resemble each other in their costume.—There is no distinctive color, no prevailing style. Coats of every form, and of the most beautiful material, are seen; shawls of every variety and pattern, bonnets of every hue and shape; dresses of all kinds of material, with half a dozen down to no floor cost, are constantly upon the move in Broadway."—[Noah's News.

Curious Discovery.—A highly curious and interesting discovery, not only to geologists, but to others likewise, has just been made at the Penryn iron works, near Pontypool. While the workmen engaged in the works, and occupied in one of the mine levels, were proceeding with their operations, they met with a fossil, of very considerable size. It was found in an erect position and perpendicular to the plane of stratification. The circumference at the base, immediately above the point of junction with the rock is six feet and from thence it diminishes to four feet in a height of about five feet.

POETRY.

THE CHARIOT OF ISRAEL.

BY W. W. FLETCHER, Esq.

The vengeance of God like a whirlwind is coming.

To chasten the world by continual strokes;

His chariot wheels on the mountains are humming.

His anger is kindled, his jealousy smokes.

CHORUS:

Yet as truth waxes louder, the Gentiles grow prouder.

Their time is fulfilling, alas! sure enough;

Shout fathers, and mothers, and sisters, and brothers,

The chariot of Israel, and horsemen thereof.

When violence and bloodshed had made the earth streaked.

Jehovah just swept them away with his flood;

But now in his anger he'll burn up the wicked.

The sun shall be darkened, the moon turn to blood.

CHORUS:

Yet as truth waxes louder, &c

With what dreadful splendor, the Lord will alight men,

And vex them with judgments, by day and by night!

For he will raise up like as in Mount Perazim;

And bring forth his treasures of hail for the fight.

CHORUS:

Yet as truth waxes louder, &c

The nations are drinking the wine cup of fury.

To rush on the battle against almighty God;

And soon the destroyer will go in a hurry,

To scatter destruction at home and abroad.

CHORUS:

Yet as truth waxes louder, &c

On Babel, great Babel, prepare for the slaughter.

Thy recompence doubled in every crime;

Thine awful herbage like forests round water.

Exhibit its shade on the current of time.

CHORUS:

Yet as truth waxes louder, &c

The image of men by old Nebuchadnezzar,

Was Babel to fall by the stone with surprise;

The words and the hand on the wall to Babel shatter.

May read to the mother of harlots likewise.

CHORUS:

Yet as truth waxes louder, &c

On Babel, the Lady, of kingdoms, surrender,

For God shall bring justice and judgment to thee.

The cities and grandeur, thy glory and splendor,

Shall sink like a millstone cast into the sea.

CHORUS:

Yet as truth waxes louder, &c

The signs and the strange work, the promise of ages,

Like day light at morning, begin to appear;

They trouble the great men, and baffle the sage.

The fig trees are leaving, the summer is near.

CHORUS:

Yet as truth waxes louder, &c

MISSOURI.

The following report in the Legislature of Missouri, shows how far the charity and humanity of that state, is extended towards the flood, freshet, and just judgement of God, upon the river inhabitants.

We care nothing more for the report, than to show up the squirming of ungodly men, and let the world know that wickedness must sooner or later meet its reward.

Why not pass an act to pay the Mormons some three or four millions for their loss of property by your mobs?

Till Missouri does this, the Mormons will continue to pray "for their enemies," that God will feed them with judgements.

But read the REPORT.

Of the Select Committee to whom was referred the petition of sundry citizens of the State of Missouri, praying the General Assembly for pecuniary relief for the injury and destruction of property sustained by them, by reason of the late freshet and overflow of the several rivers running through this State, beg leave to submit the following as the result of their labors upon the subject:

Your committee are apprised from the evidence derived from different sources, as well as personal observation, that millions of money would not be adequate to repair the destruction occasioned, and loss sustained by the citizens of the State, in consequence of this unexpected dispensation of Providence; but your committee are not deterred by the enormity of the whole amount of damages sustained by the citizens, because full and reparation cannot be afforded by the State, to each and every individual sufferer, are unwilling to fold their arms in their own exemption, and personal security from the common lot of those suffering fellow citizens: they are of those who believe in the force and efficacy of that ancient and respected truth, as applicable to this subject, that half a loaf is better than no bread.

Your committee are not, in reviewing this subject as one of great moment to the people of Missouri, left entirely without an example and a guide as to the course a magnanimous government will pursue, when it shall please the Almighty to afflict a portion of the inhabitants of such government, by a similar calamity to that which has befallen a large portion of our fellow-citizens of Missouri, during the present year: they would only mention, as an instance, one which is familiar to Missourians. The course pursued by the government of the United States towards a large portion of our citizens in the south eastern part of the State, where the visitation of Heaven was sent upon their lands and their homes, in the form of an earthquake in 1811 and 1812, by means of which their lands were either swallowed up or rendered wholly valueless. What then was the course of the general government? With that benevolence, that magnanimity, and that imbedded sympathy of heart, which so distinguish the American character, the government, as early as 1815, passed the law, which is now familiarly known as the New Madrid law, by virtue of which the sufferers were permitted to re-locate their lands on any of the unappropriated lands of the government in the same territory.

Your committee in approaching this subject, however, find that difficulties and obstacles beset them from almost every quarter, and not amongst the least of these, is the present exhausted and depressed condition of the monetary affairs of the State. From the message of the late Executive, communicated to the General Assembly at the commencement of its present session, we learn that the present indebtedness of the State, including principal and interest, is more than one million of dollars, that the annual interest is over seventy thousand dollars now accruing against the State; and that the annual expenditures of the State, including the accruing interest, will exceed her annual income by the amount of at least fifty thousand dollars per annum in the ordinary administration of her affairs; and that that worthy officer recommends an immediate increase of the rate of taxation, as the only available resource by which the State is to relieve herself of her present pecuniary embarrassment.

Surrounded by this state of pecuniary embarrassment, your committee cannot see that an appropriation to relieve the wants of the sufferers from the recent flood, could be made out of the ordinary revenues of the State; neither will they venture to suggest the appropriation of a portion of the proceeds of the sales of the 500,000 acres of land, donated to the State by the Federal Government, upon admitting that we could anticipate the realization of a sufficient amount of that fund, to answer the present exigencies of the sufferers, because those lands were donated for the specific purpose of internal improvements, having in view the general and common interest of the whole union, as well as the people of Missouri, who reside in the immediate vicinity of the improvements to be then made; and the State of Missouri having solicited a donation of the public lands for that object and purpose, we will not question the policy or propriety of carrying out the specific purposes for which the lands were granted by the Federal Government.

But your committee have had also under consideration the expediency and propriety of assenting through the General Assembly, to receive Missouri's quota of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands to which she is entitled, by virtue of an act of Congress, approved the 4th day of September, A. D. 1841, for the purpose of relieving the sufferers before mentioned. Your committee are fully aware that this subject is one of embarrassment and difficulty, and that those embarrassments in part now arise out of the former decision of the State through her General Assembly at the last session. Your committee, therefore, in approaching this enquiry, do it with those feelings of respect and deference which are due to the acts of the assembled representatives of the people, and not in a spirit of opposition merely to that decision. It is not the purpose of your committee to enter into a critical or particular examination of the reasons which influenced the last General Assembly, to accept the donation of the 500,000 acres of land, and by the same act reject the money. When both land and money were proffered by the same act of Congress to the State of Missouri; and your committee certainly means no disrespect to the action of that body, when they express their opinion that there is not, either in ethics, morality, or the principles of sound policy, a solitary reason for the rejection of the one, that does not apply equally and with the same force to the rejection of the other. Your committee are aware that the act distributing the proceeds of the sales of the public lands amongst the several States, according to the ratio of representation in Congress, has been denounced as unconstitutional, and that this is one of the assigned reasons for the rejection of Missouri's portion of the money at the last General Assembly.

Your committee are satisfied that the committee who reported to the General Assembly at the last session upon this subject, were misled as to facts concerning the original deeds of cession of the public lands by the States to the confederacy, and the United States. They say in the report that "by a recurrence to the history of the public lands, the manner of their acquisition, by whose blood and treasure they were gained, and from the spirit and letter of most of the deeds of cession, it will clearly appear that it was the intention of the grantors to bestow these lands upon the nation simply for national purposes."

Your committee here beg leave to call the attention of the House to the words used in the deed of cession of Virginia, "that all the lands within the territory so ceded, and not reserved, &c., shall be considered a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become, or shall become members of the confederation, or federal alliances of said States. Virginia inclusive, according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatever."

Your committee believe that the words used in the other deeds of cession are similar in their import to those used in the Virginia deed. The words of grant in the deed of South Carolina, are these: "to the United States in Congress assembled for the benefit of said State;" these deeds of cession have uniformly been considered deeds of trust by the executive, legislative and judicial departments of the Federal Government, and your committee now ask permission to refer to some of those opinions. In the case of Jackson against Clark, see 1 Peters 605 p. the Supreme Court of the United States, Chief Justice Marshall in treating of the terms and conditions of the Virginia deed of cession, uses this very strong language: "The government of the United States then received this territory in trust not only for the Virginia troops on the continental establishment, but also for the use and benefit of the members of the confederation, and this trust is to be executed by a faithful and bona fide disposition of the land for that purpose. We cannot take a retrospective view of the then situation of the United States, without perceiving the importance which must have been attached to this part of the trust."

Your committee also beg leave to refer to the phraseology of the resolution introduced by the Hon. Rufus King, Senator from New York, in the Senate of the United States in the year 1825, having reference to the objects of colonization. "Resolved, that as soon as the portion of the existing funded debt of the United States, for the payment of which the public land is pledged shall have been paid off—&c." Your committee also find the following sentiments of Mr. Van Buren, as expressed in a letter to Mr. Sherrod Williams in 1836, upon the subject of the public lands, he says: "In respect to the public lands, I need only observe that I regard the public domain as a trust fund, belonging to all the States to be disposed of for their common benefit."

Your committee also find the following very remarkable language in the message of President Jackson, delivered to Congress in December, 1832. "Among the interests which merit the consideration of Congress after the payment of the public debt; one of the most important, in my view, is that of the public lands. Previous to the foundation of our present constitution, it was recommended by Congress that a portion of the waste lands owned by the States, should be ceded to the United States for the purpose of general harmony, and as a fund to meet the expenses of the war. The recommendation was adopted, and at different periods of time the States of Massachusetts, New York, Virginia, North and South Carolina, and Georgia, granted their vacant soil, for the uses for which they had been asked. As the lands may now be considered as relieved from their pledge, the object for which they were ceded having been accomplished, it is in the discretion of Congress to dispose of them in such way as best to conduce to the quiet, harmony and general interest of the American people. It seems to me to be our true policy that this public lands shall cease, as soon as practicable, to be a source of revenue."

Your committee will not further trespass upon the time of the House by the recital of authorities, to establish the position that the public lands have always been considered as a trust fund, held by the general government for the use of the States.

Your committee are aware that the report submitted to the General Assembly at its last session, which recommended the rejection of the quota of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands offered to this State, that the same was somewhat signalized by being denominated a bribe. And your committee have to express a regret that such language should have been employed in reference to that subject, for various reasons: First, because the legal meaning of the word 'bribe,' is when a judge, or other person concerned in the administration of justice, takes any undue reward to influence his behavior in his office, and the propriety of the use of the term is not perceived from the fact stated. Secondly, the use of such a term was not very civil and courteous towards the Congress of the United States, nor was it respectful towards our sister States of the Union, nearly all of whom did receive their quotas of the same fund under the very same act of Congress. It is true that some of the States, amongst whom was the State of Virginia, as your committee believe, did not at first accept their respective portions of said fund, but your committee have the satisfaction to announce, that at the present session of the General Assembly of that State, and which is now in session, they have seen it stated in the public prints, that upon a reconsideration of that subject in the House of Representatives, that branch of the General Assembly of Virginia have, by a large majority, decided in favor of accepting and receiving her portion of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands. Your committee do not urge these acts of sister States as of any obligatory force upon the action of the State of Missouri in the matter, they only mention and refer to them as acts of States whose relative connection to this subject, is identical to that of Missouri, and because they think it, at least, respectful to consider of the experience and wisdom which may be presumed to guide and control the legislative councils of some of the elder sisters of the Union.

Your committee have examined the case of Johnson vs McIntosh, referred to in the report of the committee who examined and reported upon the subject to the last General Assembly; the case is reported in the eighth volume of Wheaton, page 536, and they find nothing in the decision of that case, which in the least conflicts with the opinions of Judge Marshall, President Jackson and others above cited, to show that the original deeds of cession of the public lands, by the States, were deeds of trust.

Your committee are unable to see that principle of the constitution of the United States, or of the State of Missouri, would be violated in the acceptance by this State, of her distributive share of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands; neither are they aware of any principle of sound policy in the administration of the affairs of the State which forbid it.

Your committee are apprised that the sum of money to be derived from this source is greatly inadequate to relieve all the suffering of the people, occasioned by the recent freshet in the several rivers running through and bordering upon this State; but believing that there is no other more available source, from which relief can be afforded, even temporarily, they beg leave to submit the foregoing to the House as their views upon this subject, and respectfully recommend to the House the adoption of the resolutions here appended, leaving to the future action of the House the mode and manner of distributing the fund, should the House deem it advisable to adopt the resolutions:

1. Resolved, By the house of Representatives of the State of Missouri, the Senate concurring therein, that the State of Missouri hereby consents to receive and accept her distributive share of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, tendered by virtue of an act of Congress, entitled, "an act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and to grant pre-emption rights," approved September 9th, 1841.

2. Resolved, That the State of Missouri hereby consents to receive and accept any and all sums of money that may be tendered to her, arising from the sales of public lands, since the passage of the act by Congress, mentioned in the foregoing resolution.

3. Resolved, That the Governor of this State, be, and he is hereby authorized to appoint some suitable agent on the part of the State to receive any sum or sums of money which may be the distributive share of Missouri, in pursuance of the act of Congress referred to in the first of the foregoing resolution.

4. Resolved, That so soon as the several sums of money or any part thereof referred to in the above and foregoing resolutions, shall be received by the State of Missouri, that the same shall be distributed amongst the citizens of this State, who suffered by the recent freshet and overflow of the several rivers running through and bordering upon this State.

according to some equitable proportion to be devised by the General Assembly.

THE TEXAS ANNEXATION QUESTION.

The Senate of the United States have a number of different projects before them for annexation. Senators Benton, of Missouri, Niles, of Connecticut, Foster, of Tennessee, and Haywood of N. Carolina, have each submitted projects, all of which have been referred to the committee on foreign affairs. Each of those senators voted against the ratification of the treaty of annexation last session. Mr Archer, chairman of the committee, on Wednesday last said, in reply to an inquiry by Mr. Sevier, as to when a report might be expected by the Senate from his committee, that proposition concerning annexation came into the Senate in such quick succession that it would be a difficult matter to say at what time a report upon them could be made; and further, that there was a disposition in the committee to wait until some decisive action should have taken place in the other House on some one of the many propositions before that body on the same subject. When the committee were assured that they had the whole matter before them, he thought that a few days would be sufficient to enable them to make their report.

The House of Representatives continue earnestly occupied in the debate upon this subject, and every day furnishes new projects for its accomplishment. The political party in the majority in congress have held two or three caucus meetings, with a view of arranging some definite plan for its accomplishment, without arriving at any amicable result. It was finally concluded to open the debate and allow the several projects to come up in committee of the whole, and see whether any one of them would be successful in winning friends enough to obtain a majority. For the first few days the friends of annexation had the arguments all to themselves, its opponents making no efforts to obtain the floor, and contenting themselves with loudly calling for the questions whenever the floor was vacated. At length Mr J. C. Ingersoll took the field in opposition. This broke the ice, and the parties went at it, "hammer and tongs." The debate since has been animated, and is likely to continue for some time. A proposition made this week by Mr Cave Johnson, to fix a day on which to close the debate was lost by a large majority.

The question in the mean time is assuming less of a party, and more of a sectional, or rather, more of a slave and anti-slave aspect. (We do not mean abolition, but anti-slave aspect.) Southern whigs, as for instance Milton Brown, of Tennessee, in the House, and Senator Foster, from the same state, have brought forward projects for annexation in the respective Houses, whilst Mr Stetson, of New York, Mr Hale, of New Hampshire, and Mr Brinkerhoff, of Ohio, from the ranks of the majority, have taken ground against the proposed measure of annexation. These northern democratic members insist upon admitting only upon condition of restricting slavery to part of the territory. The New York representation is looked to with much interest.

Mr Holmes, of South Carolina, on Wednesday last, in his remarks in the House, referred to the message of Governor Wright, of New York, which he said was skillfully, admirably prepared, and worthy of the second great magician of the day. He complimented particularly the dexterity which Governor Wright displayed in omitting any reference to the union of the United States with Texas. Mr Holmes said it was proposed by some of the advocates of annexation, to admit Texas by dividing the country into slave and free territory. "The man from the south who would consent to such an annexation must be either knave or fool: a fool not to perceive the dangerous tendency of such an annexation, and a knave, if, perceiving it, he did not oppose the measure."

By the way,—on annexation, would it not be a decided improvement in the numerous projects, and at least obviate one of the serious difficulties in the way of its accomplishment, that of the consideration of the interest which Mexico has in the case, so seriously defended by many, if the invitation to annexation were made more general, by inserting Mexico, California, and Guaymas, and Yucatan with Texas in the proposition? It seems to have been forgotten that Guatemala was the first of our southern neighbors that proposed to be annexed to this union. As early as the year 1823, eight commissioners arrived in this country from the government of that republic, with a proposition to unite that state to the union of the north. The condition of affairs in Mexico itself may be most propitious to such a move on our part for all we know. At least our interests may fairly be presumed to have one influential advocate at head quarters there. The Presidentess of that republic, the wife of general Herrera, who succeeds Santa Anna, is one of the sweet, little, yankee 'factory girls,' of which our country has a good right to boast. The Kennebec Journal gives the following account of her.

"Miss Irene Nichols, daughter of Mr Nathaniel Nichols, of Monmouth, Kennebec county, while at work in a factory in Dorchester, Mass., some four years since, was offered very liberal wages to go to Mexico, and engage in a factory just established there. She with eight others, accepted the offer. While there, she became acquainted with Herrera, the present revolting and successful general, with whom she contracted marriage. She made a visit to her friends in Maine, last summer, during which she received frequent letters from Herrera. She left here in July or August last for Mexico, via New York, where she obtained a license, and was united in marriage to Gen. Herrera; by his representative, the Gen. not being able to leave Mexico: a step rendered necessary, as the parties were both protestants, and could not be married in Mexico, a catholic country.—Herrera is now president of Mexico, having his headquarters at the national palace in the city, and this Kennebec 'factory girl' now revels in the halls of Montezuma." General Herrera is of German extraction, and we are given to understand is an ardent admirer of the institutions of this country, and would not be opposed to the union of Mexico with the United States. A society, extensive in its ramifications, already exists in Mexico, with the view to the accomplishment of such a project.

The Land of Diamonds.—Sumbulpor in the province of Orissa, is a diamond district, and the adamantine crystals are discovered in a matrix of red ochreous earth, which lies within twelve feet of the surface of the soil. These mines, which belong to the Hon. East India Company, have never been worked with becoming spirit, although some very excellent samples of the above gems have been occasionally detected in the district. The town, which is one of no importance, as far as it relates to manufactures, is washed by the river of Mahanuddee, which takes its rise amid the hills of Golconda; and which, after passing by Sumbulpor and Cuttack, discharges itself into the Bay of Bengal at Patimoodie, a short distance below Point Palmyra, Sumbulpor, being buried in jungle, and itself lying in a valley, is proverbially unhealthy; inasmuch so, indeed, that it was found absolutely necessary, on the part of the Bengal Government, some few years since, to withdraw the troops from the station, so frightful was the mortality that reigned among them. The fort has since fallen into decay. What diamonds are found are sent up once a year to the presidency of Calcutta, when they are sorted according to their weight and worth, and are afterwards sold for the benefit of the company. It is a great pity that these mines, as well as those of Bundelcund, are not worked with more energy than has hitherto been the case. For, from some very fine specimens of diamonds which have been from time to time picked up from the bed of the Mahanuddee, in the district, good encouragement is held out to spirited speculators, who might feel disposed to direct their best attention to them. Independent of headiamonds, the sands of the Mahanuddee abound in crystals, as well as in the most varied and beautiful families of the corneal, sard, and jaspers, including the cat's eye and onyx. The soil of Sumbulpor is extremely fertile, and is highly favorable to the growth of sugar cane and indigo; the district also spontaneously yields a great abundance of shellac. It only requires European energy to render it a very important portion of territory, but its lying at a considerable distance from a European station, the country is left entirely to native cultivation, which is exceedingly limited, and at the same time, greatly neglected.

The Steamer United States.—The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser announces the return of the United States to that port on the evening of the 9th, three days from Detroit. Her last trip was a prosperous one. She now lies up. The United States was the first boat out last spring. On the 9th of March she left the harbor for Detroit, but was compelled by ice to return. On the 14th, however, she succeeded in getting out. The harbor of Buffalo has as will be seen, been open within five days of ten months the last season, an event, we believe unprecedented since the navigation of the Lakes.

Our correspondent states that the prisoners had been treated with the most brutal severity on their forced journey, and thrown into prison at Grenoble. He adds, that immediately on becoming acquainted with this outrage, the Sardinian Government made the necessary representations to that of France, by whom, no doubt, full satisfaction would be given. The affair was deemed serious.

SWITZERLAND.

The excitement of which this country has been the scene, in consequence of the local government of Lucerne saving come to the resolution of interrupting the tuition of youth to the Jesuits, who had been permitted to enter the Canton, was great when the packet sailed. An attack was made upon the capital town of the Canton by the Lucerne Liberals, on the morning of the 5th instant; and another revolt took place simultaneously in the neighborhood of Willisau, evoked by a party of volunteers from Argau. The utmost alarm was felt for the peace of the republic, as some of the neighboring Cantons were expected to aid the insurgents; and the whole republic might again have been torn with a religious war. The insurrection at Lucerne, however, was suppressed by the evening of the 8th; two leading rebels, Dr. Steiger, and Capt. Aufser-Maur, were killed; others, Col. Guggenbuhler, and the ex-Councillors of State Baumann and Isaac took to flight; and many of the obscurer sort were killed and wounded. The other revolt also was promptly suppressed. The Lucerne Government had demanded aid from other Cantons; but it was countermanded as unnecessary.

On the 1st of January, the seat of the Federal Government was to be transferred from Lucerne to Zurich, where it will remain for two years; and it is expected by the opponents of the Jesuits that the transfer will favor their opposition. The Burgo-master of the Executive Council of Zurich, has addressed a proclamation to the inhabitants, to inform them officially that order had been restored to Lucerne. In this proclamation, it is said, that Zurich had called the attention of the Government of Lucerne to the unpleasant consequences which might attend the admission of the Jesuits, and that it is to be regretted its advice was not followed; but on the other hand, Zurich protests with energy against any attempt at a violent intervention in the affairs of State, and demands that none but legal means should be resorted to, in order to obtain redress for the grievances alleged.

A popular assembly of about 3,000 persons, chiefly composed of Bernese Solonars, and Argau, and refugees from Lucerne, was held in the church of Faurbrunnen on the 16th ultimo; a plan for an association against the Jesuits was organized, and a petition to the government of Bern finally agreed upon, calling upon it to place itself at the head of the Cantons opposed to the establishment of the Jesuits in Switzerland. Hostile resolutions were also passed in a meeting at Zolingen. The Canton of Schwyz marched troops to the frontier of Lucerne on the 16th. Meanwhile the Executive Council of Lucerne, addressed to all the Canton a federal resolution, according to which the formation of volunteer corps is prohibited. And the Helvetia, of the 20th announces that the same Government on hearing of the resolutions adopted by the popular assemblies at Faurbrunnen and Zolingen, had ordered the Military Commission to call out the Landwehr.

PRUSSIA.

Prussia.—The Paris Siecle, alluding to the determination of the King of Prussia to give a constitution to his subjects, says:—Not only is this resolution taken, but it has been communicated to the different chancelleries of Europe. The work is not only a project, but it is already finished. The basis of the constitution are settled. All that now is to be done is to promulgate it and to put it in operation.

TURKEY.

Sir Stratford returned from his cruise on the 25th November, when the negotiations spoken of on the arrival of the Oxford, were renewed, but not in the happiest temper.

IRELAND.

Frightful Murders and Outrages.—A Protestant family named Shepherd had taken a farm of Mr. Fawcett, near Ballinacorney, in King's county, from which a Roman Catholic family named Daly had been ejected. The Shepherds, who seem to have been nice brothers, received a notice warning them not to take possession, if they valued their lives. When they proceeded to the lands, a second notice was served upon them to the same effect. But being a numerous family, and nothing daunted, they provided themselves with arms and ammunition, and took possession; their first precaution being to make the roof of the house fire proof outside with clay, and then boring gun holes through different parts of the wall; and while at work in the day time, one brother standing sentinel with loaded arms, while the others were employed. Ambrose, one of the brothers, went off on Wednesday or Thursday week, to fetch a cartload of furniture and his family. On his return he saw the horses straying about, and the door partly shut. He called to his brothers, but they did not answer; and fearing to enter the house, he ran to the next police station, for aid. The house was entered, and one brother was found lying in it, his head smashed by a spade; and all the arms had been taken away. The body of the other brother was not found till Saturday; it was lying in a ditch, the head also smashed. A coroner's Jury have returned a verdict of "wilful murder" against "some person or persons unknown."

Tipperary produces its usual current list of "outrages." A man has died from the effects of savage beating administered by a number of men on the 19th November, after a quarrel at a public house. Another man has been beaten by four ruffians, near Lisbony, and his life is despaired of. Four armed men attacked a house at Scragg, but were repulsed; and was the cause of this assault.

A long list of outrages, varying in degrees of atrocity, are announced as having occurred in the neighborhood of Limerick and Nenagh.

A faction fight took place, the other day, in the churchyard of Ballinacorney, in the south of Ireland; a large number of infuriated men savagely fighting over a corpse which had been brought to the churchyard for interment. The two parties had fought on a former occasion, but had been put to flight by the police before mischief was done; in the churchyard they battled till one man was taken away insensible, and many others had received severe injuries.

Mr Samuel M'Kim was shot in his own house, near Sligo, on the 3d instant, by some person who fired through the window; motive unknown. Patrick Curran, a substantial farmer, was rising from a chair at the fireside of his house, at Gurneen, near Clara, when he was in like manner wounded in the arm, shoulder, and breast, by a bullet and some slugs. On the 3d, James Murray and John Kennedy, brothers in law, quarrelled about some land they held jointly; there was a conflict among their friends, and Murray received a mortal blow, of which he died on the 5th. An armed party entered the house of Joseph Burk, at Douras, in King's County, on Friday, during the man's absence, fired shots over the head of his wife, destroyed some seed wheat, hay, and agricultural implements, and left word that Burk had better prepare his coffin; he is heard to Mr Blackett, who lately took some land from his tenants, making them compensation in money. William Shea, an old man, was killed with a stone by his son Michael, at Kilmarnock, near Clellan, because he was spreading some seed wheat for a sick son in law, with whom Michael had quarrelled.

Later dates say:—Agrarian outrages and murders continue to disgrace the news from Ireland. The black catalogue of crime in that country is mainly swelled by the competition which exists amongst the pauper peasants, for the possession or retention of a bit of land, on which to grow a few potatoes for the subsistence of life. The cupidity of the middleman—for the lord of the soil rarely troubles himself about anything so trifling as the human title on his estate—prompts him to exact terms which the peasant cannot fulfil. Distraints and evictions follow—and in their train comes revenge and murder. This is one of the primary causes of the assassination and outrages of which we read. Essentially an agricultural country, there is not, as a whole, a more poorly clad and wretchedly fed people than the Irish in existence. Their wants compel them to export to England the food which ought to support themselves. Absence of the want of capital—small, wretched farms—religious dissensions—political agitation—the grinding tyranny of the landlord's factotum—these are the root of Ireland's miseries. The anomaly is, that covered like a pall by the gloomiest misery, which bids him hope no more, and bars out all prospects of amelioration, the peasants of this otherwise beautiful land should present in the exuberance of his animal spirits, in the warmth of his feelings, in the generosity of his nature—traits of character which would ennoble the most prosperous nation in the world. The ways of Providence are impartial. It would seem that when life appears the most repulsive—when its path is strewn with thorns and briars, which to those in a happier state would render it insupportable, Providence manifests His goodness in dispensing to the peasant the blessings of a physical temperament so unctious, that riches cannot purchase it, nor luxuries create, nor any amount of enjoyment call into being. But a better day dawns upon Ireland. The introduction of rail roads will render labor more valuable. Capital, in its diffusion through the country, by their instrumentality, will irrigate districts, and shed the rays of contentment over homesteads that have long been strangers to the comforts of a well spread table.

CHINA.

We have news from China to the 12th of October. Commerce appears to be extending, and the Chinese aversion to intercourse with foreigners seems on the decrease.

VERY LATE FROM MEXICO.

It appears by the Charleston Courier of the 18th instant, that very interesting and important intelligence from Mexico has been received in that city via Havana. It is twenty days later than that brought by the Eugenia and Ventura.

We give it as it appeared in the Courier:—

We are indebted to the courtesy of Mr. Tripler, a passenger in the schr. F. A. Brown, arrived yesterday from Havana, for the information which follows:—

Mr. T. left Vera Cruz for Havana on the 2nd inst., in the British Mail steamer Dec., which vessel reached Havana of the 7th instant. At the last accounts, Santa Anna was at San Martin de Susmolaca, about four leagues from Puebla, with a force of about 3,000 men, mostly mounted on horses taken from the inhabitants. Gen. Paredes being in close pursuit with an army of 9,000 men, but manoeuvring and avoiding a conflict, as a matter of policy, as Santa Anna's forces were daily decreasing, on account of desertions from his ranks, while General P. was rapidly acquiring strength.

The city of Mexico had been well fortified, and every precaution taken to prevent or repel an assault. The aqueducts had been opened, and the mole which surrounds the city filled with water, and there was a force of some 30,000 armed citizens prepared to defend it. At Vera Cruz, also, fortifications were in process, and the citizens were arming. The steamer Montezuma left Vera Cruz a short time before the Dec. bound to Campeche for troops, and reinforcements were also expected from Alvarado and Tacatalpan.

A decree had been issued by the Mexican Congress declaring Santa Anna a traitor and an outlaw, and authorizing any who may meet with him to take his life. Measures had also been adopted to prevent his escape, by guarding the different seaports and other outlets, and it is believed that he must eventually be captured. A person named Arellano, an individual in the interest of Santa Anna, with additional confidential correspondence, had been taken, and it was supposed he would be executed.

Mr. Tripler states that the whole country is in a state of the utmost confusion—robberies of travellers were committed daily, and he himself was twice stripped of whatever was valuable about him, in his progress through Mexico, but without any indignity being offered to his person. It is the opinion of Mr. T. from what he could learn, that the new government would be as much if not more violently opposed to the annexation of Texas as the former, and states that Americans are held in great abhorrence, and receive frequent insults at the hands of the Mexicans.

From the N. O. Picayune, of the 21st ult. IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

Rumored Defeat and Capture of Santa Anna.

By the arrival at this port on Sunday of the last sailing schooner Sarah Ann, Davidson, master, we have advices from Tampico to the morning of the 13th inst., and from the city of Mexico to the 4th. To make the narrative more intelligible, we go back to the 1st inst., when Santa Anna was at the village of Ayotla, a few miles southeast of the capital. On the march from Huehuetoca to this point he is said to have lost over 2,000 men by desertion, and from want of resources to pay his remaining troops, extensive dissatisfaction reigned among them. To encourage this spirit, and to enable them to desert his standard to do so with safety, Gen. Bravo sallied forth from the capital on the 1st, at the head of 3,000 picked men, to harass the tyrant in his operations, but without offering him battle. At the same time, Congress issued a decree by which it was ordered that all officers under Santa Anna should be deprived of their commissions, and be incapable of ever after holding one in the Mexican service, unless, within eight days, they gave in their adhesion to the acting government. This, of course, increased the progress of disorganization in the tyrant's forces, and he was forced to measures of extreme cruelty to check it. Finding all demonstrations against the capital useless, and having accomplished nothing by intrigues and machinations, he now directed his march against Puebla, with the view to carry that city before the forces of the government should be concentrated by the arrival of Gen. Paredes from Queretaro. At the head of 7,000 troops, and Gen. Guzman with about 1,000 more. Puebla had been put in a complete state of defence, and the commandant was confident of his ability to hold out against Santa Anna until the complete concentration of the government forces. Troops of cavalry, were organizing in the cities of Tlaxcala, Huamantla, Orizaba, Perote, and Jalapa, with a view to apprehend Santa Anna, should he be forced to fly.

The next news we have is derived from a short letter which we find in the Bee and the Tropic of yesterday, dated Tampico, January 14th, announcing the defeat of Santa Anna by the combined forces of Paredes and Bravo, on the plains of Appan, in the immediate vicinity of Puebla. Five hundred men are said to have fallen in the fight, and Santa Anna to have been taken in endeavoring to make his escape. The letter adds that Paredes was in full pursuit of the routed forces, while Bravo marched back to the capital with his prisoners.

The news of this battle is somewhat doubtful; at any rate there must be some error in the date. Captain Davidson says that he sailed from Tampico on Monday morning, the 13th, and made 195 miles that day by the log. He further states that the mail came in from Mexico on Sunday, the 12th, and that the latest news it brought from Mexico was to the 4th. He likewise spoke with his consignee the morning he sailed, who assured him that there was no later news in town. The letter announcing the battle says news to the 9th had been received by express from Mexico. Capt. Davidson himself puts no confidence in this. We have no means ourselves of forming any opinion on the subject. It is certain that an action was anticipated, and had it been known in Mexico the morning of the 6th that one had actually taken place, it might have been expressed to Tampico by the day the Sarah Ann sailed. On the other hand, rumors had been received in Mexico as early as the third, that a battle had been fought on the plains of Appan, with precisely the same results as are mentioned in the express letter, but the Mexican editors in their papers of the 4th totally discredit them. The reader will form his own opinion in the premises; we are inclined to be incredulous.

Capt. D. informs us that although Santa Anna was contending against such vast odds, his situation was not deemed in Tampico to be utterly desperate. It was even reported there that his advance upon Puebla was hailed with joy by the citizens. This again must be deemed, but a rumor. It is stated that an express rider between Vera Cruz and Mexico had been taken by Santa Anna, and by his orders had received 200 lashes, from the effects of which it was thought he must die. The atrocities of the tyrant, in checking the insubordination of his troops and in levying contributions for their support upon the villages and towns, are represented as characteristically heartless and shocking to humanity.

The Diplomatic corps, with the French Ambassador, Baron Alley de Cypre, at their head, offered their congratulations to Gen. Herrera on the 1st inst.

Gen. Cortezar, who, it will be recollected, deserted from Santa Anna at Coahuila, the latter has at length entangled by an act of audacious treachery, and at last accounts held him a prisoner.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 12, 1845.

Our messengers who went into the country with an "Extra" from this city not long since, as far as returned, bring very favorable reports as to the disposition of the inhabitants with respect to Nauvoo; good, a union of honest men can do much.

CHANGE OF WEATHER.

The weather has been somewhat colder for the past week, and the ice has run in such quantities as to obstruct the navigation of the river.

From appearance, however, we shall expect the river clear by the first of March, ready for a brisk business.

Mr. Phelps takes this channel to present his thanks to our Representative in Congress, Mr. Hoag, for favors from Washington.

WANDERING LETTER.

A letter mailed at Chicago for "New Palestine," after having flourished round among sundry offices in Iowa for a place of "rest," was sent to the office in this city; but as the law requires letters to be forwarded specifically to the place of destination, "westward," it takes its flight.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Church of England seems to be in exalted tribulation. A letter from the Bishop of Exeter, on the 11th of November last, addressed to the clergy of his diocese on the subject of the observance of the rubric, has caused a great sensation. Among other heterodoxies we see stated, that some of the English Divines, in repeating the creed, use the words "blessed when they repeat the phrase, 'born of the Virgin Mary,' and an arch deacon, Wilberforce, has said that the use of the material cross is proper. This, says this divine, as well as a publication called the Ecclesiologist, is the true protection of Christians. They are never as safe as under it. The graves in a church yard and the cottages in a village, cluster around it in security." Mr. Ward, of Balliol College, Oxford has recently published a tract called the Idea of a Christian Church. In this, he says boldly, "in subscribing to the articles, I renounce as one Roman doctrine." Mr. Ward was summoned before the authorities of Oxford to explain his meaning. His defence was that his name was not on the title-page of the work.—Gazette.

So the church militant, in addition to the breach of Puseyism, begins to show signs of woe. We have heard, by the bye, that some wise clergymen of the said church, petitioned his holiness the Pope, for an ordination under his gracious hand, but the "head of catholicity," informed him that he must renounce his heresy first. Now, the substance, for more properly the want of substance, in the sectarian world, is that God is not in all their ways, and so every man goes his own way.

The present christian world exists and continues by division. The MYSTERY of Babylon the great, is mother of harlots and abominations of the earth, and it needs no prophetic vision, to unravel such mysteries. The old church is the mother, and the protestants are the frowd daughters. Alas! alas! what doctrine, what principle, or what scheme, in all christianendom, has produced the apostolic union? What prayers, what devotion, or what faith, "since the fathers have fallen asleep," has opened the heavens; has brought men into the presence of God; and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to an innumerable company of angels? The answer is, not any.—There is none in all christiandom that doeth good; no, none. To be sure they love the uppermost rooms at feasts and the chief seats in the synagogues. They wear soft raiment, and go in chains, but the prayers of the poor, steeped in tears, are bottled up in heaven, as a testimony against them, and they cannot escape the due demerits of their hypocrisy.

All kingdoms but Daniel's set up in the last days, must break to pieces. So success to the divisions of christians: they will help hasten the latter-day glory. God and Mormonism forever!

From the Quincy Herald.

MORMON MEETING.

A meeting was called at the court house on Monday evening last, to listen to the refutation of the many charges of crime and misdemeanors brought against the Mormons by those living in the vicinity of Nauvoo. We were not present, but understand that an address was made, and some strong resolutions read, which were passed at a meeting of the City Council of Nauvoo, and of the citizens. These resolutions deny the crimes which have been laid to the Mormons, as a community. Since the destruction of the press, and the death of the Smiths, we have heard of nothing laid at the door of the Mormons that should rest upon them as a people. Crimes doubtless, have been committed by individuals, but the innocent should not be made to suffer with the guilty. Let the Mormons ferret out and expose the committers of crime, and bring them to justice, as their resolutions contemplate, and there can be no ground of complaint by either friend or foe.

The above is tolerable fair: though one thing is certain, whether before or "since the death of the Smiths" the Mormons as a body are not guilty of any crime.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The following communication comes from a way-faring man, who stopped a short time in Springfield, to watch the movements of the "head of Illinois."

Springfield, Jan. 34, 1845

Mr. Editor,—You may feel some little desire to learn the doings of the august body now in Session, in this place, not that I have any reason to believe, that you devote much of your time, in hearing and seeing new things, but that you may be able to declare things "new and old." I will, in a brief manner, give you some old discoveries, and some of the new inventions.

It has been discovered, that the State of Illinois, is in debt, in round numbers, the small sum of $14,000,000!

It has been discovered, that a large portion of this debt, is for money borrowed, for internal improvements of the State of Illinois. It has been discovered, that there is no internal improvement in this State, that is bringing one dollar's worth of revenue to the State; another discovery is inevitable, that the annual interest of the State debt is about $700,000!

The present revenue of the State, is not sufficient to pay the net expenditure of the State government, and of course, the State debt is increasing.

Seven hundred thousand dollars yearly! These are old things, that I am afraid Sir, will never be done away.

Now, to some of the new prodigies that seems to be engrossing the spirit of the dreams of the members of the Legislature, here you have it:

"A Bill for an Act to provide for paying a portion of the Interest on the State debt."

"That there shall be assessed and collected for State purposes for the year 1845, three mills on each dollar's worth of property."

"For the year 1846, three and half mills upon each dollar's worth of property; and for the year 1847, and for ever thereafter, until otherwise provided by law, four mills on each dollar's worth of property."

Sec. 2d. The proceeds of one mill on a dollar of said tax for the year 1845, and one and a half mills for the year 1846, and two mills for 1847, and for ever thereafter, until otherwise provided by law, together with all the surplus money in the treasury, after paying the expences of the government, shall be set apart and sacredly held for the payment of interest on the public debt, and shall be called the "Interest Fund."

Out of this fund, the Governor, on the first day of July 1846, is to pay one per cent, on all the bonds of the state, the remainder of the interest, the state is to issue "State Scrip," to be paid in land, belonging to the state.

This bill further provides, that no bond holder shall receive the one per centum in cash, unless he will also receive the five per centum in Land Scrip.

Now sir, this looks very plausible, but let me for a moment apply the pruning knife, to this great discovery of the mode and means of paying the interest on the state debt.

This additional tax will amount to $100,000, for 1845, and for 1846, it will increase, $10,000; that with this increase of taxation, upon the people, there will be nearly $600,000, to be paid out of the public lands. The amount of public land as near as I can ascertain is, about 500,000 acres, (some sold out, the amount not ascertained.)

Now suppose this land should be valued at six dollars per acre, the aggregate amount would be, somewhere about, one million four hundred thousand dollars. Then sir, in 1848 with the increase of taxation, and the sale of the public lands, both the State and Canal land, the state would then fall in debt on the annual interest alone about $300,000.

Then, in 1848, the people have paid out of their pockets, some $350,000, and all the public lands gone and a debt of $14,300,000 hanging over their heads!

These calculations are general, but you may calculate more minutely for yourself.

This then, is a specimen of the present spirit of financiering of the state. I will now pass on to another curiosity. The senate has passed a bill, and it is now before the house for action; the bill provides, that when any people of color shall come to this state, they shall be brought before any Magistrate without process, and if they cannot shew "free papers," fers very widely from the healthy additions made to our population from the industrious and down-trodden masses, who seek a home among us that they may enjoy the fruits of their own labor, and the blessings of equal laws and free government. They are always welcome, whether they come from Great Britain, or from any other of the over-burdened states of the old world. Our hearts and our wide spread domain are alike open to them.

HENRY VANDERVOORT, Clk.

As an illustration of the effect on the eastern states, of emptying the poor houses and jails of Europe on our shores, the following items, furnished by our exchange papers, are in point.

In Massachusetts in 1843, the amount invested in almshouses was $387,127, and the nett amount of public expenditure was $286,686.

In the state of New York in 1843, the number of regular paupers supported was 82,754, and the number of temporary paupers was 62,047, making the number of paupers in all 144,801, or one to every 18 of the inhabitants. The expenditure for the support of this number of paupers for the year 1843, reached the enormous sum of $592,353, being an increase over the preceding year of $72,989.

The cause of this increase of burdens is one that must spread from its very nature, and we at the west cannot long expect to escape its full influence. A similar increase in criminal expenditure may be noted in our cities. We can afford to be indebted to Europe for the arts of civilization brought to us by her intelligent and industrious citizens, but we desire not the importation of the means of their destruction, nor do we need foreign examples in crime and demoralization. [Western Paper.]

The Lost Pie.—It was many years ago, that a middle aged matron and her maiden sister, on the approach of Thanksgiving, were in the midst of preparation for that annual festival. It was late in the evening; the spacious kitchen seemed all too small for the vast quantities of delicacies it contained. Often had the various kinds of pies been drawn from the ample oven, and deposited on dresser, table, and chairs, in admirable confusion. From early morning to this late hour, and the mistress of all this good cheer been laboring hard, and now she threw her portly and wearied form, in the great arm chair, to view her treasures. She carefully counted over her pies, and lo! one was gone! She knew the capacity of her oven, and how many times it had been filled, and her arithmetic told her by figures that will not lie, that a pie was missing. She counted again, and the wanderer could not be found. She was troubled, perplexed, and nervous. She had made the discovery that the missing pie was a pumpkin pie—of extra size—all ornamented with scalloped rim and various indentations, in a word, it was the Pie which was to grace the centre of the table at the feast. No wonder, then, our lady grew warm with agitation, and it seemed to her that an unwonted warmth also came from the seat of the arm chair. She arose to cool her body and calm her spirit, when a loud scream from Becky, the maiden sister, opened the way to as full knowledge of the catastrophe. It seems that the good lady had placed the unlucky pie in the great arm chair, and unfortunately threw herself into her accustomed seat. When she arose, the horror struck Becky saw the yellow treasure sticking to the ample rear of the matron like a "Poor Man's Plaster," and her hysteric screams made known the discovery to her astonished sister. [Salem Gaz.]

Power of Hornets.—In "Sleeman's East India Rambles" we find the following description of the immense power of the hornets in that section, and of the terrible effect created in an encampment by a swarm of them:

I have seen six companies of infantry, with a train of artillery, and a squadron of horse, all put to rout by a single nest of hornets and driven off some miles with all their horses and bullocks. The officers generally save themselves by keeping within their tents, and creeping under their bed clothes or their carpet; and servants often escape by covering themselves up in their blankets, and lying perfectly still. Horses are often stung to a state of madness, in which they throw themselves over precipices, and break their limbs or kill themselves. The grooms, in trying to save their horses, are generally the people who suffer most in a camp attacked by such an enemy. I have seen some stung as to recover with difficulty; and I believe there have been instances of people not recovering at all. In such a frightful scene I have seen a bullock sitting and chewing the cud as calmly as if the whole thing had been got up for his amusement! The hornets seldom touch any animal that remains perfectly still.

Fiendish Barbarity by a Slave.—On Monday afternoon, the 13th inst. his honor the Mayor, received through the Post Office, an anonymous letter, informing him, that there was confined in a house No. 52 Bayou Road, a female slave, the prisoner of her slave, who for some time past had been treated in a most horrid manner. The Mayor, accompanied by Recorder Genois, some officers of the police, immediately repaired to the spot designated in the letter, where they found Mrs. Rabenack, the lady of the house, with three of her children, aged seven, four and two years, confined in a back cabinet, all of them in a most horrid condition; dressed in rags, covered with dirt, and so emaciated, that it appeared astonishing that they could support life. The body of Mrs. R. was covered with bruises from her head to her feet, and in many places, showed marks where the instruments of flagellation had broken the skin. Both of her eyes were blackened, and her hair was matted with blood.

The three children presented nearly the same shocking condition, the two oldest in particular. Upon being questioned by the Mayor, as to the cause of her condition, Mrs. R. seeing that her slave Pauline being present—answered that she had been beaten by her husband and showed much agitation and fear, when over the eyes of her servant were turned upon her. Upon the servant being removed, Mrs. R. stated that she was afraid of telling the truth in her presence, for fear that she would kill her and her children.

Her husband, she said, had been absent on a visit to Missouri for the last six weeks, since which time Pauline had taken possession of her keys and bed-room, and confined herself and children in her (Pauline's) room, where they had been beaten almost daily by Pauline, with a cane or strap, and had been furnished with barely sufficient food to support life. Medical aid and attention was immediately furnished by the Mayor, and the negro Pauline arrested and committed to prison to await an examination before Recorder Genois.

The penalty of the charges preferred against her, if found guilty, under the Black Code, is death.

It is stated that the husband of the woman had instigated his slave, who was also his paramour, to the commission of this horrid outrage. If so, we hope he will not go unwhipped of justice. [N. O. Bee.]

Dreadful death.—A watchman of New York, on Saturday night, the 11th inst. about 12 o'clock, in going his rounds, heard groans proceeding from the opposite side of the way, and on crossing over to the kiln, he saw two boys, named Robert Kelly and John Colihan, lying on their backs on the top of the kiln and groaning. On examining Kelly, he found he was dead, the back of his head and clothes being considerably burned; the other lad was not dead, though his clothes were smoking. The fire was in the kilns, and the gas arose in considerable quantities, so that the lad had been suffocated from it. It is supposed that the boys had been out late, and were unable to get into their houses, and laid down upon the tops of the kilns for a warm. Kelly was about 14 years of age and resided directly opposite the place where he met his death.

There are but 2000 slaves in Delaware; and the State being out of debt, and having a large surplus fund over, it is said, an attempt will be made to emancipate all these slaves by compensating their owners out of the State Treasury. It is said three-fourths of the people are favorable to this.

Tune.—"Thou, thou, dwelt in this bosom."

Weep, weep not for me, Zion;

Rejoice now, and sing ye a loud,

Pray, pray that Judah's fierce lion,

May quickly descend with a cloud;

Haste, haste, O quickly descend in a cloud.

To smite with the rod of his power;

To lay Zion's enemies low.

While flows on his countenance low r,

Thy sink to perdition and woe.

Yes, yes, they sink to perdition and woe.

Long, long, dear saints we have wandered;

Yet, yet, do not complain.

Oh, oh, our all has been plundered;

The loss, is our infinite gain.

Yes, yes, the loss is our infinite gain.

Cease, cease, your sighing and weeping;

Mouth not, neither repine.

Now I'm in heaven's blest keeping;

With Jesus I ever shall shine.

Yes, yes, with Jesus, I ever shall shine.

Moh, moh, of all you've bereft me;

Home, friends, pleasures sweet;

Now, now, from your powers I'm free;

You and I never shall meet.

No, no, you and I never shall meet.

Go, go, ye wretches who've slain me;

Now, now, your power is o'er.

Though in the tomb they have lain me,

I'm resting on Zion's bright shore.

Yes, yes, I'm resting on Zion's bright shore.

Weep not, Zion's fair maidens,

Have sons, weep not for me;

Crown'd now with glory I'm laden,

Now happy I ever shall be.

Yes, yes, now happy I ever shall be.

Sad was the hour of parting;

Then, then, fell many a tear.

Soon, you'll be over the smiling,

And meet with the Holy ones here.

Haste, haste, to meet with the Holy ones here.

Heaves, heaves each bosom with sorrow!

Anguish, how I rent the pain.

Soon, soon will come that blest morrow,

When you will see Joseph again.

Then, then, you will see Joseph again.

Then, then, how happy the meeting;

Joy, joy, each bosom will fill;

With Joseph and Hyum then greeting,

On Zion's throne shall sit still.

Yes, yes, on Zion's throne shall sit still.

REMARKS.

Of Mr. ROSS, in the House of Representatives, January 18, upon the bill to repeal the Nauvoo charter.

Mr. ROSS of Fulton, said, as he had the honor of introducing the amendment to the Senate bill which provides for the unconditional repeal of the charter of the city of Nauvoo, it would be but right he should define his position, and offer to the House some of the reasons which induced him to take this course.

He was not prepared to say the amendment offered by him was entirely objectionable, but its object was to embody in the act of repeal a modified charter, thus removing all the features, and doing away with the incorporated powers contained in the old one, of which so much complaint is made; and at the same time, to reserve the necessary powers for them to maintain their internal police, and thus do justice to all parties. It may be the amendment grants too much power. If so, it could be referred to an appropriate committee, and so modified and restricted, as to meet the approbation of this House, and answer the purpose of those for whose benefit it is granted.

I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that an excitement prevails abroad, and here upon this question, and there is danger that prejudice will have some influence upon the minds of many, but it is important in our legislative capacity, that our deliberations should be governed, and our actions influenced by motives of justice and right. I am in hopes in discussing this question I may be able to remove from my breast every thing like prejudice.

With the Mormons, as a people, I am in no way connected; I have nothing to expect from them in a political point of view, they constitute no part of my constituency. And as for their religion, I hold it in utter disregard, and think it one of the shallowest devices, which for centuries past has been imposed upon the intelligence of Christendom. Allusions have been made, and much has been said upon this floor and elsewhere, about the manner in which that bill originated, and first became a law. And as I had the honor of occupying a seat in the Legislature at that time, I deem it due myself and that body to state, for the information of the House, the facts in relation to the matter. That bill, sir, was introduced in the Senate, passed that branch of the General Assembly, and was sent to this House. Upon its appearance here, impressed with the importance of weighing well all acts of incorporation, I asked for its reading. The member from Hancock arose in his place, and stated that the bill was read in the Senate, and referred to an appropriate committee, who reported it back, and recommended its passage. He said the bill was very lengthy, and being a matter entirely local in its nature, he hoped the gentlemen would not detain the House by having it read here, but let it pass. Every one appeared to be satisfied with the explanation; it was read three times by its title, and became a law.

It is urged that in accordance with democratic doctrines, all acts of incorporation should be restricted and guarded. There is also another doctrine as well acknowledged, and just as binding in view of the principles of that party, that all acts of legislation should bear the evident marks of equality; no preferences should be given, growing out of such acts, to one portion of the State or class of the community, over another; no individual distinctions made on account of political or religious sentiments.

He would go as far as any other man to curtail the privileges, and restrict the powers granted in city charters, but he would never consent to single out an isolated one—make it the mark of unequal proscription, and the solitary object of legislative vengeance.

If the gentlemen are desirous of repealing the act incorporating the city of Nauvoo, let them embrace every other city charter in the State of Illinois, and I will be with them; but I cannot lead my feeble influence, and sanction by my vote any system of partial legislation. If as gentlemen urge, the general incorporation act is sufficient for the wants and convenience of that people, it is sufficient for any other people, and there is no article in my political creed which teaches me to make distinctions between religious denominations, in bestowing the benefits of legislation in this republican country.

I was in hopes, Mr. Speaker, that party considerations would not have been lodged into this discussion, nor allowed to exert any influence over the action of the House upon this question.

When Democrats oppose the unconditional repeal of the charter of Nauvoo, they are charged with departing from one of the land marks of their political fraternity. How is it with the Whigs—the champions of chartered and vested rights, while advocating the doctrine of repeal by legislative action, regardless of justice and of right—fling they abandoned their deep-rooted prejudices in relation to matters of this sort? Are they willing to acknowledge the correctness of our positions, and make them their abiding places in future? Are they like Paul of old, who at noon day saw a light from Heaven, which fell around him? Have the scales at last fell from their eyes, and have they for the first time discovered a charm in what they conceive to be democratic principles? If so, I hope they may persevere in the good work, finish their faith, and await the crown of glory, which will be in store for them and all the faithful.

The democratic doctrine, however, is to repeal not only the objectionable provisions in the city charter of Nauvoo, but of all others in the State.

The gentleman from Macon, (Mr. Benedict) said, the public peace requires a repeal. I differ with him entirely in that. I am strongly of the opinion that it is necessary for them to have some act left them, under which they could organize, and maintain an efficient internal police.

The excitement which has prevailed, and the prejudice which now exists in the surrounding country; must subject them to insults and violence, from which they would have no protection for their persons or their property. The disgraceful scenes which have so recently occurred in Hancock County, will be resumed. Persons who were engaged in those difficulties will warm again into action, their prejudices and their passions. Revenge will sharpen the sword of persecution, and that people driven to the last extremity of desperation, and infuriated by the potent power of religious fanaticisms will be aroused to action. Our State, instead of being restored to permanent peace, would be again involved in scenes of increased difficulties, and infested with the riotous passions of mobs. I am certain the only way to secure to our State, that tranquility and safety so much desired by men and legislators, who have the good of the community at heart, is to avoid the two extremes. We have Scylla on the one side, Charybdis on the other. One is the charter as it is, and the other its unconditional repeal. I would take a middle course, I would expanse from it all its objectionable features, and thus adapt it to the wants and capacities of the people; in this way we should secure them in the possession of their just rights. Put them upon an equality with the citizens of other cities. Serve the public interests and have the satisfaction of reflecting that we had been impartial in the discharge of our legislative duties.

Another reason urged by the gentleman from Macon, in favor of the unconditional repeal is, that the citizens of Nauvoo are hived up. I cannot see the force of that argument. I had always thought that acts of incorporation were granted for city purposes, for the very reason that people are thrown together in masses so as to suppress disorders and insure the public peace. I do not know what idea the gentleman intends to convey by saying they are hived up. They are not so much so as the inhabitants of other cities, for I am informed their lots contain one acre each. And I cannot see for the life of me, why we should single them out and make them an exception to all others, and visit upon them the spleen of legislative vengeance.

A tirade of abuse has been heaped upon the Mormon leaders. It is easy to make attacks and offer charges against any man or set of men who occupy a considerable station in the community. But sir, it is no part of my nature to endeavor to traduce and blacken the character of any individual, neither is it just or generous to make distinctions or give preferences upon the grounds urged against that people, we should recollect they are a part and portion of our common State; just as much entitled to the privileges of our institutions, and the protection of our laws as any other. Too much credit should not be given to the stories and reports so rife in this community. They originated in excitement, have been upon our public journals, many of them are without foundation in truth, and not worthy even a serious consideration, and should not for one moment be entertained by this House to influence their action upon the subject matter of this debate.

Mr. Speaker, it is not new nor strange that under the circumstances which surround that people, persecutions should arise. They are a new sect of religionists, and all history goes to prove that whenever any bold stroke has been made upon preconceived and long established opinions, the innovators have been marked as objects of public execration, and often visited with public violence. Yes, sir; it was so upon the first introduction of the light of christianity to a dark and benighted Pagan world. The meek and lowly followers of Jesus Christ suffered persecution, even to the fagot and the flame. France and Spain have exhibited spectacles of blood and infamy, brought about by their religious intolerance sanctioned by her inquisitorial courts, the seeds of which the pages of faithful history forbear to mention. But who can for one moment reflect upon the ravages and inroads made upon the social and civil institutions of those nations by religious persecutions, and then shut his eyes and stop his ears to the first appearance and warning voice of the approaching evil. There is danger that we are in some measure to be influenced by the same spirit manifested in other days, its unhallowed touch has more than once polluted the skirts of our garments. Yes, sir, in this country of boasted liberty, where religious toleration is claimed to be one of the cardinal points of our compass. We have some times missed our course and found our way among the shoals and quicksands of persecution. The history of our own country is not entirely free from the marks and stains of black and unholy proscription. I hold in my hand, Mr. Speaker, the records of some of the doings of even the Pilgrim fathers of our land, who, though they fled from persecution themselves, exercised its intolerant spirit towards others.

Mr. Ross read from Sewel's History, as follows: "In the year 1659, a law was made (against Quakers) which besides imposing heavy penalties, and imprisonment, extended to working in the house of correction, severe whipping, cutting off ears, and boring through their tongues with red hot irons, whether male or female, and such like inhuman barbarities."

According to the same author, a law was made by the court of Boston, October 20th. 1659, of which the following is an extract: "Whereas, there is a pernicious sect (commonly called Quakers,) do take upon themselves to change and alter the received laudable customs of our nation, and also to destroy the orders of the churches by denying all established forms of worship; for prevention thereof, this court doth order and enact that every person or persons being convicted to be of the Quakers, shall be sentenced to be banished, upon pain of death."

Yes, Mr. Speaker, in this country so much lauded for its institutions of civil and religious freedom, the pure and unfeeling Quakers, for daring the change of established customs and orders of the church have been the victims of cruel persecution, have had their ears cut off and their tongues bored with red hot irons, and even banished under the pain of death. So it was upon the reception of the doctrines of the church founded by the distinguished John Wesley. He was charged 'with hatching blasphemy,' having a forehead petrified and impervious to a blush, 'a shameless traducer.' And the Rev. Doct. Wylie, a Presbyterian, describes his followers as clouds of illiterate Methodist locusts which darken the horizon of these States. The infuriate zeal with which they propagate their poisonous doctrines, resembles much the Scribes and Pharisees, mentioned in Matthew xxiii, 15.

They were styled Methodist loafers, and branded with all the opprobrious epithets which the fruitful imaginations of bigotry could conceive of the unhallowed spirit of hatred desire. Yes sir, that class of religionists now so respectable, and whose annual increase is 120,000 in these United States, not more than 150 years ago, was reviled and persecuted, even by the pretended champions of religious toleration; and does not, I ask, the language of the gentleman from Macon, but too plainly show that he too entertains feelings of bitterness and hatred towards a religious sect, and partakes in some degree of the proscriptive spirit of 1659.

The purest religion in the world will meet with persecution, and it is neither new nor strange to see excitement raised upon the introduction of any religious faith or novel mode of worship. An excitement has been raised, prejudice aroused, and passions fanned into a flame against the Mormons. And gentlemen are now found to occupy high seats in this Honorable legislative body, who stoop beneath a cringing spirit, to pandor with so base a prejudice.

Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to make this a party discussion, neither should I, had not the gentleman from Morgan (Mr. Yates) digressed from the subject, and made an attack upon the principles of the democratic party. I feel bound to notice his remarks, I hope the House will pardon me for departing from the question under debate, until I can say a few words in reply. He says, in speaking of the doctrine of the repeal of charters, and the taking away of chartered rights as held by the political party, of which I am an humble member, that it is radical, agrarian, and tends to bring us to poverty and disgrace.

I will inform the gentleman that he is not alone in this opinion. That although a large majority of the States of this Union, and a majority of 13,000 of the intelligent citizens of Illinois, have decided in favor of the doctrines held by the democratic party; yet, he need not be disheartened, he is not alone in his opinions. He is backed by the aristocracy of our own country, and has a great many friends on the other side of the water.

He belongs to a political party, whose doctrines are held, and whose sentiments are responded to by other men than citizens of this republic. And I will read for the gentleman's satisfaction, an extract from one of the periodicals published where his doctrines are better received, and his political principles better appreciated. The London Spectator, which is as follows:—

"There is nothing surprising in the result of the Presidential election in the U. States. It is merely a repetition of what has happened at every election since 1800. The democratic mass has obtained another victory over the Doctrinaries of America. Since the recognition of American Independence in Great Britain, there has always been a Doctrinaire party in the Union; it has been almost a hereditary party. Hamilton was in a manner its founder; the two Adamses have been its principal ornaments. It has enrolled under its banners a decided majority of the public men of the Union, who, born to a competency, have enjoyed a systematic education and opportunities of cultivating refined tastes. It has been an intelligent and on the whole an honorable party—rather sceptical, the natural tendency of men of the world, as to the perfectibility of man or the wisdom and virtue of the masses—with a good deal of knowledge, a great deal of fastidiousness, and a little pedantry. This party has from its character been more powerful in coteries than with the public. It has had too much faith in abstractions and precedents to know and control actual circumstances; its little air of superior refinement and learning have alienated and disgusted the great body of electors. It has called itself federalist at one time and whig at another; but it has still been the same unchanged and unchangeable party, the counterpart of the Girondins or the Doctrinaires of France—of the 'Liberal Whigs' or 'the Educated Radicals' of England. Opposed to this party of men made by schools and colleges, has always been the great democratic mass."

By this extract, it will be seen his doctrines are not without friends some where, though rather meagre here, and that the gentleman may not be discouraged upon the recent defeat of his party, I will read again from the Liverpool Mail, Nov. 30, a short article from the pen of one of his friends in that quarter, upon the triumph of democratic principles in the election of James K. Polk, President of the United States. Mr. Ross read the following:—

From the Liverpool Mail, Nov. 30. "A citizen of the name of Polk—a man unknown to fame—has been virtually elected President of the United States of America, thereby defeating the pretensions of Mr. Henry Clay. Mr. Polk, who stood on the loco foco or rabble interest has declared himself favorable to the annexation of Texas to the Federal Union, to slavery, and a modified tariff. Mr. Clay is what the Americans call a 'whig' an anti-slavery, a man of peace, favorable to a stiff tariff, heavy customs, and unbounded protection to American manufactures. How he came to be beaten is rather curious."

The false, if not fraudulent, principle upon which the American constitution is founded, is year by year sinking the republic in the mire. For instance, it is the law there that every foreigner who comes has it in his power, by means of declaration, to become a free citizen, and vote in the elections. The Americans thought this wise policy at the commencement of their independence, on the principle that, having stolen the property of their kings, they had a right to steal his or any other king's subjects. It is an advantage that stolen property never thrives—never, in the end, benefits the thief; and the Americans have at length discovered this to be a fact. For many years, tens of thousands of Irishmen, Germans, Poles, and other foreigners, have landed on their shores, a vast proportion of them in rags, hungry, and homeless, ready, of course, to work, beg, fight, or do anything for a dish of potatoes, a slice of pumpkin pie, and a draught of sour cider. These men have become electors; and they are not only formidable in point of numbers, but, what is more to the purpose, every man's vote is worth from ten to fifteen dollars in all the large towns. They consequently carry all the elections by force and fraud."

Various extracts might be quoted to back the proposition of the gentleman from Morgan, but I think enough has been read to show the true position of the two political parties in this country, upon the principles which he attacked, and he should be ready to acknowledge what the unprecedented success of the democratic party goes to prove that his positions are fast losing ground here, however much it may be regretted in England or elsewhere.

But having necessarily digressed to follow the gentleman, I will now return to the subject. I will give some of the reasons why I am of the opinion the bill should not pass, repealing unconditionally the charter of Nauvoo. One of which is, by so doing we shall take part in and prejudice the judicial proceedings now pending in Hancock County. Cases have been brought into existence by the difficulties there, men have been arrested, and stand charged with the crime of murder, who look with more anxiety, and depend more upon the action of the House than they do upon legal proceedings, of the justice of their cause. By repealing that charter, we throw the mantle of public sanction over their acts of violence, screen them from the just punishment of their crimes, and give our legislative endorsement to murder of the deepest and darkest hue.

And upon what information are we called to act in this matter? Is it from vague rumors or reports which have circulated throughout the length and breadth of our State? Do not gentlemen know that they had originated in excitement, and were borne out upon the wings of scandal against that people? Prejudices kindled and enlivened the coals of calumny—passion fanned them to a flame, and the Mormons have been the victims of the devouring elements.

Is it from information from the Executive, who was forced to visit the scenes, to maintain inviolate the public peace? Who is conversant with the facts, and knows full well the history of the Hancock difficulties? What does all information go to prove? He tells us the Mormons were not the sole offenders, but that there was an attempt made to drive and exterminate them from the State.

The gentleman from Macon has been pleased to say, that the Governor's message, in relation to military encampments and wolf hunts, are all an 'idle tale,' but I think sir, this House will bear me out when I say it is an able and impartial document, and worthy of our confidence and respectful consideration. Does he recommend the unconditional repeal of their charter? No sir, but of its modification.

Why did the gentleman from Macon make an attempt to rally sectional feelings, and wake up the prejudices of the south against this people? As though an appeal made to their pockets, and chivalry would induce them to do an act of injustice. I trust all such attempts will be fruitless, and that the southern democracy will, without prejudice be now disposed to do them evenhanded justice.

Another reason, Mr. Speaker, why I am opposed to the unconditional repeal, and in favor of the amendment to the bill granting them a modified charter, is, that I believe Mormonism is a shallow device, and the history of all ages goes to prove that persecution will ever increase religious fanaticism. 'Some men may say and honest y think the passage of this bill will not be persecution; but sir, it will go before the world under no other color. It will be received by all Christendom as an act of religious intolerance. Sympathy will be aroused, and by its winning influence, bring thousands to their standard. Already have their sufferings been trumpeted throughout the Christian world. —Already has the murder of their prophet been heralded forth and will be echoed back from the very confines of civilization. Sir, repeal their charter, and you subscribe to those acts of violence and oppression, and make them the subject of vindictive legislation.

If we would stay the progress of religious fanaticism, and not increase the volarities of the Mormon humbug, (for I can call it nothing else) we must beware of persecution. Do this unjust, unequal act, and you increase their numbers and their strength.

The history of that people itself proves my position true; for they never increased so rapidly at any other time, as they did immediately after they were driven from the State of Missouri.

It was so with the abolitionists. Oppression has done more to increase their numbers than all other circumstances put together. Human nature is so constituted that persecution begets pity, which becomes in its maturity a strong passion.

Reference has been made by the gentleman from Macon to the communication from the twelve who are at the head of the Mormon church, to show that they will not consent to the repeal of their city charter. Suppose they think we have no power to repeal it—that it is beyond the reach of legislation, inasmuch as rights have become vested under its operations, is that any good reason why we should repeal it? Shall we do it to make a display of arbitrary power, and make them the objects of vindictive spleen? I trust not. We should weigh the matter well, follow the dictates of justice, and act up to the eternal principles of right.

It is urged, Mr. Speaker, that their are objectionable features in the charter—that it grants too much power. Cannot those provisions be expunged? Cannot the charter be modified, and thus remove the very cause of complaint? Most certainly, and that sir, is the object of the amendment to the bill under discussion. Would any gentleman urge upon this floor, that because there was a provision in our criminal code which inflicts too little or too much punishment for a certain crime, that the whole law should be wiped from our statute books? That sir, would be just as consistent to my mind as to repeal the city charter of Nauvoo because there are objectionable features in it.

We should not repeal but modify it.—Take from it all the unnecessary grants of power, and those most liable to abuse, and show by our acts that we are not influenced by prejudice, nor actuated by motives of hostility or revenge towards that people, and that we are willing to deal out evenhanded justice.

We are told that the citizens of Nauvoo destroyed a press, and in this country where freedom of speech and liberty of the press are held sacred, it is not strange that our feelings of indignation should be aroused at such a gross outrage upon the rights of any people. That however, was not the only press that has been destroyed in our State. Two were destroyed in the city of Alton, and the owner put to death for promulgating his doctrines of political economy, and did any proposition come up here for the repeal of their city charter in consequence of that act? An attack has been made here in this town of Springfield upon a printing office on account of political differences, and yet the legislature did not vent their spleen upon its act of incorporation.

They seek and single out one city to punish the crimes for which others go free. Excitements will sometimes arise, and the rage of heated passions rise above all law; but this to my mind is no reason why laws should be abolished.

But we are told, if this charter is repealed, we can give them a modified one. Can any man give a good reason why it cannot be done at once? If gentlemen are willing to vote for a charter restricted, or granting less privileges, and conferring less powers, why not do it now? Why not do it all at once, and secure to that people the rights and all benefits we intend to confer upon them at the same time we repeal their present charter. I do not wish to impugn any man's motives or charge any one with insincerity, but do not gentlemen know that even a modified charter, no matter how much restricted, after the old one is repealed, could not pass the Senate. We can give

FROM OREGON AND THE SOUTH SEA.

Files of Sandwich Island papers have been received to the 4th of September inclusive. They contain intelligence from Oregon to the 2d of August.

The Legislature of Oregon, (start not, dear reader, for such a Legislature does exist,) adjourned a few days before the 3d July, having passed some important laws. One of their acts is: "Any person who shall make, sell, or give away ardent spirits in the Territory of Oregon, south of the Columbia river, shall forfeit and pay $100 for each and every such offence." The Legislature is called the 'Legislative Committee,' and consists of nine persons elected by the people.

The officers of the Oregon Territory consist of three Governors, called the Executive Committee, a Supreme Judge, and a Legislative Council. The laws are the same as those governing the Territory of Iowa. The government is purely Democratic Republican. Dr Hakebeck is the Supreme Judge. The name of only one of the Governors, Dr Huly is mentioned. On the 1st of August a Belgian brig arrived at Oregon City, having on board a number of nuns and several Roman Catholic Priests, from Antwerp, sent out to Oregon by the Church of Rome.

It appears that the falls of the Wallacette river, 25 miles from the mouth of the Columbia river, will not admit the passage of vessels large enough for sea service.

Since the arrival in Oregon of the Rev Mr Gray, some important changes have been going on in the Methodist mission of which he is superintendent. The Indian school has been discontinued, and the building lately occupied by it has been sold to the Methodist Episcopal church lately organized, for a literary institution. The mission has also parted with its mills, herds of cattle, and nearly all its property, which the settlers bought at good prices. The lay missionaries were about to be dismissed, but would remain in the colony as settlers. The colony is in the most encouraging condition. The crops were giving promise of an abundant harvest.

People were coming into the territory in large numbers, and the country is filling up with thriving and enterprising colonists.

One of the settlers writes: "Come on brother Yankees, and make Oregon another New England."

Sandwich Islands.—A total Abstinence Temperance Society was organized at Honolulu on the 17th August, under the name of 'The Hawaiian Total Abstinence Union.' The people at the Hawaiian Islands, had nearly all grided in the temperance reform without a society, but they concluded last summer to follow the example of their brethren in America.

Officers of the Union.—Garrett P. Judd, President; Samuel C. Damon, Vice President; J. R. Von Pfister, Secretary; Richard Ford, J. S. Hart, Nelson Hall, and Robert Boyd, Vigilance Committee.

A beautiful little church has been built at Lahaina, Island of Maui, by donations from the masters and officers of whale ships. It is called the Seamen's Chapel. The Rev Mr Andrews succeeds the Rev Mr Baldwin as the Chaplain.

The Seamen's Chaplaincy at Honolulu is well attended.

The native shipping is rapidly increasing. In 1842 they had 10 ships of 351 tons, worth $22,300; in 1843, 11 ships of 483 tons, worth $28,800; in 1844, 14 ships of 635 tons, worth $45,300.

The brig Chenamus at Hawaii from Oregon, took the following cargo:

7937 feet pine lumber, 11 bbls. flour, 2 do. peas, 183 do. salmon, 1 box cheese, 1 trunk nankins, 7 cords wood, 85 1-4 M. shingles, 273 lbs. butter, 1 cask fish, 2 bbls. salmon, 2 do. flour, 1 do. peas, 2 M. feet lumber, E. O. Hall; 87 bbls. salmon, 67 do. flour, 3 boxes. E. Jones; 22 M. feet lumber, 20 bbls. salmon, L. Chamberlin; 9 bbls. peas, 38 bbls. shingles, 1625 feet lumber, 513 feet sawing, Ladd & Co.

The orders in council of his Hawaiian Majesty prescribing a court of etiquette, and placing the United States in the first rank, England second, and France third, has given offence to the representatives of France and England, though nothing serious is likely to grow out of it.

The Polynesian states that the Hawaiian Governor Kekunioa of Hawaii, gave a sumptuous dinner entertainment to his Majesty and court on Tuesday, the 27th August, at his residence in the Fort. The arrangements were admirable, and our hosts of the French Hotel, who provided the viands, did themselves much credit by their excellence and variety.

The Canton Hotel is said to be opened by a China-man for boarders and travellers. It was formerly called the Warren Hotel. The keeper, Mr Huang, solicits a share of public patronage, having a billiard room, bowling alley, and secured the services of superior Chinese cooks and waiters.

A Boston built four wheeled buggy, lined with drab colored cassimere, and harness, is offered for sale.

Compositors are wanted at the office of the Polynesian, published at Honolulu.

Harnden's expresses are advertised in that paper.

It is wonderful to contemplate the improvement in that country, among the savages of those islands within a few years, and it is highly gratifying to those who took an early interest in their welfare.

SETH LUTHER, of Rhode Island, is lecturing at the west on Rhode Island affairs. Seth is a suffrage man.

LATE AND TRUE FROM OREGON.

The following letter from an emigrant new in Oregon, appears in the last Western (Missouri) Journal. It states much truth which had already been proclaimed by Farnham and by many others, but which the adventurers who are luring thousands to settle in Oregon are continually lying down. Why will people choose to be deceived? The Oregonian says:

I left the Shawnee mission on the 29th of May; our route was through the Caw Indian country, which is good, has considerable timber, and is well watered. It is a bad country for wagons to travel through, having so many sloughs and bad creeks; the teams were often stalled, and made slow progress. We had three rivers and creeks to cross before we reached Platte river. The Platte river has good grass—plenty of it—but is destitute of timber; here we saw the first buffalo, they were poor and tough. We saw a few of the Pawnee Indians, they are fine looking fellows, and, no doubt, live well on buffalo meat; they are quite treacherous. We reached the crossing of the Platte on the 2d day of July, a little more than one month out. The travelling up Platte is very good, level and hard. We struck from this to the north fork of the Platte, one day's travel. On the 15th of July we arrived at the crossing of Larimer's fork at the fort of the American Fur Company. Before arriving here, we saw many splendid sights; also many of the dog towns that you have heard of. I saw quantities of the dogs; they are small, round animals, the size of a cat. Certain it is that there are owls that visit them, also rattle snakes; but for what reason is matter of dispute. After we left Larimer, we came to the Black Hills, the worst of all travelling, hilly, sandy, and full of wild sage, it is death on a wagon. The country is all of this barren, sandy kind, until we reach Fort Hall, and destitute of timber. Arrived at Fort Hall 13th of September, after experiencing some cold rains, snows, hail, &c.

At Fort Hall we could get no provisions, and were obliged to go down the river (the Snake), and depend on getting fish to subsist on; this was the reason of my going to Oregon instead of California. The country down Snake river, is hilly, rocky, sandy, no timber, but an abundance of sage, until we got to the Blue mountains, we came to a splendid country of grass, where there were thousands of Indian horses grazing. About twenty miles from this we came to Walla-walla Valley; they raise grain and vegetables, but no timber except for fire wood. About twenty miles from this, we came to the Columbia river, many of the emigrants sold their cattle here, and went down the river by water, as they could not cross the Cascade mountains with their wagons, though they could go down one hundred miles further, and then take the river as many of them did. The country on the Columbia is only fit for grazing, being good grass but sandy soil. On the 3d of November arrived at Fort Vancouver, just as the rainy season had commenced; and it was very disagreeable, and rained most of the time I was there.

I then went to Wallamette Falls, quite a town here—forty houses, four stores, two saw mills, one flour-mill, and another to be erected soon. This country is not capable of half as large a settlement as people represent; there is much timber, and it cannot be got cleared for many years, so as to be capable of any great production; and what prairie there is will not produce as much as your land, but the wheat is better; neither do many think the soil will last long, but that it is rather shallow, and there is much fever and ague. Besides the winters are so wet, it is impossible to do much out of doors. It has the advantage that grain (wheat) is worth eighty cents per bushel, and cattle will winter themselves. Take it all in all, it is not like your country.

I hardly know what to write about Oregon, or what you would like to know; though if I was where you are, I should see some one from Oregon, I could ask him a hundred questions, as you could me. The report of Wilks, that you had, is very correct. There are thousands of salmon, some wild game, plenty of ducks, geese, and swans, and some good wet places to raise more of them, there must be some wet places, being so much rain in the winter and no snow.

There is scarcely any corn raised—it will not do well. I saw a little but it was poor. Most other kinds of grain do well. There is no money in Oregon; although most of those who have been farming a few years have made property, as grain is high and cattle take care of themselves, and sell high—oxen worth $75 to $125 per yoke; beef six cents per pound. Many of the people who went to California have left it and gone to Oregon. I saw many of them while there, and they gave us as one of the reasons of leaving—trouble with the Spaniards.

Truly yours,
JNO. BOARDMAN.

From the Michigan State Gazette.
UNBURNT BRICKS.

We have been politely furnished, by the Rev. Mr. Fuller of this village, the September No. of the Home Missionary, published in New York City by the Executive Court of the Home Missionary Society, containing the following information relative to the manufacture and use of unburnt bricks. We hope all will examine the subject, and curious ones make experiments, to test the sensibility of building with this material. For ourselves we are inclined to believe, that the system, if but once practiced upon in Michigan, will prove greatly beneficial to the entire population of the State.

'Unburnt bricks,' says the Encyclopaedia Americana, are of great antiquity. They are found in the Roman and Grecian monuments, and even in the ruins of Egypt and Babylon. They were mixed with chopped straw, and dried in the sun to give them greater tenacity. On account of the extreme heat and dryness of the climate, they acquired a gr at hardness, and have lasted for several thousand years. As they have been supposed unsuitable for northern latitudes, burned bricks have generally been used.

But are they unsuitable for northern climates? An intelligent Englishman informs me, that houses of this material have stood centuries in various parts of England—that for about twelve years they have been introduced into Canada West, where they can be seen finished in various ways, in and near Toronto—that country churches and school houses are there erected with this material on account of economy and durability—that farmers, though in the midst of abundance of timber, prefer the house and stable of unburnt brick, to those constructed of logs—and that where fencing timber is scarce, these bricks supply the deficiency.

In Geneva, N. Y., several houses have been put up of this kind of brick, and putting them in the wall has cost less than the common red brick would have cost. There is less timber in them it is said, than in other kinds of buildings, and no lathing or studding is necessary for walls or partitions, they are not only of small cost, but are less liable to be destroyed by fire. The frost has no effect upon these walls, and they may be easily preserved from the effects of rain. The bricks being non-conductors of moisture and heat, are dry at all times, and cool in summer, and warm in winter. The bricks may generally be made on the site, so that no carting will be necessary.

Process of making sun-dried bricks in this Country.

All soils are suitable except of pure sand or gravel. The best materials is two thirds clay, and one third sand, with the straw and water requisite. Lay a floor of boards, which may afterwards be used for roof boards—on which throw the sand and clay to the thickness of about a foot. The mass should then be soaked with water, and horses on oxen be kept moving in the mud two or three hours, until it becomes well mixed and sticky. With the material for about a thousand bricks, 300 lbs. of straw should be mixed, and the whole then trodden for about an hour, when it will be fit for use. Have prepared two wooden moulds, the size of the bricks you wish. The bottoms of the moulds should be so narrow as to leave half an inch open on each side, which permits the clay to leave the mould easily. A bench should be made and placed near the material, to enable one man to supply two others, engaged in moulding and carrying away, and turning them out on the ground to dry; on a plot made as level as possible. Three active men thus engaged, will make 300 large brick per day.

When moulding the material, the mould should be washed—then a little sand should be in—that well filled with the material and struck off level, either with a piece of iron or a wooden strike. If the sun is powerful, a little loose sand sprinkled over the soft bricks, will prevent their cracking. If the weather continue dry, they may be raised on their ends the next day. In about four days they may be placed on a board and piled up in the form of a wall, and then covered with another board until required for building. They should thus remain a fortnight before building.

Foundation, Size of Bricks, &c.

A solid foundation of burnt brick or stone, should be built above the surface, on which the unburnt bricks should be placed, and cemented together with the same material, either with or without the straw. The first laying of bricks on the foundation, had better be laid in water lime.

A mason who has some experience in building these walls, informs me that an 18 inch wall is sufficient for a building 30 feet high. That to build a twelve inch wall, the moulds should be one foot square and six inches deep—and some of the moulds eighteen inches long, for breaking break joints, &c.

To build an 18 inch wall, the moulds should be 18 inches long, 1 foot wide and 6 inches deep, or if smaller bricks are preferred, 1 foot long, 9 inches wide, and nine inches deep. And to build a 15 inch wall, or a 2 feet wall, the moulds should be 15 inches long, 1 foot wide and 6 inches deep. In building a 2 feet wall, some of the bricks should be 2 feet long and 8 inches wide, which would serve as binders and to break joints.

The partitions of a building may be put up in the same way, but the walls need not be so thick. As one of these brick is equal to many of the common brick, a mason can build a wall much quicker with the large, than with the small brick. Wedges are driven into the walls, or wooden blocks put in at the time of building, to which the trimmings are nailed. A projecting roof for buildings of this description, is said to be necessary. These buildings may be finished with plaster and cement, and be made of beautiful proportions and appearance. The simplest and cheapest finish, being merely to smooth them off as they are built, and then color them both inside and out, and if the outside be pencilled to represent stone, it will look very well. Good common lime and good sand make a fine substantial outside finish.

The cost of these walls can be easily estimated. Brick 18 inches long, 1 foot wide, and 6 inches deep, can be made and put into the wall for 31 1/2 cents per brick; so that the outside walls, above the foundation of a house 60 by 40 feet, 18 inches thick, and 18 feet high, can be built for $250.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 19, 1845.

ARREST OF ELLIOTT.

The arrest and examination of Elliott, last week, as one of the assassins of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in Carthage jail, last June, has created some just feelings among the honest portions of all parties. The more so, as Elliott was now acting in "the full tide of successful experiment," as a Deputy Sheriff of Hancock county.

We are ignorant how he crept into the Sheriff's office, to thus sting the sensibilities of honest men, tear open an "old sore" to bleed before a wondering world, and bring disgrace on those that might have passed between two fires unscorched,—when it was a matter of record that he had been indicted for kidnapping! As the examination appears at length in another column, we shall leave the subject and evidence with the integrity of the people; if they are willing to trust the execution of the laws, and the destinies of our country's glory, in the hands of such vile instruments—hanging witches in New England, was holy devotion; the tomahawk and scalping knife of the savage, are emblems of mercy, and the cars of Juggernaut the thrones of grace.

As to the insinuation, or threat of his counsel, that if the court, (composed of Wells, Johnson, and Higbee, Esqrs.) should send the prisoner to Carthage jail, "it might cost the best blood of Nauvoo";—we say, whether the legal gentleman was to act as probe or lancet to draw that blood, it would be far better for the best blood of all the honest men in the world, to be shed in defence of virtue and liberty, than to surrender them at discretion, for the sake of continuing a slaughter-house at Carthage, to glut the greedy worms of minions, mobocrats, and murderers.

In fact, when red-eyed vice, is doubly cloaked with "fur and broadcloth," in the halls of legislation, among judges and lawgivers, and in the bailiwick of a county, with the power of the commititis, to hide blood and screen the guilty from punishment, it brings to mind the old adage:—"How we apples swim!"

LATEST DATES.

London, Liverpool, Edinburgh, &c. forepart of Jan. New York Jan. 25. New Orleans Jan. 27. Nothing very serious more than we have heretofore given our readers, agitates the promiscuous multitude. Duels, fires, murders, fights, disasters and other legislative enactments from above and below, are the order of the day, and more may be momentarily expected.

ENCOURAGING.

Last week we received an order from Elder Reed, our agent in St. Louis, for fifty copies of the "Times and Seasons," and fifty copies of the "Neighbor," together with a statement that it was expected the list would shortly be increased. We are pleased to see a spirit of this kind being awakened among some of the branches. "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" we have often heard reflections cast upon St. Louis:—They have been denominated by some, "half-breeds," "epitaphs," &c.; we would wish to correct this error, and state, that although many apostates have gone to St. Louis, they are not those that compose the church; many of our best brethren have gone there, according to counsel, to obtain employment. They have in all times of trouble been ready to stand by us, and to lend a helping hand, both personal and pecuniary. For an account of the situation of the church in Saint Louis, we would refer our readers to a communication of Elder Hyde, published in the Neighbor, and in the Times and Seasons; and in their activity and liberality in supporting the press, they have shown a zeal in defending truth, which it would be well for many of our branches to imitate.

We are not fond of casting reflections upon the brethren, and we are averse to saying anything about outsiders; but while upon the subject, we would state that there is the most deplorable negligence manifested by many of the branches, and also, by many of our elders in sustaining the press; it would seem that it was merely a cat-paw which could be used for their own private convenience, without having any reference to the great object for which it was instituted.

We last week published a statement made by President Brigham Young in answer to some remarks made in the "Prophet," wherein he assigns a reason for there not being more subscribers, that the post offices deal fraudulently with us, and keep the papers from the subscribers; this to a certain extent is true, in some peculiar locations; but that it is not general we know assuredly, from the returns we receive from our agents and correspondents. As we stated in the last Times, means are being used to prevent these frauds, and to place the carriage of papers on a more sure footing; in the mean time we would state that if the subscribers will send us word about their delinquencies, we have made arrangements with our post master here, to enquire into the difficulty; and by writing to him the delinquent post masters can be found out and treated according to law.

We think the elders should not be discouraged at these things, if so, we may stop our press and do without any medium of communication. We know that we have fulfilled our engagements always faithfully, and while we are engaged in promulgating the principles of truth, defending the cause of righteousness, and sustaining correct principles, we think it but just, fair, and honorable, and as little as the elders can, to do a helping hand in rolling forth the work of the Lord; by assisting us in our laudable endeavors; the press will often do more to sustain correct principles than preaching, because it is a regular visitor. Our enemies are busily engaged in trying to destroy us, let us not be behind them in trying to sustain ourselves. If the different branches abroad would follow the example of St. Louis, in sustaining the Nauvoo papers and the Prophet, all might prosper; the press be placed in easy circumstances, and free from embarrassment, and nobody be injured; but, all mutually benefited.

THE PROPHET.

Since Elder Pratt took the oversight of affairs in the eastern states, the "Prophet" has improved somewhat: as pictoriality is among the fashions of the day, it ranks with "epitaphs," or as it should be, rick-racks; and we hope the improvement will continue. The elders abroad, can improve Mormon papers by obtaining and forwarding subscribers and means, to the Times and Seasons, and Neighbor, at Nauvoo, and the Prophet at New York. Who knows how many thousands may be enlightened by reading one sound doctrinal paper, where popularity might deter them from hearing the truth? It was one of the "Evening and Morning Stars" that first whispered Mormonism into the hearts of a few in the kingdom of Great Britain; and it may be that other kingdoms will hear the same glad tidings through these flying chart-trail of them.

Having, however, touched the subject in another article, we conclude by saying, that union, integrity, and exertion, where faith, virtue, and charity have any influence on man, subdue the folly of nations, and light up love among millions.

EXAMINATION OF JOHN C. ELLIOTT.

[Reported for the Neighbor.]

Nauvoo, February 13, 1845.

Mr. Burton: Knowing that everything that transpires in this place is of interest to the world at large, I take this method to relate the circumstances and evidence elicited in the progress of an examination which took place here on yesterday.

A person named John C. Elliott had been lounging about our city, for a time past, on pretence of legal business pertaining to the sheriff's office. His demeanor engendered suspicious feelings in the minds of the citizens towards him, which feelings were heightened by some knowledge of his previous conduct. At length he was recognized as being one of the characters in the lamented murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. He was arrested, upon affidavit being made by John Scott, a worthy citizen of this city. The arrest took place on Tuesday morning, the 11th inst. Subpoenas for witnesses were immediately issued in behalf of the State and Defence. At 7 o'clock Tuesday evening, the prisoner came into court and requested trial. Some of the witnesses for the State, residing in the Territory of Iowa, and other distant points in this State, had not yet arrived; consequently the state was not prepared to join issue, and the examination was postponed until the following morning.

Wednesday morning, 8 o'clock. Court met at the Masonic Hall. The prisoner entered with his counsel, and was seated. He looked to be a man of some twenty six or eight years; near five feet eight inches tall; stoutly built, and athletic. He had on a jeans coat, with large pearl buttons, which was united at the upper part of his breast in a careless manner. The pants were taken for casinet and were considerably tattered. This dress was covered by an overcoat, cut from a green Mackinaw blanket. When he doffed his white nutria hat, it disclosed a prominent forehead and a rather disordered head of black hair. His countenance was dark; his eyes were hazel and sunk to a considerable depth in his head, over which jutted out his heavy dark eyebrows, which a continual scowl knit closely together, giving him at once a savage and heartless look. During the progress of the examination, he flourished a pearl handled dirk knife, which he plied with considerable dexterity in the cavity of his ample mouth, which filled the office of a tooth-pick. Not to be tedious, he seemed the reality of some one of those desperate characters so often portrayed upon the pleasant page of romance; and we might have imagined in our midst the gloomy presence of one who helped make up the history of the bloody 'Three Spaniards.'

The Court was called to order by Esquire Johnson, at whose request Esquires Wells and Higbee took the Bench, as associate justices.

Esquire Stiles appeared as counsel for the State, and Esquires Sweetland and Backman for the Defence.

The State urged the postponement of the trial a short time for the procuring of important witnesses.

The defence objected and demanded immediate trial.

The court decided to proceed.

EVIDENCE FOR THE STATE.

John Scott examined.

He knew nothing personally, but sufficient upon which to found an affidavit for arrest. Stood aside.

Daniel Avery examined.

Question. Mr. Avery, are you acquainted with the prisoner?

Answer. I am.

Q. Did you ever hear him threaten the lives of Joseph and Hyrum Smith?

A. I will relate. I became acquainted with Mr. Elliott on the 2nd of December, one year ago. He was one of the persons who assisted in kidnapping me, on that date. I was at Doty's mill, in this county. They there took me by force and tied my feet under the horse's belly; when Mr. Elliott took the reins of the bridle, and they started; he forcing me through brush and over ravines, in a cruel and unfeeling manner. His treatment to me was anything but humane. They shunned the main road as much as possible, as I supposed, to prevent detection. The most that I counted in this company, at any time, were eighteen or twenty men. They were cursing and swearing continually about the Mormons, threatening their lives and the lives of Joseph and Hyrum Smith in particular. Mr. Elliott declared he was ready at any time, and a moment's warning, to assist the Missourians, or any body else, to take their lives. He said Joe Smith, (as he called him) was a d-d villain, and that he would take his life. If I witness know any thing of the nature of a covenant, they certainly entered into a covenant that night to take the lives of not only Joseph and Hyrum Smith, but of all the leading men of the church. Said they: We have got me d-d Mormon (meaning myself) but this is just a commencement; for we will not cease our exertions until we have got them all. During our march they tried to ascertain from me where certain men lived (calling their names) who belonged to the Mormon church; but I thought that to be a time when the truth was not to be spoken in every instance, and I evaded their enquiries. Under the dark cover of night, they conveyed me to the shore of the Mississippi river, where they dislodged me from the horse, bound me and placed me in a skiff. I supposed their intention was to drown me—I had no other idea. I concluded my hour had come to die, and I made up my mind to meet my fate. But I was mistaken. They conveyed me across the river into the State of Missouri, where (no thanks to Mr. Elliott) I was afterwards released.

Q. Mr. Avery, how do you know Mr. Elliott was in that company?

A. I recognize him from his appearance, and I also heard one of the company accidentally call his name. Furthermore, he offered me his hand the other day, (which I refused to accept) wishing me to be reconciled, after what he had done.

Q. Did you know the name of any other person engaged in that transaction?

A. I heard them call the name of Col. Williams.

Q. Do you know the date on which the murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith was committed?

A. They were murdered on the 27th of June 1844, some six or seven months after they had covenanted to take their lives.

Benj. Brackenberry examined.

Witness. I don't know as I know much about this matter.

Q. Do you know anything about Mr. Elliott's being engaged in the murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith?

Witness. I will answer as far as I know: I was at work for a man who hired his team to carry baggage for the troops, and I was sent to drive it. When we got to the crossing of the railroad, the troops were disbanded. A company of volunteers were then raised to go to Carthage, and my team was sent with them to carry baggage. I was kept ignorant of their intention until I got within two or three miles of Carthage, when I learned that the determination of the company was to murder Joseph and Hyrum Smith. The most of the company filed off up the ravine that leads to the point of timber that runs near the jail. I passed directly on and halted within near a quarter of a mile from the jail, in full view, with the guard that was placed over me, or the wagon. I don't know which. I saw the company that followed up the ravine, come out of the woods, go to the jail, and soon after returned to where I was placed. When they came up, I heard them say: We killed Joe Smith.

Q. Was Mr. Elliott in the company that followed up the ravine?

A. He was.

Q. How do you know it was Mr. Elliott?

A. I had seen him before and I knew him well when I saw him. He had on the same under-coat that he has on now, or one just like it.

Q. Was Mr. Elliott painted?

A. He was not.

Q. Was Mr. Elliott in the company that returned from the jail?

A. He was.

Q. Was he armed?

A. He was. He had arms like Col. Williams' company.

Q. Was Col. Williams in that company?

A. He was.

Q. Did you hear any guns fired at the jail while that company was there?

A. I heard four or five guns fired.

Q. What was the day of the month on which these things took place?

A. On the 27th of June.

John C. Burns examined:

Q. Mr. Burns, what do you know about Mr. Elliott's being connected in the murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith?

A. I cannot say that I know much of anything about it.

Q. Has Mr. Elliott made any admissions to you, at any time, that he was engaged in the murder?

A. I will relate the conversation I had upon the subject. The Marshal of Iowa and Mr. Elliott were at my house soon after the murder was committed. I was explaining to the Marshal the manner of Joseph Smith's death, as I had understood it. I told him that in all probability he was dead when he fell from the window, or was killed by the fall. I told him that but two balls entered his body. But Mr. Elliott immediately interrupted me by saying: I know you are mistaken, placing great emphasis on the word know. I know (said he) he was not dead when he fell from the window, and I know he was shot with four or five balls. He also said something about his attempting to clamber up against the wall, but what he said about it I do not distinctly remember. He stated that he had left Illinois to evade the service of a writ which he said he expected had been or would be issued against him for that murder. His manner caused the Marshal to remark to me afterwards: That man knows something about that murder.

Q. Were there any persons present at the time of the murder?

A. I cannot say that I know much of anything about it.

A. I think I have heard them rather jeer him two or three times in that way, and say he made considerable blow, but when it came to the pinch he wasn't on hand; but whether they meant he was not on hand at the Carthage murder, I cannot say.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Elliott was at the crossing of the railroad, or not, at the time the troops were disbanded?

A. I do not, as I suppose I must have been some three quarters of a mile from that place at the time.

Thomas Dixon examined:

Q. Mr. Dixon, was you present at the time the Smiths were murdered?

A. I stood within fifteen feet of the jail, and saw Joseph Smith fall from the window.

Q. By whom was the murder committed?

A. By a company that came from the direction of Warsaw.

Q. Are you acquainted with Mr. Elliott?

A. I never saw him, to my recollection, before yesterday evening.

Q. Did you see him in that company?

A. I did not.

Q. Could he have been there and you not have seen him?

A. I think not.

Q. Was that company uniformed?

A. The most of them had on blue hunting shirts, with fringe around the edges.

Q. Were there any persons present who were not uniformed?

A. I think there were a few. One man went to Mr. Smith, after he had fallen, and partly raised him up by his arm, who had on no coat or hat, and had on light pants and, I think, marseilles vest.

Q. In what direction did that company go when they left the jail?

A. In the direction of Warsaw.

Q. What was the day of the month on which this murder was committed?

A. On the 27th of June.

Here the examination was closed.

The case was argued to considerable length by the attorneys.

Sweetland's argument was without path or meaning—a tangle of nonsense. The best application I ever heard for the little fellow, was to compare him to a tempest in a teapot.

Backman delt very liberally in insinuations and virtual threats, that the blood of more of our best men would be shed if the prisoner was committed for trial; no doubt for the purpose of intimidating the court. He breathed out the venom of his heart, before he was aware of it, and as soon as he uttered the sentence, a shock came across him which might serve him as a gentle hint, before he finds his hands dripping in the blood of innocence.

Prophets may be martyred, but the Priesthood is beyond massacre. Acting in secret conclave with murderers, and pleading their cause in a community of saints, is moving in different atmospheres, and it will be so while there is a God in Israel!

Esquire Stiles made an eloquent and argumentative speech, warding off and answering, with boldness and ability, the threats of Backman. Said he: If that time, of which the lawyer has prophesied, ever does arrive, he will find us prepared to meet them; and that will be the time when—if it is possible for us to receive atonement for even one drop of the blood of those estimable men—that we will receive that atonement. They will find us defending our rights while one man of us shall survive. Thousands and millions of virtuous hearts—if they could here give utterance to their feelings,—and thousands and millions of voices—if they could be heard—would swell the echo of patriotism, and applaud us for a determination like this. Does the lawyer think that a few months' imprisonment of a man like that [pointing to the prisoner] is going to avenge us of the blood of two of our most patriotic and beloved citizens? If so he is mistaken. The ignoble blood of all that ruthless gang would be to us no atonement. The lawyer talks about public sentiment. What is the history of public sentiment for the last fifteen years? It has drove people from their homes, shed the blood of men, women and children; and now, forsooth, because there appears to be some hope of bringing a murderer to justice, we are gravely told by his counsel, on the strength of popular opinion, that the blood of citizens will be the price of a simple commitment!

DECISION OF THE COURT, AS DELIVERED BY ESQUIRE WELLS.

The identical persons who fired the guns, at the murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in all probability, never will be known. But it has been shown from the testimony of Mr. Dixon, that the deed was committed by a band of men who approached the jail from the direction of Warsaw, and it is shown, by the testimony of Mr. Brackenberry that the prisoner was in that company. My feelings, for one, have undergone a thorough revolution during the progress of this examination. Every exertion by the prisoner to clear himself from the charge, has signally failed and gone to strengthen the evidence for the State. We regret that this thing has taken place in this community; but as the arrest of the prisoner has been made here, and the examination had before us, we shall not flinch from the discharge of our duty. We know not what new light may be thrown upon the case on the final trial; but enough has been proven here, to-day, to fix very, very strongly upon the prisoner the certainty of guilt. We therefore commit him to prison for trial at the next term of the Circuit Court. And we hold the witnesses to bonds for their appearance to give testimony in the case.

Court adjourned.

THE DUBUQUE CLAIM.

In the Senate of the United States, on the 22d ult., a bill to confirm the title to a tract of land in the Territory of Iowa to the legal heirs and assigns of Julian Dubuque, deceased, was taken up as in Committee of the Whole. The bill provides that the tract of land granted to Julian Dubuque by the Baron De Carondelet, by concession, bearing date the 10th November, 1793, situated on the west bank of the Mississippi river, in the Territory of Iowa, including the lands and rivers, now known by the name of "Dubuque," being seven leagues in front upon the river and three leagues in depth back from the river, to be laid off according to calls set forth in Dubuque's request, be confirmed to the legal heirs and assigns of said Julian Dubuque, deceased; provided this bill shall only operate as a relinquishment of title by the United States, and that it shall not extend to or be applied in behalf of said heirs and assigns, to such lots of land belonging originally to the Dubuque claim, as the United States have sold, or to which pre-emption rights have been acquired and established before the date of this act. But in lieu of these, the heirs and assigns shall be entitled to enter like quantities of any public lands subject to private entry in the territory. The requisitions of the bill to be carried into effect by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who is directed to issue a patent to the claimants accordingly.

Mr. Pearce, as a member of the Committee on Private Land Claims, stated the difficulties which had hitherto obstructed the settlement of this claim. The claim was of some fifty or sixty years standing, and had hitherto been regarded on the part of the government as a claim extending only to the personal grant of the right of mining on the lands. Such had been Mr. Gallatin's view, and he believed also that of Mr. Smith, of Indiana, while chairman of the Committee on Public Lands in the Senate. Mr. Gallatin held that the Indian grant to Dubuque was only a personal permission to work the lead mines as long as he should remain, and that the grant of the Spanish Governor, the Baron De Carondelet, was only a "peaceable possession" of a tract of land on which the miners were.

Mr. Henderson maintained, at great length, the full validity of the claim, and entered into an able argument to prove that although, in strictness, the grant in the first instance did seem to be only a personal permission, yet by a subsequent act of the Indians, in which they stipulated further, that "in case he (Dubuque) shall find nothing within (the mines sold to him) he shall be free to search where ever it seem good to him, and to work peacefully, without any hurting him, or doing him any prejudice in his labors," Dubuque, eight years after this acquisition petitioned the Governor, (Baron De Carondelet,) stating that he had purchased a tract of land from the Indians, and the mines it contained, and he asked to be confirmed in the peaceable possession of the same. The Governor referred the petition to the licensed Spanish trader of the Indian territory, named Todd, acting as commissioner, with the direction: "Let information be given by the merchant, Don Andrew Todd, on the nature of the demand." Todd, in due time, reported to the Governor, "In compliance with your superior order, in which you command me to give information on the solicitation of the individual interested in the foregoing memorial, I have to say that, as to the land for which he asks, nothing occurs to me why it should not be granted, if you find it convenient, &c." The Governor accordingly confirmed Dubuque in the peaceable possession of the land. General Harrison, in 1804, settled the treaty of St. Louis with these Indians, and in 1806 amended it on account of this claim. In his report, touching this amendment of the treaty, General Harrison says the additional article was written and submitted to the Indians and that they readily consented to it, and the undersigned (Gen. H.) informed them that the intention of it was to embrace particularly the claim of Dubuque, the validity of which they acknowledged. The United States Senate subsequently ratified this treaty, which set at rest all objection to General Harrison's power of making it. On these grounds, as well as others, which he enumerated at great length, Mr. H. held that the heirs and assigns of Dubuque had as good a legal and equitable claim to this grant as had any of the claimants under Spanish grants which this government had hitherto confirmed.

Mr. Pearce, observing, that it was desirable there should be a full Senate for the further consideration of the bill, moved an adjournment.

HAVANA, Jan. 15, 1845.—The Captain General has returned from his visit to Santiago. The island is perfectly tranquil, and from the energetic manner in which he disposed of the late insurgents, I do not think there is any danger of another rise during his administration.

The Monte de Piedad, or pawnbroker's shop under the sanction of the authorities, was broken open about a week since and robbed by the soldiers on guard there at night. All have been arrested except the corporal and one other. The punishment will be death. The amount of property stolen is variously estimated—from $50,000 to $75,000.

A lawyer, in coming out of one of the churches, about eight days since, trod on the toe of the sentry, who stabbed him instantly. Another sentinel ran up and also drove his bayonet into him. The lawyer died instantly. The soldiers fled into the church, to the sanctuary, but were dragged out, tried the same day, and sentenced to be shot. Their only excuse was, they were tired of drilling.

Last week a negro got into one of the ferry boats, and desired the ferry man to row him across the river. He was seen from a vessel in the harbor to stab the boatman, and then to jump into the river, from which he never rose. The boatman was found dead, with nine stabs. The negro is supposed to have been insane, but he did not take the Yankee plan—to wait for a trial and enter the fashionable plea.

The ship Pennsylvania will be a total loss; the cargo will be partially saved in a damaged state. She had not gone to pieces at the last accounts. Mr. Thrasher is down, assisting in saving the cargo; to those who know him it is needless to say that no exertions will be spared.

The markets are extremely dull—you might imagine yourself in New Orleans, to hear the groaning over dull times. Very few strangers have visited the Island this season,—why I cannot imagine, as the accommodation is better than any preceding year.

The weather is very pleasant for the past few days we have been sitting with windows and doors all open. Summer clothing is all the fashion.

P.S.—They have just taken two of the robbers of the Monte de Piedad off the Alabama, as she is starting. All are now under arrest.

THE TREATY WITH CHINA.

The Treaty between the United States and China has not been made public, but a letter of Mr. Cushing is published, which gives his views of the character and bearings of the Treaty. We give a synopsis of this. In the treaty, the style of perfect equality between the United States and China has been observed, and it contains many provisions not in the English treaty:

1. The Tariff is amended, by the reduction of the duties on some articles of American production, and by fixing with greater precision, what goods are contraband, or subjects of monopoly.

There is nothing in the English treaty to limit the power of the Emperor in the exclusion of the articles of import or export. No modifications of the Tariff are to be made without the consent of the United States.

2. By the English treaties, the Consul is security for the payment of duties, and is bound to prosecute for all infractions of the revenue laws of China.

By the present treaty the duties are payable in cash.

3. New provision is made in the simplest manner for the trade, from port to port in China.

A ship, which having touched at Canton, has there paid tonnage duties, and discharged a part of her cargo, may proceed with the residue to any other port in China, without being subject to the payment of tonnage duty a second time, and goods which have been landed, and paid duty at one of the ports of China, may, at any time, be re-exported to any other port of China, without being subject to any further duty.

4. Provision is made for the personal dignity and security of Consul and other U. S. officers.

5. Merchandise may be landed from time to time, duty being paid on the articles only when they are landed; and vessels may within a limited time, depart without breaking bulk.

6. Citizens of the United States are to have all accommodation at each of the five ports.

7. Provision is made for the employment, by Americans, of persons to teach the language of the Empire; and the purchase of books is legalized.

8. All Americans in China are to be deemed subject only to the jurisdiction of their own Government, both in criminal matters and in questions of civil right.

9. Citizens of the United States in China, and every thing appertaining to them, are placed under the special protection of the Chinese Government, which engages to defend them from all insult and injury.

10. The vessels of the United States are to come and go freely between the ports of China, and those of any other country with which China may happen to be at war, in full security, not only for the ship, but for all descriptions of merchandise.

11. Provision is made for the protection and relief of vessels, stranded on the coast of China, or driven by any sort of calamity to whatever port of China; and also for the restitution of property taken by pirates in the seas of China.

12. Equality in correspondence between civil or military and naval officers of the United States, and those of China is stipulated.

13. No presents are to be demanded of either Government by the other.

14. Ships of war of the United States and their commanders, are at all times to be courteously received in the ports of China.

15. There is provision for communications between the two Governments.

16. In regard to opium, it is provided by this treaty, that citizens of the United States engaged in this or any other contraband trade, shall receive no protection from the American Government, nor shall the flag of the United States be abusively employed by other nations as a cover for the violation of the laws of China.

These are the peculiar provisions of the treaty. They confer a great favor on the commerce of the British nation. By the supplementary British treaty, any new privileges conceded to other nations shall also be enjoyed by Great Britain. Mr. Cushing has proved himself a valuable negotiator.

The wrong man hanged.—A Liverpool paper says that Wm. Towns, a soldier in the 21st Fusiliers, now in India, has confessed that it was he who dashed out the brains of a game keeper in Essex, about nine years ago, and that a man named Chalker, who was executed for the murder, was innocent.

them no charter, except it be by amendment to the Senate bill, which it seems to me would be the correct legislative course.

One objection urged against the Mormons as a people, is that they come from all parts of the world and are thrown together in the city of Nauvoo. This is no reason why we should withhold from them the blessings of equal legislation. We have invited them here to enjoy with us the benefits of civil and religious liberty, and should never proscribe their rights nor drive them from the land of the free and the home of the brave. When a man becomes a citizen of these United States, I care not from whence he came, whether it be from the sunny isles of the South, or from the rigid icebound regions of the North, whether it be from the semi-republican States of South America, or from under the vilest despotism of Europe, I hail him as a brother, and greet him as a friend. I care not for his religious sentiments. For them he must answer to his conscience and his God. The doctrines advocated, and the spirit manifested by the gentleman from Macon, partakes too much of Native Americanism, and in my opinion, would have well suited the intolerant passions of the mob gathered around the burning churches of Philadelphia. Sir, I have no such feelings. Our broad canopy should extend over all who seek a refuge from oppression here, and the benefits of our free institutions should like the dews of Heaven descend upon all. No distinctions which are so loudly called for, should be made, and I hope this House will ponder well before it sanctions an act of partial legislation, or proscribes a people for opinion's sake. Repeat, unconditionally, the charter of the city of Nauvoo because its inhabitants are Mormons, and you open a breach in the bulwarks of our safety—you violate constitutional rights, and do an act of wanton injustice. It is not strange to me why Whig gentlemen should desire to exterminate the Mormons from our State, for they have with too much unanimity voted with the democratic party; but certainly it cannot be in view of increasing their party influence, and insuring to them another Congressman. O no. Such considerations would not be entertained by any honorable gentleman upon this floor; but sir, repeat at this time, unconditionally, their charter—leave them with no better organization than can be had under the general incorporation act, and that would be the inevitable consequence.

This very question was made an issue before the people at the last gubernatorial election, and decided at the ballot box in favor of a modification by at least 8000 of a majority.

Why, I ask, do the South desire the unconditional repeal of this charter? Why are they not willing to vote for its modification? It is certainly injustice.

The expense of the Hancock was rung in to prejudice the southern members against the interests and the rights of that people. But sir, whoever will examine impartially the facts submitted to this House by the Executive of our State, in relation to those difficulties, will be convinced that it was an anti-mormon war. The militia was called out to protect the Mormons from aggression, and the persecution of those wrought up by the passions of political and religious prejudice. Those prejudices still exist and those passions may again be easily excited, and I do hope Mr. Speaker our voice will not go forth to increase the evils and encourage the extermination of the Mormons.

This is a question, not merely of the repeal of a city charter, but of justice and equality and since the fact cannot be disguised that religious prejudices are the basis of every complaint urged against that people. If we allow ourselves to be influenced by motives like these, and suffer an innovation to be made at this time upon our long established system of religious liberty, where would be the security for those sacred institutions so dear to the heart of a freeman, where he has been wont to worship his God according to the dictates of his own conscience under his own vine and fig tree, none to molest or make him afraid. Where, I ask, would be the security for such institutions, if we commence proscription and persecution here. It would indeed be a dangerous precedent, and the next legislature may make some other denomination the object of excited prejudice, and the victim of legislative vengeance. If we adopt any such precedent, it will be destructive to the future peace and prosperity of our state. Encourage the spirit of religious intolerance, which has already by its manifest appearances, impaired her honor, and stained with the bloody hand of persecution the bright escutcheon of our state. It is not the province of legislators to sit in judgment upon the opinions of men.

It was one of the maxims of the immortal Jefferson, whose precepts should meet a ready response from the ranks of democracy, that "error might safely be tolerated where reason was left free to combat it." Mr. Speaker, so far as my constituents are concerned, they do not wish me to act the cringing slave to any religious domination for political or any purposes, but are willing to extend equal rights and privileges to all. They ask nothing for themselves but what is just, right, and will grant to others all that is reasonable. I do hope sir, we may be candid, and act with deliberation upon this matter. Remove preconceived prejudices from our minds and deal out evenhanded justice to all.

Treasures of heaven are more precious than those of Golconda.

CHEROKEE NEWS.

By the Cherokee Advocate of Dec. 16, we learn that the Council convened on Wednesday the 4th inst. at Tah-lon-tees-ky, at the mouth of the Illinois River.

The Commissioners were Roger Jones, Adj. Gen. U. S. A., R. B. Mason, Lieut. Col. Dragoons and P. M. Butler, U. S. Agent for the Cherokees.

The objects of the Commission were briefly to inquire into the correctness of certain representations and complaints of grievances, in the formation and administration of the Cherokee Government and the conduct of a majority towards the minority of the Cherokee people. These complaints and representations have been made by John Rogers, James Jerry, Thos. L. Rogers, John A. Bell, Ezekiel Star and Bluford West; who were in Washington City during the last session of Congress; representing themselves Committees, on the part of those portions of the Cherokee people, known as "Old Settlers" and "Treaty party" previous to the reunion, in 1839 and '40, of all parties of Cherokees.

There were on the ground about three hundred persons. The Council adjourned, however, to meet on Wednesday, December 11th, at the old Agency Fort Gibson.

The authorities of the Nation having, for good reasons, declined to attend the Council, or, to send any deputation, a number of the citizens present deemed it due to the respect they bear to the Government and institutions of their choice, to prepare a protest against the authority assumed by the United States in calling assemblies contrary to their laws, and interfering in matters confined exclusively to themselves.

At the Old Agency there was no business of importance transacted, and the Council adjourned to Fort Gibson. The protest has been sent in. The result of the Council is not known. Ben Starr, who it was reported had been killed, was caught and imprisoned.

Marine Disaster.—The Nantucket Inquirer gives the following list of persons lost from the ship Harriet, in a gale 15th November. John Herring, of N. Y. 23 mate; David Brown of Fishkill, boat steerer; Jacob Reed of Detroit, seaman; Charles D. Chapman, of Lennox, do. Delews W. Smith, of Burlington, N. Y. do; Thomas D. Brown of New York, do; William Byet of do. do; Henry Boston (colored) Long Island, do; Antine Rogers of Talcahuana, do. Nov. 23 Gideon Westervelt, of Poughkeepsie, was lost from the jib boom, and might have been saved if they had had a boat. They saw him down without being able to make the least effort to save him.

Santa Anna, in an intercepted letter to Valentin Canazito, dated Queretaro, Dec. 6th, written the day on which the revolution broke out at Mexico, says:

"Comrade, resolution and exemplary chastisement for all the chiefs of the conspiracy! Do not stop half way. Nothing is more fatal in critical moments than weakness and indecision."

In a letter to Rejoir, the following occurs:

"Energy—No pausing before the means necessary to be employed. In crises like the present firmness and blows settle every thing."

Oregon.—The New York Commercial says: "Much has been said recently in this country in relation to the establishment of a newspaper in the Oregon Territory. We can now set the matter at rest. We have, during this week, shipped for Oregon, one of Hoe's best printing presses, several fonts of type from the foundry of Mr. White, a supply of paper from White & Sheffield, and printing ink from Mr. Mather's factory. It may be asked why those articles are sent to that remote region. We reply that some months ago a "government was formed" by the white settlers, similar to that of the Territory of Iowa, and a sum of money raised to establish a printing office at the Methodist Missionary station at the Willamette."

Printers' Mistakes.—An editor says, "In reporting a speech lately, we wrote—your ancestors worshipped Thor and Woden." The printer amended it by substituting "Stone and Wooden." He had read respecting "idols of wood and stone," and he supposed that we had perpetrated an error. We wrote, "assembled at the house of Cornelius"—it was printed, "assembled at the house of correction."

Query.—Will an honest man take wood off of land that does not belong to him, and sell it to make money?

THOMAS W. DORR.—The Legislature of Rhode Island—none but avowed Dorrites dissenting—has passed a bill directing the Liberation of Thomas W. Dorr, on the sole condition of his taking the usual oath of allegiance to the State. This is the condition on which Seth Luther and another insurgent have already been liberated. We presume Mr. Dorr, unless influenced by false assurances from without, will readily accept his liberty on the condition proposed. He has already and publicly admitted that the present Government of Rhode Island is the true and rightful one, and he will hardly hesitate to say as much to ensure his liberation.

The Providence Transcript says: "The House of Representatives passed in act this morning, to liberate Thomas W. Dorr, on condition that he should go before the Supreme Court and take the oath of allegiance to the State. The vote stood on the passage of the act—49 in favor, 13 against. The Warden of the State Prison was empowered by the act to communicate the act to the prisoner, and if he signified his willingness to take the oath, to conduct him before the Court.

The Supreme Court meets at Kingston on the 3d of February, and at Providence on the 14th of March. The act will probably be concurred in by the Senate this afternoon.

The Providence Journal of Saturday morning says:

Liberation of Thomas W. Dorr.—The Committee on the petition for the liberation of Thomas W. Dorr reported yesterday by bill, liberating him upon his taking the oath of allegiance to the State. The bill was passed by a large majority, every Dorrite but two in the House, and three in the Senate voting against it! Yes: the men who have been clamoring at the Algerine cruelty which keeps Thomas W. Dorr in the State Prison—who have published such moving appeals to the sympathy of the people—who have drawn upon their own imagination and the public credulity for such pictures of "leathern dungeons" and "barbarous treatment," have recorded their votes against authorizing the victim of all this "cruelty" to be released upon taking the very oath which each of them took when he entered the General Assembly! To show the more plainly the motive which influenced their votes, they declare by two of their leaders that they did not consider the oath required to be in any degree degrading, and that they should advise him to take it—and then voted against allowing him to take it and to go free. These same men, too, had voted for extending pardon to the other persons indicted on the same conditions; and yesterday they voted against pardoning Dorr on that condition! Does any one ask the motive for this apparently unaccountable conduct? It is plain upon the surface. They do not wish Dorr to be liberated. They can make more out of him, where he is. There he is a source of perverted sympathy and political capital. Free he would be over their heads, and unless he has greatly changed during his imprisonment he would ruin any party which should follow his lead. Therefore the Dorrite leaders wish to keep him where he is, and they are exceedingly mortified to find that all their blustering, and all their insults failed to provoke the General Assembly into refusing to extend the act of amnesty to him. They are unwilling to trust him with the privilege of taking the oath and leaving the prison; they are afraid that he will do as Dutee J. Pearce and others who have been indicted have, with few exceptions, done. This is Dorritism; this is a practical illustration of the sincerity and the honesty and the sympathy for Dorr, which distinguish the party.

We think Mr. Dorr's outdoor counselors should now, as a matter of policy, advise him to come out. They can make little more capital out of his incarceration by the bloodthirsty Algerines after this, and he would be worth something as a lion out of doors.

We copy the above from Greely's Tribune, under the impression that he is soft shelled. If Dorr accept of liberty on such conditions, he is no patriot; no Democrat; no gentleman! An honest man would never consider himself "free," while hampered with an oath.

We would wait for freedom till the day of judgement: praying all the while like the publican, "God be merciful to me a sinner!"

GREAT WESTERN MOVE.

Macomb, McDonough Co., Ill.,

January 14th, 1845.

DEAR SIR,

I have persuaded myself, that in consideration of our past acquaintance, if not from the great importance of the subject matter itself, you will excuse the liberty I take in addressing you this communication. An old resident, as you know, of this county, I have had an opportunity of witnessing the ravages of feeling, the jealousy and ill-blood that subsist on the part of a large portion of the people of this and adjoining counties, against the Mormon people; and while I have deplored it as an evil, formidable in magnitude and portentous in its aspects, the foulest scourge and curse of a country, possessing otherwise many peculiar advantages and blessings, I have been unable to see any reasonable prospect that our fierce discords will be brought to harmonize, and peace and good neighborhood be restored. It appears rather, that parties are increasing in exasperation and violence, and are ever on the very eve of violent and bloody collision. A continuation of such a state of things, must surely be deprecated by every lover of peace, and every friend to the rights of all. Does it not behoove all such to exert themselves to discourage and repress outrage, and to suggest, and endeavor to further such measures as may seem best calculated to not only secure the public peace and individual security, but to allay all hostile feeling? If we have any regard for the well-being of the community in which we live, if we would rescue our cherished and glorious republican institutions from the most scathing, withering reproach, we must exert ourselves, actively, zealously, manfully. Reflecting anxiously on this grave and most momentous subject, it has occurred to me, that a plan could be devised and matured, in which the great mass of both parties to this disreputable and dangerous broil, could be induced to acquiesce; and the plan which strikes me as feasible, I take the liberty to submit, and would respectfully ask for it your candid consideration, and should it be deemed worthy that also of some of your brethren. I will state that it is wholly of my own suggestion, so that should you condemn it, you condemn that which has emanated from a single individual; though I may say, that I have submitted it to a number of persons whose judgments are entitled to respect, and whose approval has emboldened me to lay it before you. I have placed it in the form of an enactment of Congress, because I thought that form would convey my ideas more clearly and succinctly, and not, by any means, because just those provisions should be embraced and no other; I intend them merely as outlines, most of the details may, and probably will be, disapproved of by you or your friends, but the question remains. Could not others be devised and engrafted on the fundamental plan and basis of a Reserve, to be set apart by Congress for the Mormon people exclusively, which would meet the approbation of that sect as well as a great majority of the people of the United States? Cannot a scheme be formed, which, while it makes an exclusive appropriation of a tract of land to that people, where they would be safe from intrusion and molestation, and where they could, by their industry, cause the wilderness to blossom as the rose, shall, at the same time, secure, as a consideration, the sale of that wilderness; and, by effecting its appropriation and cultivation, enhance vastly the value of all other lands in the same region? I think there can be, and so think those whom I have consulted. Of course, nothing could be done without the consent and approbation of your people, and indeed most probably, not without their strenuous application by petition to Congress.

You might urge with overwhelming force the fact, of your having been extensively despoiled of your property in Missouri, and are yet without redress; and that you do not, and cannot live in the unmolested enjoyment of your rights in Illinois. In saying this however, I trust you will not deem me meddling impertinently in your affairs. On the other hand, numerous signed petitions, should it be necessary, could be had from every class of citizens of Illinois, and these backed, I have no doubt, by the Legislature, should that also be deemed expedient; and there is every probability that so large a part of the people of Iowa, Wisconsin, and Missouri, would either sign petitions, or give the measure their sanction, as to stamp it as the Western public sentiment; and going before Congress in such an imposing form you would procure almost certainly, a grant on terms even more favorable than those I have proposed. But suppose you should not, still the credit clause of 10 years, when other lands are sold only for cash, would be a boon which you would do well, in my humble judgment, to accept. The removal of companies and individuals would be voluntary, and the success of the enterprise would by no means depend on all going, such as choose might remain at Nauvoo and dispose of their property, at their leisure, and those coming from abroad to join, would have the option of either stopping at Nauvoo, or of continuing on to a home, having its peace and security guaranteed by the Government of the United States. Untrammelled by state laws, and secure from annoyance by interlopers, with the intelligence, the enterprise, energy, and industry which you possess, what a glorious little Commonwealth might you not erect! Consider what vast advantages and facilities you would have, over those possessed by Roger Williams, the religious founder of Rhode Island; and Penn, the founder of Pennsylvania; and Calvert of Maryland. They cheerfully encountered all the hardships and horrors of a savage wilderness, with a wide ocean between them and their fatherland; that they might enjoy unmolested, their religious opinions, and worship in a manner that seemed to them best; and now their memories are every where revered. Contemplate the noble opportunity which lies before you, of founding a Model Republic, and thus render your name as enduring as Romulus and Deio! With regard, sir, to the details of my plan, I have supposed first, the Pine region, the most eligible from the peculiar advantage it would offer to the poorer class; for they would there have a resource at once, in being able to realize, at short intervals, the proceeds of their labor, in cutting, selling and selling their timber and lumber, instead of encountering the delay and outlay of making a farm; in this I may be in error, and if that, none better than you, are capable of judging. Secondly, I have proposed a tract 24 miles square; that may be too much, or too little, a mere matter of expediency. Thirdly, I propose, the payment of something to Government for the timber to be cut, though undoubtedly, the amount should be very moderate. Were nothing to be paid, objections, I fear, would be made, fatal to the grant, particularly by Eastern people, who have a repugnance to giving something for nothing; and an invincible dislike to a practice common in the west, and in their parlance termed hooking. Fourthly, I propose a boundary of five miles; perhaps that is too much, perhaps too little, a matter of expediency. I take it for granted that Congress would not sell for less than $1.25 per acre, but it may be otherwise, and they might grant a longer term than ten years, and in other respects make the terms more favorable, especially should you apply with an approach to unanimity, claiming with vigor, a grant as some indemnity for your losses and sufferings. Fearing to be tedious, I must close with these remarks, trusting you will receive the whole as they are proffered in a friendly spirit. Ask your consideration of the matter, and should be pleased to hear from you, at your earliest leisure, the opinion you entertain of it. With great respect, I subscribe myself, Your friend and well-wisher, WM. P. RICHARDS. To the Rev. George Miller, Bishop of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Nauvoo, Ills.

AN ACT FOR THE RELIEF OF THE PEOPLE CALLED MORMONS, OR LATTER DAY SAINTS.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled; that there shall be selected under the direction of the President of the United States, somewhere in the region generally known as the Pinceries, and within the territory of Huron, a tract of land, bordering on, and bounded by the Mississippi river, of twenty-four miles square; to be surveyed, marked and platted by the surveyor general of Iowa or Wisconsin, and which tract shall be forever set apart and known and designated as the Mormon Reserve; and so soon as said survey is completed, and public notice given of the same, it shall be lawful for any or all of said sect called Mormons to proceed to locate and settle in said reserve, on the conditions and under the conditions hereinafter prescribed. And it shall be unlawful for any person or persons not in full communion with said sect, and not fully recognized as such by their constituted authorities, to locate or settle, either within the said reserve, or within five miles of any part of the boundaries thereof; and for the better securing of this provision, it is hereby made the duty of the commanding officer at Fort Crawford, upon information duly certified to him, immediately to proceed to eject and remove such intruder or intruders.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid: That sites for towns, and the several mill-seats, as also the salt springs and mineral lands (should any there be,) within the said Reserve, shall be selected, properly designated and set apart by three commissioners, to be appointed for that purpose by the President of the United States; who shall make returns of the Plats in proper form within twelve months after the external boundaries shall have been run, or as soon thereafter as may be; and upon an early day thereafter, the President shall cause the lots in the several sites, the mill seats and salt springs, and the mineral lands in convenient parcels, to be sold at public sale to the highest bidder on a credit of five years; but none but a bona fide Mormon shall be allowed to purchase, nor shall transfer by gift, sale or otherwise, such purchase, to any other than a bona fide Mormon, be lawful.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted: That there shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a superintendent, to be charged with the supervision and care of said Reserve, whose salary shall not exceed the sum of (say) $3,000, and whose duty it shall be to reside at some central and convenient place in said Reserve, and grant permits to take up, use and occupy land with sufficient timber for farming purposes, under such regulations as the President of the United States or further acts of Congress may prescribe; and also, under like regulations, to cut and convey timber from lands not entered, such timber either to be sawed into lumber, or rafted in logs to a market; but persons to whom such permits are granted, shall give security to the satisfaction of the said Superintendent, for the payment monthly, of the sum of — per thousand feet of lumber, board measure, for all timber so cut; and upon failure to pay at the expiration of any month, he or they shall be assessed and charged an additional ten per cent; on failure a second month (in succession) an assessment of twenty per cent, and summary process of attachment shall issue against both principal and securities; and on failure of three months in succession, the permit shall be revoked, and he or they shall be deemed ever after incapable of holding a permit, unless the Secretary of War after investigating the case shall see proper to grant one.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted: That it shall be the duty of the Superintendent, to allow of the entry of any and all lands not herein before reserved, at the minimum rate of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, payable in ten years from the day on which public notice was given that entries might be made, but patents, wasting the fee-simple title, shall not issue until the entire Reserve shall have been paid for, at the rate of one and a fourth dollars per acre, together with interest at the rate of six per cent per annum for ten years; that is to say, the sum of seven hundred and thirty-seven thousand, two hundred and eighty dollars; and for the prompt and equitable adjustment of the debt, the Reserve shall be credited with the net proceeds as they are received, of sales of all town lots, salt springs, mill seats, mineral lands and timber, and at the expiration of the ten years of credit, with the amounts received from other lands; on the expiration of three months thereafter, all lands entered and not paid for shall be deemed forfeited, and within the three months next thereafter, shall, together with all the land within the said Reserve that remains unentered and unpaid for, be sold to the highest bidder for cash in hand. And should there then remain a deficiency in the sum total of receipts, that deficiency shall be supplied by a levy pro rata on all the real estate within the Reserve, to be assessed and collected within six months; and on its collection, and not before, patents shall issue, restoring the fee-simple in the several legal claimants; provided however, that should any tract or lot of land in the legal subdivision of forty acres, fail to bring the sum of one and a fourth dollars per acre at the public sale, its last claimant if any there be, and if not, its last occupant shall be liable for the deficiency and summary process shall issue for its collection.

Sec. 5. The inhabitants of said Reserve shall have power to adopt such Constitution, and pass such laws for their good government as they may deem proper, provided such Constitution and laws be not repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Sec. 6. All persons elected or appointed to office under the Constitution and laws of said Reserve, shall, previous to entering on their duties, take an oath to support the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Sec. 7. Fugitives from justice and persons accused of crime, having been inhabitants of said Reserve, and found in any state or territory of the United States, shall be given up to the legal authorities of said Reserve, on application to the executive of the state or territory in which they are found; provided, however, the proper and usual proof is adduced, and provided also, the crime of which he or they are charged, is punishable in said state or territory. And fugitives from justice from any state or territory, or persons charged with crime and in said Reserve, shall in like manner be given up, whether the crime with which he or they are charged, be or be not, punishable by the laws of said Reserve.

Sec. 8. All persons applying for location and settlement within said Reserve, are required to furnish proof to the satisfaction of the superintendent thereof, that he is in full communion with the Mormon church; and upon making an entry of land, or purchasing or contracting to purchase a town lot, mineral lot, salt spring or mill-seat, or any part or parcel of either, he shall be entitled to all the privileges, immunities and exemptions conferred or intended to be conferred by this act, and all such shall be deemed to have relinquished all claim to a representation in the Congress of the United States, and to vote for President and vice President of the same.

Answer to a letter dated, Macomb, McDonough County, Ill., Jan. 14th, 1845.

Wm. P. Richards, Esq.,

Respected friend:—I received your very interesting communication of the 14th inst. by the hand of Mr. Shelton, and after a careful perusal, laid the document before a council of some of the leading official members of our Church. Suffice it to say that it was well received, and agreed upon, that I should forthwith write to you, asking permission to publish the entire document in our weekly paper, together with our own proposals and views.

And if you please you may write to leading members of the legislature, that the subject matter may be agitated by them, and all that you may think proper to write to in the several states and territories, preparatory to obtaining their sanction to the project. So that the Congress may take action on the subject, at the earliest possible period after petitions can be gotten up circulated and returned.

In haste, very respectfully &c.,

GEORGE MILLER.

Macomb, Feb. 3d, 1845.

Rev. George Miller,

Respected friend:—Yours of the 28th ult., has just been received. I am gratified that you received my communication kindly and judged of it candidly. My further reflections have more and more satisfied me that if this business is followed up in the proper spirit, with forbearance and calm reasoning with those who may at first seem to doubt or disapprove, — a plan may be devised that will meet the approbation of all parties, and be productive of great eventual good.

Considering the mutual exasperation and jealousy that unfortunately exist, it seems to me important to consider, as the next step, what would be the best — or rather, the least objectionable manner of bringing it before the public. Should it appear as an Anti-Mormon proposition, it might arouse the hostility of many of your people; while on the other hand, should it appear as a Mormon project it might be freely attacked and denounced by their enemies. Under the circumstances, I am inclined to believe that the plan you propose, the printing of it first in your paper, accompanied by such remarks as you may see proper to make, will be the best; — and therefore, though I am averse generally to having my name figuring in the public prints, I give my consent to the publishing in extenso my letter to you.

I will be pleased at any time, to hear from you.

Most respectfully, yours,

WM. P. RICHARDS.

The foregoing correspondence has inspired us with lively interest, and the personal has confirmed our hope, that there were many patriotic men and high minded philanthropists whose hearts were not yet hardened by bigotry nor their eyes blinded over with prejudice. And we bless all peace makers without distinction of parties or religions. And if the benevolent hearted of all ranks and conditions will rise up together and do the same, diligently endeavoring to assuage the violence of factious and schismatic minds; their names will be emblazoned on the roll of fame, along with the founders of our independence. But if the folds of our United States constitution are not ample enough to tolerate and protect even all the diversified religions of the whole earth, as occasion may require; then, the noble framers thereof have deceived themselves, an untalented emigrants from all nations, with the form of a government that is more specious than solid. — But we will not yet persuade ourselves that America is not large enough to furnish an asylum for men of all religions and free thinkers too. And we firmly believe that our constitution is liberal enough to allow every man to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, without ever impairing the liberty or rights of other men.

And we will lay down the following principle which the friends to national union may do well to consider. The principle is this, that men of congenial religious or other interests, should separate themselves from those of adverse faith and interests and pair off, each to each. Let the Roman Catholic cleave to the Roman Catholic, and the Jew to the Jew, and the Mahometan to the Mahometan, and the Presbyterian and Latter day Saint, each to their own people. united however under one general government, on the righteous terms of mutual reciprocity, as necessity and advantage may require. The promiscuous intermixture of heterogeneous bodies for the purpose of unity and strength is alike distant both from pure religion and sound philosophy.

The framers of the constitution never contemplated reducing all religions to one; but they contemplated the very diverse interest of people living in different climates habituated to different religions and policies, harmonized however into one grand confederacy, without merging their individual identity. If we as a people were colonized according to the above suggestions in some remote territory of the United States, it would then be demonstrated whether we should sink under the weight of our own corruptions or rise with the splendid buoyancy of our own virtues. We have ever sought to test the value of our civil and religious polity apart from other people. Our coming to the State of Illinois from the extreme unsettled border of the far west, was not a matter of choice with us, but of necessity. And although we have now a large investment in Illinois which must depreciate by removal; still, we are willing to accept of any eligible location within any part of the territory of the United States under such wholesome provisions as may hereafter be stipulated and agreed upon. The principal features of the bill before us, with some variations, will receive the cordial acquiescence of this people. If our removal should take place before we have opportunity to effect a favorable sale of property here, we should require so much as a convenient outfit as would raise us above immediate want and insupportable suffering. If we should be located on some frontier exposed to foreign invasion, the interests of the nation to which we are bound by the strongest ties, would suggest the expediency of furnishing us with military stores and arms adequate to the demand. One error in the bill now before us cannot pass unnoticed. The territory of 24 miles square is altogether too contracted for a people, numbering with our families little less than 300,000 souls, besides some 200,000 more that would cleave to us from affection, friendship or interest. A half a million persons settling a new and uncultivated region, must necessarily require a wider range than if they came into a highly cultivated country. A portion of territory not less than 200 miles square, would be none too great or roomy for the increase of the people arising in a period of 10 years judging from the analogy of ten years that have gone by.

Any one of the following portions of territory might be considered by this people as eligible. 1st. West of the State of Missouri, a territory of 200 miles square. 2d. From the mouth of Bad Axe river, bounded by the Mississippi west, north to the mouth of Chippewa river, thence east 80 miles, thence south 80 miles, thence west to the place of beginning in the territory of Wisconsin. 3d. A similar portion of territory lying in the western part of Texas, from the mouth of the Colorado river on the Gulf of Mexico, extending west and north to the extreme limits of Texas. 4th. A similar portion of territory in Oregon bounded by the Pacific ocean on the west, and Oregon (or Columbia) river on the north. Now if the legislatures of the western states and territories will pass resolutions favorable to the project, and the people generally petition Congress to set off a territory as proposed in the above, according to the prayer of the petition, that we as a community may forward to the congress of 1845 & 1846, according to the stipulations as above suggested, it will meet the sanction and approbation of a large majority of the official and lay members, of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter day Saints.

GEORGE MILLER.

MORE ANNEXATION?

What we apprehended and deprecated, it appears by the following article from a Detroit paper, is actually coming to pass; and this annexation of Canada is to be insisted upon as a counterpoise to the proposed annexation of Texas. This Government has no pretence of claim to Canada, it is true; but, according to our view of the subject, quite as much as it has to Texas. There are natives of the United States in Canada as well as in Texas, and even more of them; and the project of the annexation of Canada may at least claim the support of those whose conclusion argument in favor of the annexation of Texas is that it will enlarge the area of human freedom.

We trust, after all, however, that our friends in Michigan are not in earnest in their memorial in favor of the Annexation of Canada, but intend it only as an argumentum ad absurdum against the Annexation of Texas. [Nat. Intel.]

From the Detroit Daily Advertiser, Jan. 10. —

Counter Annexation.—The citizens of Detroit are generally well satisfied with the Union as it is. They have never sought to extend its limits for their own sectional advantage, against the wishes of other sections of our common country. — They gave a memorable example of their moderation and fidelity, under strong temptations, during the late Canadian troubles. But they are not insensible to the value of the country lying on their North, or indifferent to their own relative weight as Northern men in the Councils of the Union. And the pending propositions for the Annexation of Texas, with more or less prospect of ultimate success, have at length moved them to serious action.

A petition to Congress for the acquisition of Canada, contemporaneously with that of Texas, is in general circulation among our citizens. It has already received, we understand, numerous signatures, among which are found the names of our most respectable, sober, and influential citizens—men who are not likely to turn back in their undertaking. Many more will doubtless be added. The prayer of the petitioners is that negotiations for the cession of Canada may be opened with the British Government; and that in any proceeding for the annexation of Texas a provision may be inserted that the same shall not take effect until Canada has also been annexed. The reasons set forth are two-fold. First, that the addition of Texas to the South diminishes the like addition of Canada to the North in order to preserve the just balance and equipoise of the Union. Second, that Canada is in itself a most desirable acquisition for the United States, with a view both to military defence and to commercial intercourse.

Such are the views which many of the best citizens of Detroit, without distinction of party, are about to lay before Congress. We invite for them the attention of our fellow citizens elsewhere, and if they approve, their active cooperation and aid. Other portions of Michigan, we doubt not, will cordially concur, and all along Northern New York and Vermont, we should anticipate a warm and effective response. The whole North, indeed, is deeply interested. What say you, fellow citizens?

The proposition, it will be seen, is conditional. If Texas comes in, then Canada. But if Southern annexation is abandoned, then the Northern will share the same fate. The North, strong in its own resources and free energies, never submits to encroachment or invasion.

Earthquake at St. Thomas.—The Captain of the brig Orleans, which arrived here from St. Thomas on Sunday, reports, that a slight shock of an earthquake was felt at that place on the 2d instant, about 11 o'clock, A. M., which lasted a very short time, — no damage done. [Pic.]

subject to the same rules, as it was in the bodies of the Antedilevians.

Man, at the present day, needs food to nourish and invigorate his body, as well as generations that have passed long gone. Had he, unwelcome food, gluttony, and drunkenness, causes sickness and death, and always do, ever since Adam was banished from the garden of Eden, and sent forth to seek his fortune by the sweat of his brow.

Poor man may talk of changes, he may philosophize and undertake to prove that nature's laws have changed, many abolished or become obsolete, and can now be violated with impunity. Alas! poor deluded mortal! after it is too late, and to his utter astonishment, he will find nature has repeated none of her laws, created no new, abolished no rule by which he must be governed in every thing he does, if he desires a long life, blessed with health and prosperity.

What is nature? What are nature's laws?—Type.

Recovery of Property.—The following circumstances are as true as it is singular. A few years ago two gentlemen, who had been in the city for some time, and a friend, on examining the property found a scrap of paper on which was written, Seven Hundred Pounds in a Title. They took the paper to a lawyer, and examined all his apartments, carefully, but in vain. They sold his collection of books to a bookseller, and paid the lawyer in proportion. The singularity of the circumstance occasioned them frequently to converse about it, and they reflected that among the books sold, which had taken place upwards of seven weeks before there was a full edition of Titlow's sermons. The probability of this being what was alluded to by the word "Title," on the piece of paper, made one of them immediately wait upon the bookseller who had purchased the books, and ask him if he had the edition of Titlow's, which had been among the books sold to him; on his replying in the affirmative, the gentleman immediately purchased them, and on carefully examining the leaves, found back of the last page, in the various places in the volume, the amount of seven hundred pounds. But what is more, on the back of the preceding page, the bookseller informed him that a gentleman had called for him the catalogue of his edition to be sold, had written to him and desired it might be sent to Cambridge, which was accordingly done; but the books not answering the gentleman's expectations, they had been in the bookseller's shop the period of this very singular discovery. —Foreign paper.

Immigration.—A letter from Dresden, published in the New York Herald, states that several associations of Germans have been formed for emigrating to the United States, the ensuing summer, amounting in the aggregate to 20,000 souls—one company of Bavarians and Saxons, chiefly farmers and mechanics, are bound to Ohio, and Western Virginia; another company, formed at Antwerp, has bought large tracts of land in Tennessee, to which they will remove; other companies are bound to Florida, Texas, Missouri, and Iowa. The companies are well supplied with resources, and have just left at New York, to select and purchase their land.

Business of the City.—The Chamber of Commerce has just formed the order at Washington, that it wanted $20,000 in funds on New York. The answer came immediately back that it could be had, and the check was transmitted in a short time after by the evening mail. Affording such wonderful facilities as this, is it not surprising that means are not adopted by Congress for its continuance and extension at least to New York. —[Fairfax, 31st.]

The one-day election bill has been returned by the President to Congress with his signature, and is therefore now a law of the land.

Life against Licentiousness.—We see that a law against Licentiousness has been again proposed in the Legislature of this State, making it a State Prison offense to be guilty of adultery or fornication. We do not expect, however, that any legislation will take place on this subject. The same movement has been made by the extreme moralists every year, for the purpose of hanging on a few speeches on the immorality of the age. But as we said, we do not expect legislation will make a felony. The morality of the men who assemble at Albany, Washington and elsewhere to legislate for the country, are themselves so much immoralized in consequence of association with speculators, office-seekers, gamblers and other members, that they may rather be expected to pass a law giving a premium for deceiving and betraying poor innocent females. Two-thirds of the licentiousness of this country are monopolized by the legislators, and the bulk of the remainder by the clergy. —Herald.

CAPTURE OF SANTA ANNA.

Intelligence from Vera Cruz renders it certain that Santa Anna was captured on the 15th Jan. After making several unsuccessful attacks on Puebla, he abandoned his army and sought to escape the country by reaching the sea coast. He was captured by two Indians, and on the 25th confined in the prison at Perote. He says he is treated worse than he was when a prisoner of the Texans. He claims the privilege of leaving the country, and no doubt with success.

with his principal friends, to repose from their toils; and declares that he had rather die than suffer the insults he is now receiving. It is understood that he will be immediately tried as a traitor, and the result is hardly doubtful.

Letters by the Cambria state that Mr. Coleman, the inventor of the "Edinburg" attachment to the piano forte, is likely to dispose of his patent right in London for a magnificent sum. He had the honor of exhibiting his invention to the Queen and Prince Albert a few weeks since, and both expressed themselves highly delighted with the tones of the improved instrument. The Times, and other journals of influence, speak in the warmest terms of commendation of the invention, and are of opinion that it will create a revolution in the style of music composed for the piano.

FROM THE N. O. JEFFERSONIAN REPUBLICAN. COAST SURVEY.

F. H. Giddens, Esq., of the United States civil engineers, acting under the instructions of Professor Caho, the able superintendent of the general coast survey, has arrived in this city, with the view of commencing immediately a reconnaissance of the Gulf coast of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama. We are glad that this important work has been confided to such an accomplished and energetic officer. He will probably begin by a general examination of the coast between the vicinity of this city and Pensacola bay. His discretionary with him to begin at Mobile or near this point; but in view of the superior importance of the navigation and commerce, we presume operations will commence here. He will also examine the intermediate country from the mouth of the Mississippi to the chain of lakes—the lake routes to be fully explored. The charts of the coast in question are very imperfect, or we should rather say, limited, only superficial and partial surveys having been heretofore attempted. They seem to point out different centres of operation favorable to triangulation, as Lake Borgne, Mobile bay, and Pensacola bay; but this, with the nature of the triangulation possible, and the best position for the bases, Mr. Giddens will, of course, determine. He is also to ascertain how the lakes may be best connected. We know of no work so important to Louisiana, and especially to this city, from the vast interior commerce it opens to us, Mississippi too, with her immense pine forests and materials for naval stores on ship building, is deeply interested; and we may venture to assure Mr. G. that he will receive here, and all along his line of operations, every facility and information from the citizens. He will find that the coast from the mouth of the Mississippi, or from Lake Borgne to Mobile bay, offers great facilities for triangulation. That from Mobile to Pensacola is more difficult.

Napoleon's Value of Time.—Napoleon Bonaparte having one day visited a school, said to the scholars, on leaving them, "My lady, every hour of lost time is a chance of future misfortune." One of his biographers, Bouffande, adds that these remarkable words, afford the maxim which formed, in a great degree, the rule of his conduct. Well did he understand the value of time, even his leisure was attended with exertion of mind.

Shipwrecked.—The Cincinnati Enquirer of the 5th says: the steamer Hancock, on her way to Pittsburgh, struck a snag at Moscow, about twenty miles above this city. The snag glanced off her bow and entered her harbor guards, which were completely carried away, with part of the cook-house, and nearly all contained. The hurricane reef was also partially damaged. No injury was sustained by the passengers or crew. —[St. Louis Rep.]

Oregon Legislation.—We see it stated, that a company is forming in Oregon county, Wisconsin territory, to emigrate to the Oregon territory; one in Muscatine, Cedar and Scott counties, I. T.; another in Calumet and Dubuque; another in the southern counties of I. T.; another in Putnam county, Ill.; several families in Mercer county, one family at East, and several young men from Rock Island county, and one from Ohio, are making preparations for this journey.

The number of hogs packed in the Washburn valley this season is stated at 62,400—a falling off compared with last season, of 62,600.

The New Orleans Bulletin of the 20th ultimo, says that the quantity of pork received at that port the present season is less by more than one-half the quantity received to same time last year.

Disasterful Occurrence.—The coroner on Monday evening held an inquest on the body of a little girl named Mary Horley, whose death was caused by its clothes taking fire during the absence of its mother from her residence, in the vicinity of the Schuylkill, Second and Filbert streets. —[Phil. U. S. Gaz.]

Nuns at Pottsville.—An attempt is making to establish a Catholic Nunnery in the coal regions of this State, and no doubt with success.

The Accident at Auburn.—The convict at Stratton, an account of whose dreadful accident I sent you on Wednesday, died this morning from the effect of his wounds. He was terribly mangled, and it is surprising to me that he lived so long after the fatal occurrence. He was an unmarried man, and was serving out his sentence for having been engaged in making bogus money. His term would have expired in about sixteen months. —[Auburn Letter to Live, Jan. 5.]

Lowell.—The statistics of Lowell manufactures show that the whole amount of capital invested in manufactures in that place is over $11,000,000.

A Play Stopped.—We see by the Philadelphia papers, that a play detailing the Herberton and Mercer affair was ordered off the stage of the Chestnut theatre, by the Mayor.

John Powers, recently pardoned by President Tyler from the Kentucky penitentiary, in which he had been incarcerated for robbing the mail, has been arrested at New Orleans, charged with abducting a slave and committing forgery.

FROM BUENOS AYRES AND MONTEVIDEO.—The New York Commercial Advertiser has received the Buenos Ayres British Packet of November 23 and 30, from which they glean the following items:

William Brent, Esq., was recognized as charge d'affaires of the United States, near the Government of Buenos Ayres, on the 15th of November. The Packet copies from the Gaeceta—the official journal of the Buenos Ayrean Government—a long article reviewing and condemning the proceedings of Commodore Vothrees, in the seizure of the Argentine squadron. Among other things the Gaeceta alleges that the Rosalia—the vessel of Mr. Burrows—was not provided with the requisite legal papers to establish her American character, and that she had been for a long time employed in conveying provisions to the besieged inhabitants of Montevideo.

The accounts from Montevideo are of much the same tenor with those we have had for the last year and more. The besieged were constructing new fortifications, and manifested no disposition to yield; but a letter in the Packet says that the foreign volunteers were growing discontented, and hopes were entertained that they would resume their neutrality.

Francisco Rivera was reported to be still in the Brazilian province of Rio Grande.

The debt of the State of New York at the present time, according to the recent report of the comptroller of that State, is $20,068,413 25.

The whole original cost of the canals of the State is officially reported to be $30,161,304 34; and the toll on them during the last year amounted to $2,393,225 60. The entire canal system of the State pays an interest on the cost of the canals, as put down above, of about 6 per cent. per annum.

The number of acres of land assessed in the State is 27,675,075; and the assessed value of real and personal estate, as corrected by the board of supervisors, is $369,891,923. The amount of State, county, and town taxes levied on this sum is $4,243,101.

The whole number of free banks at present in operation is seventy, twenty-nine having been closed by the comptroller, and ten by their own stockholders.

Rights of Married Women.

A case occurred recently, in the Circuit Court of New York, where a husband was shown to have abandoned his wife thirteen years ago, since which he has done nothing for her, and now resides in New Jersey. In 1842, she leased a house at $800 per annum for the purpose of keeping boarders. It was contended that being a married woman, she had no right to make a contract, and the lease was void. The Court held that a married woman, in such a case, where she has a family to maintain, and her husband has abandoned her for thirteen years, has a right to make a contract, and the lease must be held to be valid.

Anti-Rent Movement.—On Wednesday last Deputy Sheriff Sedwick arrested and brought in Joseph Finkle, of Anram, one of the leading anti-renters of that town, and one of the persons who was instrumental in getting Boughton, alias "Big Thunder," and the Indians of Rensselaer County, to visit this county at the first meeting that was held. These facts were fully proven on the examination, and also that he had taken an active part in the principal anti-rent meetings which have been held. It was also shown that he had taken possession of a large tract of land which did not belong to him, and had avowed his determination not to give it up—that he had no good right to it as any one else, and he meant to retain the possession of it at all hazards. The examination of Finkle has not yet been brought to a close. —[Hudson Gazette Jan. 28.]

Natal.—The U. S. ship Portsmouth, Commander Montgomery, got under way in Hampton Roads on Saturday morning, and have too off Fortress Monroe to salute the flag of Commodore Skinner, whose broad pennant was hoisted on board the U. S. ship Jamestown, Commander Cunningham, which latter ship had weighed anchor, and came up abreast. The two ships then proceeded to sea in company, with a strong north west wind, the Jamestown, we learn, ahead, and apparently increasing the distance between the Ports and herself. We expect, however, to learn further particulars from the pilots, when they return.

The U. S. steamer Union, Lieut. Com. McBlair, left the anchorage yesterday for Washington. —[Norfolk Herald, Jan. 28.]

Arsenic.—A workman in England, was poisoned and died from working up arsenic in the manufacture of composite candles, for the purpose of giving them the appearance of wax. His arm and glands were swollen, purple patches gradually covered his arm, showing the putrescent state of his blood. The poison was more largely in its effects by absorption than if taken internally, but equally certain. Similar accidents have happened in America, through want of sufficient caution in the manufacture of Paris green, in which arsenic is a principal ingredient.

BRITISH ENTERPRISE AND AMERICAN SPINENESS.—The richest provinces of Persia have been lately thrown upon the British by the successful enterprise of Lieut. Selby, of the Indian navy. He ascended the Kobran in the Assyria, as far as Shuster, which has a population of 8,000 souls, and by following up another branch of the river to the westward, called the Desful, approached within thirteen miles of the town of that name, and about the same distance from the ruins of Susa, the Sushan of the Book of Daniel. The products of the region thus thrown open, are not only highly valuable, but admirably adapted to our markets. We might exchange for them our cotton fabrics to great advantage. Would it not be advisable, on the part of our government, to make an effort for ourselves in this part of the world?

New Kind of Fuel.—During the late war on Lake Ontario, the wood of the steamer Onondaga gave out, whereupon the Captain used about 30 tubs of butter for fuel, and by that means reached port.

Insanity among Quakers.—The London Globe states, as a fact deduced from the statistics of the hospitals, that the proportion of insane persons among the Quakers of England and Scotland is much larger than prevails among the rest of the community. This is owing, says the same paper, to great liveliness of conscience in matters of ordinary morality and the limitation of the mind, by reason of the peculiar tenets of that sect, to few objects of pursuit or pastime.

[N. O. Pic.]

Choctaws.—Some three or four hundred of these Indians are now camped on the Big Black, about eight or ten miles from Canton, Miss. They are waiting the arrival of the rest of the tribe, to proceed to their new homes beyond the Mississippi. Messrs. Forrester, of Mississippi, and Anderson, of Tennessee, have the contract for their removal. —[Bee.]

AN EXTRAORDINARY CASE.

The New Orleans Bee, of the 22d ult., contains a report of the trial of Pauline, a slave of Peter Rappeneck, for striking her mistress so as to cause the shedding of blood.

The testimony went to show that the slave Pauline was purchased by Peter Rappeneck about two years since from Mr. Francois Ruben, who owns a plantation a short distance below Natchitoches in this state, on which Rappeneck had been for some years as overseer. Some two months since, Rappeneck removed to this city, and rented one half of a double dwelling house, No. 52 Bayou Road from Mr. Isenhardt, who occupied the other half. About six weeks since, Rappeneck, who had business to transact in St. Louis, leaving his wife, whom he had represented to Isenhardt and his daughter to be crazy, and his children, together with upwards of $200 in money, in charge of Pauline, who was proven to be his paramour, and at present claims to be pregnant by him.

Immediately after Rappeneck's departure, Pauline took possession of his mistress's apartments, and removed her and the three children, aged eight, four and two years, to a back cabinet which she had previously occupied. Mrs. Rappeneck, who had sufficiently recovered to appear in Court, testified that since her husband's absence, she had been subjected to the most cruel and barbarous treatment from her slave, who had beaten her at times with a cane or leather strap, and with her fist, and had obtained such a mastery over her that she was afraid if she disclosed to any one her sufferings, that she would take her life. She also testified that she had a knowledge of her husband's intimacy with Pauline, which had caused much ill feeling between them, and had resulted on several occasions, in her being struck by her husband. Mrs. R. also testified to the cruel manner in which her children had been beaten by Pauline.

The testimony of Mrs. R. was corroborated by a slave named Dianh, w. o. on or about Christmas, had been employed by Pauline to work by the day in washing clothes. She stated that on the second day after she had been employed, upon Pauline's returning from market, and discovering that a biscuit was missing from the breakfast table, she charged the taking of it upon Constance, the eldest child, who upon denying the theft, was dreadfully beaten with a leather strap by Pauline, who also tied the child's clothes over her head and caused her to remain for some time in a kneeling position, with her knees resting upon the rough edges of small pieces of brick, which she had broken up for the occasion. In a few days after she heard Pauline abusing some one in the cabinet, and upon her (Pauline) leaving the house, she entered the room, and for the first time discovered that there was a person confined there. She raised the mosquito bar and inquired if she could render Mrs. R. any assistance, but upon receiving no direct answer, (Mrs. R. fearing to disclose her situation,) she paid no further attention to it. On Saturday, the 13th instant, she again heard Pauline in the cabinet cursing her mistress, calling her opprobrious names, and telling her if she did not get up and go to work, she would whip her to death. Pauline at the same time dragging her mistress by the hair out of bed upon the floor, and beating her in the face with her fist. Upon her (Dianh) remonstrating with Pauline, she attempted to close the door of the cabinet upon her, and forced the child Constance to hand her a cane, with which she beat Mrs. R. in a most shocking and cruel manner. The witness on the same day informed a gentleman, for whom she was doing some washing, of what had occurred, who on the next day addressed an anonymous letter to the Mayor, which led to the arrest of Pauline and the release of Mrs. R. and her children from their horrid situation. The testimony of the Mayor and Dr. Bernaud, in regard to the condition of the sufferers, was merely a confirmation of the above statements.

The case was submitted to the Jury without argument, who, after being instructed by the court in regard to the law applicable to the case, returned a verdict of guilty, and sentenced her to death. She is to be hung on the 25th of March.

Outrages in Cattaraugus County, New York.—We learn from the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, that serious disturbances have taken place in Cattaraugus county, among the people residing on lands formerly belonging to the Holland Land Company; the Sheriff has been arrested by those on whom he was sent to serve process, and other demonstrations made upon the authorities after the fashion of proceedings in Red-seller and Columbia counties.—St. Louis Rep.

It seems, says the Commercial, that the land has passed through several hands and foreclosures have been made and writs of ejectment served upon several of the occupants. The Sheriff while in the act of serving a writ in the vicinity of Ellicottville, was taken into custody, and several of his neighbors who started to look after him were also restrained. Our informant states that a mob of from three to four hundred individuals collected at Ellicottville, threatened to tear down the jail for the purpose of releasing some friends confined there, and making demonstrations to burn the land office.

Col. Cooke, of Springville, was called upon by several citizens of Cattaraugus county, who requested his co-operation in suppressing the disturbance. Col. C. immediately warned several of his regiment who collected at Springville, and started for Ellicottville. A person arrived from the scene of the disturbance for the purpose of procuring powder and ball.

THE OREGON QUESTION.

The writer of the following letter to the Philadelphia Ledger claims, it will be seen, for his statements a semi-official character.

Washington, Jan. 23, 1845.

I learn, through a channel of direct communication with one of the important parties concerned in the matter, that the negotiations between Mr. Pakenham and Mr. Calhoun, for the adjustment of the Oregon boundary, were yesterday brought to a close, and have not resulted satisfactorily to our government. The point of differences originates, of course, in the respective claims to a northern and southern line; ours being represented to run as high as 54 degrees 40 minutes of north latitude, whilst the British demand denies the existence of our title, within five degrees of the fixed limit. The prevailing opinion among the statesmen of both parties is, that our title is capable of being substantiated to the whole tract to the most northern point, though Mr. Adams, in his recent speech on Texas, asserted that the country owed him all the gratitude for inserting in our treaty with Spain for the cession of the Floridas, the article that alone establishes our claim to Oregon, and that he doubted whether it extended beyond 49 degrees of north latitude. Although Mr. Ingersoll, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations in the House, took occasion this morning to discountenance the idea relative to the premature closing of these negotiations, I cannot be mistaken in the fact which is here asserted, nor that all correspondence in reference to Oregon, between the English Minister and the Department of State, has positively ceased. This negotiation has ended entirely contrary to the expectations of Mr. Calhoun, who, but a few days since expressed himself as anticipating the best possible results, and manifested no little feeling at the ambiguity of Mr. Archer, who referred to it in the Senate. As soon as the facts are officially promulgated, Congress will proceed at once to pass the bill which is now pending in the House, and to extend the protection and laws of the United States over Oregon as a Territory.

Compliment from the Israelites.—The Charleston Courier says, that the Israelites of that city are about to make a beautiful and magnificent present to the Hon. C. C. Memminger, their able counsel in the great Hebrew case now pending in the courts of that State, in token of their grateful sense of his arduous and valuable professional services in their behalf, he having generously declined a fee for the same. It consists of an elegant and richly chased silver pitcher of the Rebecca pattern, near two feet in height, and a massive silver waiter, eighteen inches in diameter. On the front of the pitcher is an inscription showing from whom it is a present, and the services sought to be rewarded. It is also, on the right, a view of Jerusalem, with the fruit bearing palm, and on the left the palm of the desert. Rebecca at the well, stooping to draw water, and Abraham's servant, with his camels, in the distance. The waiter is chased with a rich oak border of leaves and acorns, and is decorated centrally with a beautiful wreath of roses and rose leaves.

Railroad System of the United States.—The Cincinnati Chronicle has a list of the finished railroads in the United States which extend over nearly five thousand miles. In 1835 there were but 981 miles of railroad completed in the country, which leaves 3,768 miles made since that year. The average cost is put down at $20,000 per mile, making the capital invested $75,360,000.

At present the income of the finished roads nearly equals the annual expenditure in capital; so that the extension of railroads is now in a great degree paid for by the goods transported on the existing roads. It is also true, that the transportation of freight costs less; so that the cost of making railroads now is in fact paid for by the savings produced by the railroads. Some of the different roads, after receiving one or two additional links, will form gigantic lines of iron steam communication.

1. For example, the great route from Portland to Buffalo, will soon receive two important additions, one at the eastern extremity prolonging it to Bangor, and the other at the western, uniting Buffalo by means of Mad river and Little Miami railroad, to the Ohio, when a steam car may run from Bangor (Me.) to Cincinnati (Ohio)—in a continuous railroad one thousand miles in extent! This supposes that the projected road from Buffalo to Sandusky is made.

2. When the New York and New Haven, and the Baltimore railroads are, to the Ohio completed, (both of which will be done in three years,) there will only need a link from the Ohio to the Little Miami railroad to make another grand route of eleven hundred miles from Bangor to Cincinnati, by the great central route. Two thirds of this whole route are now completed; so that the completion of the other third is no longer a chimerical idea. Of the remaining third, the capital is already at hand, for the greater part. The part for which some effort is necessary is that from the Ohio river to the Little Miami railroad. But, when the Baltimore railroad reaches the Ohio river there will be no want of capital to complete the remaining link.

Patent Office.—In the house of Representatives on the 29th ult. the annual report from the Commissioner of Patents for the year 1844, was presented, showing that during the year 502 patents have been issued; that 539 patents have expired; that 1,045 have been made for patents; that 380 caveats have been filed; that the receipts of the Patent office have been in amount $41,220.06 from which are to be deducted $10,040 repaid on applications withdrawn; that the ordinary expenses of the office have been $24,228.04, to which is to be added $2,076.49 for library and agricultural, and leaving a net balance of $6,175.73 to the credit of the patent fund for the year; that $2,022.66 has been paid for the restoration of models, records, and drawing under the act of 3d March, 1837; the number of applications for extension of patents was 12; two were granted and ten rejected; seven patents have been extended since the act of 4th July, 1836; the whole number of patents issued up to 1st January, 1845, is 14,024. The report was referred to the Committee on Patents.

That Coach.—The New Bedford Commercial Register states that the Coach, ordered some months since by the National Road Stage company, to be built by Messrs. Downing and Abbott, of Concord, New Hampshire, to take Mr. Clay over the mountains, on his way from Ashland to the White House, has arrived in Boston on its passage south, and goes by the brig Chatham, to Baltimore, consigned to Howard Kennedy Esq., with directions to have it at Wheeling in season to take President Polk on his way over the mountains. It is said to be a very creditable specimen of Yankee skill, taste, and faithful workmanship. It was to have been called the "Harry of the West," behaved so strangely different last November from what this stage company expected of them that they have simply christened their coach the "President."

Boston Notions.—The city of Boston appropriated nearly $200,000 during the last year for public instruction. Of this sum $80,000 was paid for the salaries of teachers.

Counterfeit five dollar gold pieces, so well executed as to puzzle good judges to detect them, are in active circulation.

MR. HUGH PATRICK, Dentist, begs to announce to the ladies and gentlemen of this city, his removal to that part of the post office, lately occupied by Mr. S. Rigdon, and returns his sincere thanks to his numerous friends in this city and surrounding country, for the extensive patronage he has received since he arrived here, and in doing so, he would assure them the same unremitting attention, which has hitherto gained for him the approbation of those by whom he has been favored, it shall be his constant object to cultivate.

Patrick, begs leave to inform the public in general, that he continues manufacturing the various articles in the above line; rings, brooches, pins, seals, keys, bracelets, chains, and various other ornaments too numerous to mention, two thirds of the payments expected in cash. CONSUMPTION OF THE LUNGS.
Coughs and Colds, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pains or Soreness of the Chest, Difficulty of Breathing, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Croup, &c.

AMONG all the famous medicines for Consumption, none seems to be meeting with greater success, or gaining a higher reputation than that most wonderful article, Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry! That it stands at the head of all other remedies is now universally conceded. It has cured thousands upon thousands of all classes—in cases of the most dangerously Consumptive character—and physicians of the greatest eminence throughout our whole country unhesitatingly recommend it as the most powerful curative of Pulmonary diseases, in the whole range of Pharmacy. Thousands of consumptive patients have already tested its exalted virtues, and confessed its surpassing, excellent and amazing power. The remarkable success of this Balsam is no doubt owing in a great measure to the peculiarly agreeable and powerful nature of its ingredients. It is a fine Herbal Medicine, composed chiefly of Wild Cherry Bark and the genuine Iceland Moss—the latter imported expressly for this purpose—the rare medicinal virtues of which are also combined, by a new chemical process with the Extract of Tar—thus rendering the whole Compound the most certain and efficacious remedy ever discovered.

A CASE OF ASTHMA.
The following is from a distinguished Lawyer of the city of New York, who had been afflicted with the Asthma for upwards of Twenty Years; and who, after reading such cases can doubt the efficacy of this medicine?
New York, January 25, 1843.

I have been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for 24 years—sometimes so severely as to be confined to my room for weeks; and although attended by various medical advisers, of the highest reputation and skill in the country, the relief was but partial and temporary—twice the disease proved nearly fatal to my life. Some few weeks ago I commenced taking Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, which gave me instant relief, and a single bottle produced in a few days what I believe to be a radical and perfect cure.

SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 10, 1845.

Mr. Editor:—

Enclosed is an outline of the speech of Mr. Babbitt, in the house upon the senate bill, for the unconditional repeal of the city charter of Nauvoo. It is but due him to say this is only a synopsis of his remarks, reported from notes taken at the time. Mr. Babbitt entered into the discussion with a great deal of warmth, and it is utterly impossible to do him justice upon paper. He was listened to with a great deal of attention—but had he the eloquence of a Demosthenes—or a Cicero—it would have availed him nothing. The whigs came up in one solid phalanx, and united with the opposition of a number of democrats who considered themselves instructed to vote for an unconditional repeal.

All that could be had been done, by Messrs. Babbitt, Backenstos, and others of their friends to save the charter in a modified form—but their attempts were fruitless. The house was nearly divided upon amending the bill, but when that failed, and the question came up upon the passage of the bill, it was carried by a large majority.

Mr. Backenstos, has prepared and introduced a bill for a new charter—it was twice read, and referred to a select committee of nine, one from each judicial circuit, who reported it back with amendments, which were concurred in; and the bill ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. It will I have no doubt, pass. Too much credit cannot be given to the representatives of Hancock county, for their untiring efforts, to maintain the equal rights of the citizens of Nauvoo.

REPORTER.

House of Representatives, Jan. 18, 45.

Mr. Babbitt's speech upon the senate bill to repeal the city charter of Nauvoo.

Mr. Babbitt of Hancock, arose and said, he would occupy the house but a few moments. He was aware that the question had been ably discussed, and he did not expect, nor desire to continue the debate, but he felt called upon to say a few words in self defence. It was not to put himself right before his constituents, for they knew well the position he occupied, but having opened the discussion, and being somewhat identified with the Mormon people, he was forced out as a target for gentlemen to shoot at. His ideas had been misconstrued—his language perverted, and even his motives attacked, and he felt it both a duty and a privilege, which would not be denied him, to make a brief reply, in order to put himself right before the house. [Go on, go on.]

The gentleman from Macon, (Mr. Benedict,) has favored us with the exhibition of his talents, and given us a rare specimen of eloquence. He seemed to address himself more to the passions than to the sober senses of this house; and his truly able effort would have better graced the hall of a play-actor, than the hall of legislation. His speech was certainly a very pretty theatrical performance, and showed infinitely more action than sense, and reminded me very forcibly of a pile of Hemlock brush, which makes a flashing blaze and great noise while burning, but leaves few ashes behind.

All those who have spoken upon the subject, protested against any design or intention to meddle with religion, but if opposed to amending the senate bill, which provides for an unconditional repeal of the city charter of Nauvoo, before five minutes, were wide from the mark—hurling the missiles of religious persecution and wielding the weapons of religious intolerance, against the Mormons. The attacks upon that people on account of their peculiar religious notions have been frequent and loud even upon this floor by gentlemen who disclaim all intentions to interfere with matters of this sort.

The gentleman from Sangamon (Mr. Logan) says he will not interfere with the Mormon doctrines, but goes on immediately to assail them. He describes the Mormon people as being thrown together—poor and destitute; and is even courteous enough to render for them an excuse for stealing under the keen demands of necessity, or the wild intonations of religious phrenzy. The gentlemen' kindness and lenity is entirely gratuitous, but that oppressed and unfortunate people, though not proud of his compliments, will doubtless be grateful for the generosity of his sentiments; though his estimate of their character is low, still he has evinced a disposition to pity their misfortunes, and overlook their many faults, which he only charges upon them as being fruits of misguided zeal, and the necessary consequence of their false theory and impious faith, still he does not wish to meddle with the Mormon religion—he assails their church—he abuses their prophet—he falsified their doctrines—charged them with every crime, and endeavored to blacken with infamy and disgrace the character of innocent persons, on account of their religion, notwithstanding his loud protestation against the spirit of prejudice and intolerance, they were most manifest in his speech. He seemed to forget the position he had assumed, became regardless of the rights of religious liberty, and carried his unholy warfare, even up to the sanctuary of Mormon faith; and this, sir, has been the case with every advocate upon this floor of the unconditional repeal of the city charter of Nauvoo. Perhaps the gentleman is honest (which his sense forbids) in his description of the Mormon people. Perhaps he does not know that Nauvoo is on the Mississippi river—that a large and respectable city has sprung up in four years, containing about 12,000 inhabitants—that farms have been improved and made productive—that manufactories have been commenced—a rich and growing trade encouraged, and wealth increased by the rapid development of the national resources of our country. Perhaps he does not know that the Mormon citizens of our state are engaged in the common associations of life—that they like other men—are honest and industrious in their pursuit after happiness and wealth. Yet sir, his ignorance of the fact, makes it no less true. For increase of population and advancement in wealth, the Mormon city of Nauvoo is without a parallel in the annals of our country. It has become the object of universal notice and admiration. It has excited the curiosity of the civilized world. It is true, Mr. Speaker, the Mormons came to this state, poor. They had been oppressed by the spirit of intolerance—the scorpion lash of religious despotism had visited their backs and driven them from their possessions and their homes in Missouri. Carry out the doctrines and act upon the principles advanced and advocated upon this floor, and they have but little safety here. Already has the cry of extermination been raised—already has violence been visited upon them, and their persecutors are only waiting for legislative sanction to finish their work of proscription and drive the Mormons from the state of Illinois. Shall we, regardless of their constitutional rights and religious liberty resolve this legislative body into a court of inquisition, and sit in judgment upon the religious opinions of men, which sir, is the basis and structure of all complaint against that people.

To give a detailed account of the Mormons from their first appearance in the state of Ohio up to the present time, (though called for in their defence) would detain the house too long; I will only resort to the prominent points in their history, in order to controvert some of the many groundless charges which have been preferred against them by shameless traducers in vile and contemptible journals so often referred to and quoted by honorable gentlemen upon the floor of this house. The Kirtland bank operations have wrong in to prejudice the Mormons; and it has been boldly asserted here, that they were driven from Ohio, which sir, is not the truth. They were never charged with crime, nor persecuted in that state—lived in peace, and left for the express purpose of going where they could obtain more land at a cheaper rate in one body. The Mormon leaders remained at Kirtland, until after the difficulties broke out in Missouri, and their church is now flourishing in that very town, and instead of having, as many suppose, to leave enmasse, they have between forty and fifty well organized churches in that state; and the Kirtland bank, instead of being instituted by them to swindle the public with, was unfortunately so conducted as to rob the Mormon people themselves, of upwards of $100,000 of their hard earned money. An inflated paper currency was at that time a prevailing epidemic in our own state—it had flooded our entire country with its worthless issues, and most of them with no better character than the shin-plasters, and false promises to pay, made by the Kirtland bank of Ohio. Other institutions have swindled the public as much as that. They had their origin in a prevailing mania of the times—in the unnatural growth of the credit system—were founded upon the false premises of political economy, and only for the association of that institution with the Mormon name, which seems to be a signal for proscription, even here, it would, like all others, have been attributed to the common cause. The spirit of speculation, which even cut the ship of state loose from her safe moorings—gave her to the sport of wind and waves; without chart or compass to steer her course clear of the shoals and quick-sands of national dishonor; the same spirit that was manifested by the South Sea adventurers, in search for the "Golden fleece," seemed to actuate the people of the United States, in their search for treasures in the empty bubble of paper money;—the unredeemed pledges of soulless bodies of incorporation and irresponsible bank promises to pay. Institutions of a similar character existed in other states, and were conducted by men of other religious denominations. The Presbyterians had one at Marion.

In 1831, the Mormons removed to Missouri, for choice they associated themselves together in order the better to enjoy religious communion, this sir, is done by other sects than the Mormons. At Warrenville, Lebanon, and other places in the state of Ohio, societies and other associations have been formed, yet the people have not been alarmed and called in an infringement upon the rights of others because they did not in those instances settle indiscriminately throughout the state; but the Mormons are not confined to the city of Nauvoo, they are scattered throughout our state, are increasing rapidly throughout our country and the whole civilized world is becoming tributary to their strength and numbers. It is their rapid march and onward progress that has aroused the jealousy and induced the opposition with which they have to contend.

In the state of Missouri, they settled as a peaceable and industrious colony, commenced their improvements, were prosperous and happy until the increase of their numbers excited the fears of political demagogues and religious bigots; they were assuming an importance at the ballot box, and making dangerous inroads upon the established forms of religious worship, and the bloody hand of persecution was raised to stay their progress. A mob was assembled under the false pretence that the Mormons were instigating the slaves to mutiny, inducing them to run away and stealing them from their masters. This was not the case, the Mormons never interfered with their institution of slavery, for although they regret its existence, they never have advocated its abolition. Some of their own numbers were slave holders, and this was only a false alarm given as a signal for the expulsion of the Mormons from the state, which was finally effected. Their Printing press was destroyed, their houses torn down, boxes of goods broken open and their contents scattered through the streets and thus robbed of their peace and possessions; destitute and miserable, under an order of extermination from the Governor, and at the mercy of an armed and cruel mob, in the cold and dreary month of November, were turned from their homes and driven from the state.

They came to Illinois and found an asylum here, and if any gentleman wishes to endorse the edict of Gov. Boggs, or justify the violence of the Missouri mobs, he must be ignorant of the facts or destitute of a sense of justice and of right. Their persecution and oppression will ever stand as a living monument of shame and disgrace to mark the intolerant and proscriptive spirit of the people of that state.

They were well received in this State and God forbid that they should ever be ungrateful for the kind attention bestowed upon them—benevolence and charity were extended to them to relieve their sufferings and their wants. Cherished by your private and public care, they were soon reinstated, and by industrious application to their various pursuits became again prosperous and happy.

But Mr. Speaker, that very prosperity kindled here the unhallowed spark of prejudice and light the torch of persecution even in Illinois. Political aspirants feared the potency of their increasing numbers and the religiousists of established churches dreaded their innovations upon existing customs made sacred by the lapse of time—consecrated and revered only for the date of their origin in the older and darker days of antiquity.

The gentleman from Macon (Mr. Benedict) read a portion of a letter purporting to be from the principal men of the church at Nauvoo, protesting against the repeal of their city charter and declaring their intention to appeal from our acts of legislation, in case of an unconditional repeal to the decision of a court of justice.

I will state in relation to that letter, for the information of the gentleman and this House, that it was written by a whig, and was incorporated into their political creed by whig candidates for office. I have ever been found, and my history amongst that people will show this fact, I say I have ever been found opposing this doctrine: Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to have made this a party question, although it has been charged upon me, upon this floor, but since the gentleman from St. Clair (Mr. Morrison) and others have made it a part of this discussion, I will make a few remarks in relation to the position of the Mormons, to the two great political parties of our state. But I will take occasion here to say, that the letter, a part of which the gentleman from Macon read was a private letter, not laid before the committee, nor authorized by me to be produced in this House, but the gentleman brought it up here and offered to read it, if I denied what he stated to be contained in it, I consented that he should read the whole document, but this he refused to do, but read just such parts as he chose, which only went to show that the person subscribing to that letter, was of opinion that the legislature had no right to repeal their city charter inasmuch as rights have accrued under its operations.

Now sir, how came they of that opinion, and in answer to this question, I am brought to the consideration of the influence political parties have endeavored to exert over the Mormon citizens at Nauvoo. It is a fact sir, which cannot be disguised that political parties have been continually endeavoring to outvie each other in demonstrations of kindness and regard for that people. And it is also a fact that those endeavors have done much to induce the granting of extraordinary power which has led to many of the difficulties which are the subject of complaint upon this floor.

For evidence of which we need only go back to the canvass of 1842 which is yet fresh in the memory of this House, to say nothing about the struggle made to outvie each other in conferring exclusive privileges, and bestowing powers of incorporation without a precedent in the history of our legislative proceedings.—Let us examine for a moment the position of the parties in the great political struggle referred to. Where was Cyrus Walker, the Whig champion for congress in the sixth district of our state found, at the very time the people were calling for a modification of the city charter of Nauvoo, by legislative action. He was found in that city endeavoring to establish the doctrine that the legislature has no power of repeal; that vested rights had accrued under the charter which put it out of their reach; and endeavored to instill into the minds the very ideas incorporated into the letter referred to for which Whig gentlemen now upon this floor would urge a repeal of their city charter. Were they honest then, or are they not now, were they then catering for Mormon votes, and now acting under the influence of chagrin, and manifesting the vindictive spirit of hatred and revenge because the Mormons voted the democratic ticket? The answer is obvious the conclusion is inevitable.

In those very public assemblies, where whig candidates for office inculcated those doctrines, I was found opposing their positions and advocating modification, and the legislative right of repeal. If the citizens of Nauvoo have enjoyed under their city charter, too many privileges is not the fault in the legislature for making those grants of power which gave those privileges? And Mr. Speaker, if they have abused or transgressed their delegated powers it is by the counsel and under the direction of eminent lawyers and men who stood high in the estimation of the public, who either from motives of honesty or selfishness have induced that people to believe they had a just and legal right to do what now is imputed to them a fault, and urged upon this floor as an argument sufficient to justify an unconditional repeal of their city charter.

This charter sir, was introduced by a whig, and claimed as a measure of their own. They also in a recent canvass insisted upon having saved it from modification in the session of 1842-3. And why are they now found with scarcely an honorable exception in direct opposition to their avowed principles and former course of action, advocating Mormon oppression in an unjust and unprecedented act of repeal. Sir, the secret spring lies in the simple fact that they did not receive the Mormon votes. It is not from a sense of justice and right nor in accordance with their principles that they act, but they are governed by the baser consideration of party interests. Under these circumstances then, I might even be justified in appealing to the democratic members of this House to sustain the citizens of Nauvoo in the possession of their chartered rights to an extent at least equal to those of any other city in our state,—but this sir, I have not done, confident that they, being largely in the majority, would not suffer injustice to be done to any particular class in our community—nor allow the spleen of legislative vengeance to rest upon the citizens of Nauvoo for no other reason than that they are Mormons.

Most of the complaint which is made against them has grown out of an abuse and misconception of their chartered rights; how this happened I have shown you. Able arguments were used by Cyrus Walker in the city of Nauvoo, to show their act of incorporation was made an agent and had brought into existence vested rights, which put it out of the power of the legislature to repeal it. I opposed him at that time in a public meeting, and endeavored to show the difference between private and public acts of incorporation.

So it was, with the use of the writ of Habeas corpus and the power of passing ordinances; men of eminence argued the right, and it was strange that situated as the Mormons were, surrounded by the most imminent danger, that they should resort to every thing, which could possibly be justified in self defence.

Great stress is put upon the charge that the Mormons vote as a unit; this sir, I acknowledge, is often the case, but they are forced by circumstances to do it. In the gubernatorial election of 1842, the whig candidate took as a hobby upon the stump the unconditional repeal of their city charter. When he came to Hancock county, did not visit Nauvoo, and could it reasonably be expected they would support an avowed enemy for the highest executive office in our state? No, they were obliged by circumstances like these to unite upon another man from whom they could expect even handed justice, and this sir, is the reason they voted as a unit. When they come to the polls and find an anti-mormon ticket, then the only possible chance that is left them is to unite upon their friends and vote even "as one man" in self defence.

The gentleman from Macon, (Mr. B.) took advantage of a resolution and bill, drawn up by the prosecuting attorney of our judicial circuit, to give the state a change of venue in certain cases which was done on purpose to disarm the oppressors of the Mormons, and take from them the club which they have so often used, the cry of "Mormon courts and Mormon jurors." This sir was the object of the bill which is here presented, and wrong in to prejudice the action of this house in the question before us.

Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a disposition manifested here to magnify and pervert every act of the citizens of Nauvoo, or those who in part represent them into a determination to commit some deed of violence or injustice or while a spirit to screen even murder in their persecutors, has made it too self evident. Had an indictment followed me or my colleague upon this floor up from Hancock county for the commission of crime, could he have been screened by the robes of office and protected from the operations of the law, by an action of this house. I think not. The cry of Mormon outrage would have been raised at once, and we would have been hurried away to plead our justification and urge our defence before a proper tribunal which is a court of justice.

The gentleman from Adams, (Mr. Gott) must have mistaken my position in relation to the writ of Habeas Corpus. I did not advocate the continuation of that right to the city of Nauvoo; I only said, it should be within the reach of every person, being justly considered by all the "great writ of right."

That the citizens of Nauvoo have been misled and in some measure induced to abuse that right, I do not pretend to deny, but sir, in the case of Joseph Smith, of which so much complaint is made, what are the facts? Two years had elapsed before any requisition was made for the Smiths, by the authorities of Missouri; marauders were sent from that state to the city of Nauvoo, to lay in wait for Mormons, for no other purpose than to kidnap them, and take them to Missouri, there to be insulted, abused, and inhumanly treated. This they effected, and when a demand was made by the executive of Illinois for the surrender of such offenders, how was it answered? but by a requisition for the Smiths! If they were guilty of the many charges preferred against them, why was justice suffered to sleep for the space of two years? Why was not the supremacy of the laws asserted and maintained as soon as it was ascertained they had been violated?

Mr. Speaker, that demand was only made and that base subterfuge resorted to but to screen the guilt of Mormon persecutors and fugitives from justice from their own state. Smith had been discharged thrice in the highest courts of our state for the same offence, of which he was again to be arraigned, once by Stephen A. Douglass, and again by Judge Pope, of the supreme bench. The Mormons had enjoyed unmolested peace and quietude for more than two years in this state, and until the free exercise of the right of suffrage had interposed itself to prejudice the selfish and ambitious designs of political aspirants, who are willing to sacrifice the rights of others upon the altar of their individual promotion. Then the hue and cry was raised. The Mormons had ceased to be a virtuous and order loving community. Crime was charged upon them; basely fabricated reports were put in circulation, and instigated by the disaffected demagogues of our own state—the authorities of Missouri made a demand for the Smiths. There was a great change in Hancock county—there was mourning in Gilead and political wire workers and gamblers would not be comforted.

Men were sent to Missouri, obtained a special session of the court in order to obtain an indictment, which they succeeded in doing, and resort was had to the use of the writ of habeas corpus, but to loose those men from a continued series of unjust persecutions at home and abroad, it was only resorted to in self defence, and to keep the Smiths from the rapacious hands of those who sought their lives: And sir, they were sustained in this by the most able lawyers in our state, both whig and democrat. That both parties have been officious and instrumental in quoting powers and advocating the right to use them in the way the Mormons have, cannot be denied. Gentlemen now upon this floor, of each political party, came up to make confessions. They acknowledge the seeds were sown by their own hands, and this is the harvest; the fault is theirs and not of the Mormon people.

Now like Pilate and Herod, who, though at variance upon every thing else, could unite in the persecution and even death of Christ; so they can come up together here for the proscription of the Mormon people, and sanction the cruel and cowardly murder of their prophet, even while incarcerated within the walls of a prison, in the hands and under the protection of our laws.

The destruction of a press in Nauvoo was sounded as the token of alarm, to awaken the people to a sense of apparent danger from Mormon violence. Sir, I do not wish to palliate the offence, but is that the only press that had been destroyed? The very first one to my knowledge was a Mormon press in the state of Missouri; they were the first sufferers then, and why was it not trumpeted to the ends of the earth—made the subject of public investigation, and visited by the work of legislative condemnation? Presses have been destroyed in our own state, and passed unnoticed by the public. Mr. Speaker, why are these invidious distinctions made? Distinguish it as we may—make such imputations as we please—charge it upon this or upon that, it is but the base and unhallowed spirit of religious intolerance, and the workings of unbridled political ambition. The press in Nauvoo was established for political purposes by the whigs, who even made propositions to divide our representation upon this floor, which being refused them, they commenced a tirade of abuse, made their press obnoxious, and detrimental to the best interests of that people, who by their city authorities declared it a public nuisance and ordered it to be abated, which (See 2nd page.)

ONE WEEK LATER FROM EUROPE.

Arrival of Packet Roscius.—Very important—English movement in France against the United States.—The splendid line ship Roscius, Capt. Eldridge, has just arrived from Liverpool. She sailed thence on the 12th ult.

We have not been able to find in any of the London papers we have received, any quotations of American stocks. The packet ship Toronto, which left New York on the 10th ult., carried out no particular news, and the impression existing was, that the interest would not be paid.

The news in every point of view is important. It will be seen that England, taking Calhoun's famous despatch into consideration, has commenced a counter movement in France against the United States.

England seeks an alliance with France to oppose the annexation of Texas to this Union. That country is willing to abandon the right of search, if France will accept of the proposed alliance.

Against an immense import at Liverpool, cotton had maintained its prices.

FRANCE.—The reception of Friday at the Tuilleries, was perhaps the most numerous in ladies, that has hitherto taken place. The number of English ladies was considerable and it was remarked that it was with them particularly that the King remained longest in conversation. The dresses of the ladies generally were exceedingly splendid and in good taste.

The Constitutional of Monday announces that M. Guizot was about to cede the establishment of Albrede to England in return for the right possessed by English vessels to carry on the gulf trade under sail on the coast of Pordendick.

The Siecle suggests a singular compromise. It is that England is disposed to concede the right of search, on condition that the French Cabinet join that of London to obtain an European declaration against the annexation of Texas to the United States.

Accounts have been received by the French government from the Marquesas to the 10th of July, at which date a perfect understanding existed between the French and the natives, and every thing was going on satisfactorily.

From Marseilles, most dreadful accounts have been received of disasters committed by the late storms. It appears certain that no less than eighty vessels were lost in the Black sea, the greater portion of them insured in France.

The ministerial question was still the subject of conversation and speculation in the French capitol on Wednesday.

The English theatrical company were to perform, by command, at the Tuilleries, on Thursday night.

The French Ministry appears to be in a critical position, from the determination of certain individuals to take every opportunity of testing their strength in the chambers.

Admiral Dupetit-Thouars, received on Tuesday the deputation charged to offer him the sword of honor. The Admiral thanked them for their good intentions; but refused this mark of public sympathy, declaring that he had done nothing but obeyed the orders of his government, and that it was for it to blame or recompense him.

SPAIN.—Madrid journals and letters to the 1st inst., bring us an account that the discussion on the Reform Bill still occupies the senate. A motion was made by the Duke de Gor, to restore the Archbishops and Bishops to their rights of sitting and voting in the senate, but fell to the ground for want of a second, after a violent opposition on the part of the ministers who were present. Another effort was made to re-establish the right of holding hereditary seats; but was equally unsuccessful. Her Majesty has sanctioned the law authorizing the cabinet to make organic laws by royal decree.

PORTUGAL.—Lisbon letters to the 31st ult., have been received. The two ministers, Cabral and Castro, had been raised to the peerage. The chamber were to assemble on the 2d inst. There is a rumor that Zerbano had arrived in Portugal, that he had also left the country. The weather had been excessively wet, nothing but torrents of rain, accompanied by heavy gales of wind from the southward. The contracts for improving the bay of Oporto, are described as a species of most consummate jobbing. The Duke of Palmella was to sail to England.

LATER FROM MEXICO.

By the arrival, yesterday, of the schooner Creole, from Vera Cruz, we have received, by the Picaune of the 18th inst., from that city to the 3d inst., her day of sailing.

Upon glancing at our papers, the first thing that met our eye was a long letter from Santa Anna, dated from his prison at Perote, on the 22d of January, addressed to the Secretaries of the Chamber of Deputies. It is one of the most humiliating documents which we ever read. He begs for his life as pitifully as when on his knees at San Jacinto, and the valorous Gen. Cos supplicated Sam Houston for mercy—a degradation which Gen. Almonte, in the same emergency, scorned with the spirit of a man.

In his communication to the Chambers, Santa Anna recalls to the minds of the members, in the most vain-glorious manner, the services which he has rendered Mexico. He dwells particularly upon the actions of the 11th of September, 1829, and the 5th of December, 1838. He repeatedly alludes to his wounds received in battle, to his mutilated person, and prays like a hound that what little blood he has left in him may be spared. He revives his favorite comparison of himself with Napoleon, hoping that the parallel between their careers may be extended by his own exile, and at the same time bragging that if he has not effected quite as much as the Corsican on the stage of life, he has the advantage of having lost a leg.

The Vera Cruz correspondent of the Picaune has the following:

"Government no doubt regrets that he did not escape, as it is desirous of being generous with him, but at the same time fears public opinion, which is very stormy against the wretch. Should Santa Anna not be punished with all the rigor of the laws, another revolution against the actual Government would no doubt be the result."

FROM THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—Dates from the Sandwich Islands, have been received as late as the 24th of September.

On the 23d July last, the chiefs of Raitea, Hoshine and Barbara, tendered to Lord George Paulet the session of their islands, for his government, that they might be protected from the French. Lord George declined accepting the session, on the ground that the French claimed the Leeward Islands, as well as the others of the society group, as being under their authority. [Polynesian.]

POST OFFICE.

A correspondent of the Baltimore Visitor, thus writes concerning the new Post Office law:

To-day being the day set apart by the Constitution and the laws for counting the votes for President and Vice President of the United States, nothing else was transacted in either branch of Congress. At an early hour the walks leading to the Capitol, were crowded with the old and young—the fair and unfair—the rich and poor of both sexes—all intent on securing seats from which to witness the proceedings of the day. Many of the crowd were accommodated, although the Hall was crammed and packed as long as one could be got in. The residue, disappointed souls had to depart as they came. As the counting had not closed when I left the Capitol I cannot give you the result.

The Senate has passed the bill reducing the rates of postage and modifying the franking privilege. The bill makes important changes in the present post office system, and was passed by a vote of 38 to 12. The main feature of the bill is the establishment of a uniform rate of five cents postage on single letters to any part of the United States. Newspapers of no greater size than nineteen hundred square inches, (which will cover your paper) can be sent to within thirty miles of where they are published, free of postage; if sent over thirty miles the same postage charged as at present. Printed circular letters, unsealed are subject to a postage of two cents. The franking privilege, as it exists, is totally repealed, and officers of Government are required to keep an account of the business letters which they receive, the postage on which is to be paid by the department on which they are attached. Deputy postmasters are to have all the postage they pay on business letters refunded, and if their commissions do not amount to twenty-five dollars per annum, then the Postmaster General is allowed to increase them. The bill leaves the franking privileges of the Senators and Representatives on all letters and packages not exceeding two ounces in weight, the same as it now is, and they are also allowed to receive letters and packages during the session as well as for thirty days before and after the same.

Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars is appropriated from the Treasury to be applied to the department, in case of any deficiency of income.

Letters from Society Islands.—Letters from Valparaiso to the 4th of October have been received at Boston, containing the following intelligence: That a vessel had arrived there from Tahiti, bringing accounts of a battle between the French and the natives, more sanguinary than any previous battle, which terminated in favor of the French. The natives had two hundred killed, and the French one hundred.

The battle took place at Matavia Bay, Point Venus, on the coast of Tahiti, in the latter part of August or early in September. Our last previous advices were of August 12, for some weeks previous to which there had been no fighting, the natives having probably been engaged in preparing for a powerful effort to rid themselves of their oppressors.

Queen Pomare had gone to Bulobulo, an island about sixty miles south of Tahiti. The French had banished from the Islands a great many foreigners who had taken up arms on the side of the natives, or otherwise assisted them in their warfare with the French.

Business was dull at Valparaiso, there being but few foreign vessels in port. The government is all peaceful and quiet; but in Peru they are all fighting among themselves, electing a Governor one week and overthrowing him the next; there are three of them in the field now, striving to retain the gubernatorial chair.

YANKEE ENTERPRISE.—A company of Bostonians have established extensive rope-walks at the port of Manila, in the East Indies, which are worked by steam power. They are under the charge of Captain Keating, an old sea Captain, and are daily turning out large quantities of Manila rope and cordage. So much superior is their workmanship to that of various Scotch and English manufacturers, who had long been established there, and made rope by hand power, on the old fashioned plan, that they have driven the latter wholly out of market. The new Boston company not only furnishes rigging to vessels that stop at Manila, but supplies Canton, Calcutta, Hong Kong, Singapore, and all the leading sea-ports in the East Indies.

A NEW DISCOVERY.—A physician of Paris, named Raspail, has made the astonishing discovery that all the diseases "which flesh is heir to," are caused by the attacks of parasitic animals upon the various organs of humanity. He has therefore invented little tubes made of quills, in which he inserts bits of camphor to destroy the "epizoe." All Paris may be seen with these quills in their mouths.

APPLES FOR CHINA.—Charles Wellington, of West Cambridge, Mass., near Boston, has sold 2,500 barrels of apples from his orchard the past autumn. Of these, 500 were packed for the Canton, China, market—each apple being selected, and rolled up in paper, like Sicily oranges.

STEAMER OSPREY.

This packet upon the father of rivers, has been repaired, and re-painted, and re-appears as regular as ever. She intends, on her upward trips, to reach Nauvoo on Sunday mornings about 9 A. M.; and on her downward trips to leave this city, on Tuesday at 8 A. M. Shippers and passengers, therefore, can depend upon "punctuality" as long as the water is favorable. Capt. Anderson is so much of Shakespeare, that he means what he says from the word "go" to "port."

COMMENCEMENT.

The Nauvoo Water-power Company, commenced the Dam in the Mississippi, on Thursday last. Many of the principal men proceeded to the contemplated location, about 9 in the morning, and according to the custom of the saints, in all ages of the world, dedicated the land, water, men, and means, to Almighty God, with a firm reliance that he will order all things in wisdom for the good of such as act according to his will. Should the work now proceed according to the ordinary speed of Mormonism, a season will not pass until mills, factories, and machinery of all kinds, will not only open a market in Nauvoo, but will at the same time give the poor a comfortable living.

IOWA AND FLORIDA.

It seems that Iowa and Florida, have passed the house of representatives under full sail for independent states. Go it; a quarter of an hundred states gross, are better than two bakers dozen. More fun; more fees.

GREAT SNOW STORM.

On the 5th ult. there was a great snow storm at New York, and along the eastern coast. Many vessels were wrecked and much property lost. Twenty-five houses were blown down by the fury of the wind, in the city of New York alone.

The thermometer ranged variously from 5 to 25 degrees below zero. What renders the signs of the times the more conspicuous in the eyes of discerning men, is as the "Organ" says:

"A terrific thunder storm passed over the city of New York on the night of the 10th. The house of Moses H. Grinnel was struck and damaged. Much loss will supervene from the heavy rain and the melting of the snow."

On the 11th at Plattsburg (and other places in the northern parts of the state) it commenced snowing moderately, and continued through the day. In the evening it increased, with a violent wind from the north; and, on Wednesday morning, the streets in the village, and the roads in the neighborhood were found impassable from huge drifts of snow piled up, in many places, fifteen feet high.

The winds and weather, like the politicians of the present day, must be gambling upon the elements to try the patience of the people. Go it ye winds: there is nothing like variety—

"It is the spice of life, &c."

In the midst of all this flurry and elemental fluctuation, great "fires" melted away the god of this generation, at Cincinnati, New York, and several other places. Friend Greely, of the N. Y. Tribune, lost his establishment in the conflagration, but it did not hurt him half so bad as the "great fire" of the people which melted Clay to cinder.

In Milton, Pa., on Christmas day, by the Rev Mr. Stoeber, Mr. John Devil was joined in holy matrimony to Miss Elizabeth Shad, of Milton. This is a marriage extraordinary—an event absolutely unprecedented in ancient or modern times; that the Devil should catch a Shad in mid-winter, and take her "alive and kicking" to his wedding supper. Mr. Devil is said to be a very respectable young butcher.—Reporter.

HORRIBLE AFFAIR.

Three young men George Brown, aged 18, Leonard Dodge, about 17, and Augustus Porter, over 22 years of age, had been out a gunning. On their return, and when about 25 to 30 rods distant from the dwelling of Simeon Oaks Esq., of Tylersville; they saw Miss Jane M., the eldest daughter of Mr. O., leave the house of her father and enter the privy. Brown had a rifle, fired at the privy, deliberately resting his gun across a log.

CORRESPONDENCE.

We give publicity to the correspondence below, to show the benefit of being a Latter Day Saint. There seems to be a great difference between the Doctor's grovelling, and Mrs. Pratt's glory: it is like the glimmer of a lamp, to the glitter of the sun.

Mojra, March, 26th 1844.

L. Pratt,

So long as you adhere to the monstrosities of Mormonism, we neither wish to see you nor hear from you; we therefore respectfully ask, that you will neither trouble us, nor any of our immediate relatives, with any more of your fanatical absurdities and heart sickening fooleries.

D. H. STEVENS,

S. D. STEVENS,

B. STEVENS.

Louisa Pratt, Mormon!

Nauvoo, Hancock Co. Ills.

THE ANSWER.

D. H. Stevens,

I received your abrupt letter, with no small degree of surprise; the principles contained in it, I believe to be purely original: for to acknowledge them hereditary would tarnish the name of my ancestors. I feel extreme mortification, that one bearing the name of Stevens, (a name of which I have ever been proud,) should stoop to anything so low; for were you to dive the depths of human depravity, you could not bring out a principle more contemptible, than despising a person on account of his religion. A person who does it, is neither a patriot or christian. The constitution of our country, guarantees to every one, the liberty of conscience, and he who would discard a friend, merely because he happens to differ from him in matters of religion, is an enemy to his country's laws! You say, "so long as" I "adhere to the monstrosities of Mormonism," you "neither wish to see me nor hear from me." What an insult to common civility; do you imagine me such a consummate fool, as to be intimidated by a scoffer and frightened out of my religion, which is dearer than my heart's blood, because I am afraid of losing the good opinion of a pretended friend, or of ten thousand of them? No, God knows, that those who would despise me, because I believe he is willing to communicate intelligence to me, as he did formerly to persons composed of the same materials, I say, he knows I feel justified in thinking myself as much superior to them, as light is to darkness, or as virtue is to vice; for I will not condescend to principles so low. Were my relatives to embrace Mahomedism, I would scorn to relinquish one feeling of affection or sympathy; yes, I would cling to them the closer, that peradventure I might lead them back. Would that be philanthropy? What then would the reverse be? What have I embraced? Nothing on earth but the pure principles of the doctrine of Christ; every sentiment is pure and holy, and those who report to the contrary, are emissaries to the devil; and they who give credence to it, do so because they love lies. You need not give yourself any uneasiness about being troubled with the sight of me; it would be a new era in my life, if I should be so straitened for places to visit, as to go where I should not be made welcome. As for writing, if I should be disposed to write, I do not suppose I should send to Maine to ask permission; no, I have rather too much independence for that; suffice it to say, I have a little Stevens blood running in my veins. As to the names attached to your own, I care nothing about them; it is all your hand writing; I never insulted your brothers, neither do I believe they would me; I have a better opinion of them—I have not written to you, neither have I asked you to write to me. I wrote a kind and affectionate letter to your father, in the sincerity of my heart, but it did not occur to me that you would read it, for if you would not enquire after me when you saw a person who had come directly from me, I thought certainly you would not condescend to read a letter I had written. I ask a simple question, is a person capable of judging a matter, before he hears and understands it? Common sense will answer he is not. You know no more about the principles of our doctrine, than a person knows about a language, who has never seen but one letter of the alphabet. What then can be more unreasonable, than for you, to condemn it? There is one principle in which I glory, and that is liberty; and he who will not protect me in it, shall never be honored by me.

You may think what you will of Mormonism, (as you call it,) no one has a right to restrict you; every man has a perfect right to believe what he pleases; but I know, and it is my privilege to say it, that this church is destined to greatness, and power; and devils may howl, men may scoff, the heathen may rage, and the people may imagine vain things; the little stone cut out of the mountain

The young men then passed on, amused themselves while in firing at a mark, and returned to their homes. The shot was fired at the privy at about 2 o'clock. P. M., and at 6 1/2 Miss Oaks was found dead and frozen. She must have died instantly. On examination it appeared that the ball took effect, passing through the left arm a little below the shoulder joint, thence directly through the lungs, pericardium, severing the artery, and lodging between the ribs and muscle.

Miss Oaks was in the 19th year of her age, amiable, accomplished, and the idol of her parents and friends. Her death has clothed the neighborhood in sorrow, the more so that it occurred under circumstances so peculiarly heart-rending.

Young Brown was examined on Saturday, before Judge Crittenden, and held to trial for man-slaughter. He was admitted to bail in the sum of $1,000.—Watertown (N. Y.) Jeffersonian.

"Bail a murderer!" wrath of God, and insulted law!! Why, as soon as the testimony established the fact, the parents of the murdered young lady should have skinned him alive, and then have his carcass to the hogs, as a warning to others. Such an unpardonable murder, we never recollect to have seen before. The sin ought not to be "forgiven in this world nor in the world to come." Wilful murder, (of an innocent girl,) termed "man-slaughter," and bailed at a thousand dollars!

Now mark it, ye rulers and all!—that state sinks in disgrace and ruin, that tolerates vice over virtue!! No wonder the land is full of violence, the authorities and people are full of corruption.

ANOTHER MORMON WITNESS.

A Relic.—A day or two ago, an oak was cut down a short distance from Harrisburg, (and near an old revolutionary relic, known as Paxson's church) which, upon counting the growth proved to be near four hundred years old, and perfectly embedded in it, at a height of nearly thirty feet from the ground, was found a well shaped stone mortar and pestle, and an instrument very much resembling an axe, though much smaller in size. They had evidently been placed in the crotch of the tree, which had grown together over them, and, from an examination of the section, it is perfectly manifest that they must have been there at least three hundred years. They are of very hard flint stone, and in their finish exhibit much skill.

We are indebted to the St. Louis Republican for this legal Mormon testimony. A-hout two hundred and twenty four years ago, the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth. About three hundred and fifty two years ago, Columbus discovered South America, and about as long ago as any of these times, nobody but the natives lived near "Harrisburg," and thus the old stone mortar, pestle, and axe were laid up as Mormon testimony. Such relics are capital stock for the Latter-day Saints, as well as is the cities and ruins in Central America, discovered by Mr. Stephens in the very place where the Book of Mormon left them. Mormonism like Moses' rod, will swallow up all the magicians' rods of the 19th century. What universal power!

"And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together; for before they were at enmity between themselves."

We learn that all the apostates from the church of Jesus Christ of latter day saints, have hit upon Kiriland, Ohio, as "the valley of their decision." The Lord once had a strong hold there for the space of five years, but now probably the armies of Gog and Law go, will hold on for the great and last struggle.

FRUIT TREES.

We have just had put into our hands, "The Orchardist's Cheap Companion, by Thomas B. Parker, of Palmyra, Mo." The pamphlet gives the rules for nursing and raising Fruit trees, and can be had at the Carriage Shop on the corner north of the Brick store, on Water street. Good fruit is a good thing, as well "as apples of gold in pictures of silver."

An Embarrassing Question.—A man convicted of having successively married three women, all three living, and not divorced, has just been arrested in Baltimore. But an embarrassing question is about to rise in the case. It has been discovered and proved, that the man is the son of a colored woman, a slave at Annapolis, and consequently a slave himself, if not subject to the law. Now, his marriage with these three white women according to this fact, is declared null by the laws of Maryland. It seems, therefore, no punishment can legally overtake him. If the jury decide it thus, this conclusion will be the result of it:—That a slave may commit, with impunity, a crime of which the social laws punish a free man most severely!—Reveille.

Well said for the "scribes pharisees and hypocrites," they have shut up the ways of life to themselves, but left them open to the Hameroons, that they may enjoy the privileges of Jacob, David, and Solomon. Ohr jam satia!

Dissolution of the Union.—The legislature of Indiana, at the last session, dissolved the union of no less than twenty-five couple, who had found that the operation of taking each other for better or for worse, was much more for the worse than the better.

The little mustard stalk, so small in the commencement, will continue to spread itself, until it becomes a great tree, and the fowls of heaven will come and lodge under the branches of it. We are destined, to become the head of all the nations of the earth; and other nations will be mere grasshoppers, compared with us: "Mormonism," will be at the head of the heap. COMMUNICATIONS.

ON THE LAWS OF NATURE.

I stated in my last that all the laws of nature must be obeyed if we are desirous of preserving our health. I wish now to direct the attention of the reader to one law that is generally violated. The violation of which, has caused me many serious and unpleasant thoughts; for I have frequently suffered the penalty, received the punishment, caused either by the carelessness or ignorance of others, being myself nearly if not entirely innocent.

One of the laws of nature is, that the lungs be supplied with pure and wholesome air. But this law is most shamefully violated by neglecting to ventilate sleeping apartments, public halls, school houses, meeting houses, work shops and in short every house where people congregate together.

All are ready to admit, if we receive unwholesome or impure air into the lungs (makes no difference how it became impure) it will effect the whole system, and if persisted in, will, sooner or later, bring on disease and even death. One great object in breathing is, that the blood which is thrown from the heart into the lungs, may come in contact with the atmospheric air and thus become pure and again fit for use.

For the information of some who may not have attended to the subject, I will briefly describe the circulation of the blood and how it is brought in conjunction with the air.

The blood consists of two kinds. The one red or arterial, the other dark venous. It is carried from the left side of the heart, to every part of the body by a large artery which subdivides in its course and terminates in numerous minute ramifications. When it reaches the extreme points of its course, it passes into equal minute ramifications of the veins; which continue to unite till they terminate in two large veins by which the venous blood is brought back in a direction contrary to that of the blood in the arteries and poured into the right side of the heart. On examining the quality of the blood in the arteries and veins, we find it has undergone a material change in passing from the former to the latter. It has not that florid red hue, but of a darker color, and is no longer capable of sustaining life. The blood, having arrived at the right side of the heart, is propelled by the contraction of that organ into a large artery, leading directly, by two separate branches into the two lungs, being distributed through the substance of the lungs; by smaller branches where it is brought in contact with the atmospheric air that is inhaled by breathing. It now becomes purified, the air having taken away its impure qualities, therefore it re-assumes its florid or arterial hue and is again capable of supporting life.

The blood, after going through this purification, by being brought in contact with the air, enters minute venous ramifications which continue to unite into larger branches till they terminate in four large trunks in the left side of the heart; again, in its arterial form, to be distributed over every part of the body pursuing the same course, undergoing the same changes as before.

It appears there are two circulations of blood. One from the left side of the heart to every part of the body and back to the right side, and one from the right side of the heart to the lungs and back to the left. So essential is air to keep the blood in a healthy state that the blood of all animals is brought in contact with it though all have not lungs. In man and the more perfect of the lower animals, the air is made to act on the blood by means of the lungs; while in fishes, it circulates through the gills, which, as they live in a dense medium, are more accessible to the air than lungs would be.

In worms and many like animals, no organ is set apart for this purpose but the blood is brought in contact with the air by means of the pores through the skin.

If air is made to act on the blood for the purpose of purifying it, and if it does perform that office; it is certainly evident that the air itself should be pure, and after it has come in contact with the blood it is impure or unfit for use. Therefore, it is plain, if we are in a room where the fresh air cannot enter as fast as we use it, nor the impure air that is thrown from the lungs, have a chance to escape, that the pure air will continue to grow less and less, while the impure or unwholesome and vitiated air will increase, thus preventing the lungs from receiving that amount of wholesome air that nature designed or is requisite to purify the blood.

Mr. Editor with your consent I should like to continue this subject for a few weeks and in some future communication I will tell you what I understand by nature and nature's laws.

ATTENTION THE WHOLE

KINGDOM OF SAINTS:

Take care to wheel by companies on your right; MARCH.

There is, at this time a company organized, entitled, "The Nauvoo Water Power Company." For the laudable purpose of erecting a Dam in the Mississippi river at the City of Nauvoo; for the propelling of all kinds of manufacturing machinery.

The books are now open for subscriptions for stock in said Dam. All kinds of provisions and merchandise will be received in payment for stock—cash not refused.

Wanted immediately for stock in said Dam, five hundred pounds of good wrought bar iron; ten hundred pounds of good hemp for ropes; twenty barrels of good pork; fifty barrels of flour, and five kegs of blasting powder; also, a good horse, harness, and buggy.

Stock in said Dam is estimated at fifty dollars a share.

All persons desiring the good and prosperity of their fellow men, especially of this unequalled thriving city and country, will do well to put in for a share, while it can be had, least they should be one hour too late.

Come on ye gentlemen of enterprise and friends to mankind, and let the gentlemen of the eastern world know that we have the means, the men, and the means too, to do all, and more than others can do for the converting of the western wilds to become a fruitful field.

N. B.—All kinds of trade received for stock will be estimated at cash prices.

President Nauvoo Water Power Co.

New Orleans papers as late as the 8th inst. furnish little additional intelligence as to the capture of Santa Anna. A letter, of which the following is a translation, was sent by him to the commander of the forces at Jalapa:

Jico, Jan. 15th, 1845.

To the Lieut. Col. Don Jose Antonio Guzman:

My Esteemed Friend—The enclosed letter I sincerely wish you would remit to Senor Rincon, without loss of time, after you have read its contents, for which purpose I have not sealed it.

I should feel under an obligation to your kindness were you to issue such orders that would prevent my receiving any personal injury, as in the present circumstances my enemies might take an opportunity to satiate their ignoble revenge.

I should consider myself still more indebted to your generosity were you to afford me the pleasure of a personal interview at this place.

Sincerely wishing you may enjoy the best of health, I beg to subscribe myself your affectionate and obedient servant, who kisses your hand.

[Signed]

ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

A decree was thereupon issued by the commander in question, in which he orders the troops who guard the person of Santa Anna, to see that their noble prisoner be treated with kindness, and a due respect be paid to his mutilated condition.

In this decree he particularly enjoins that every kind of responsibility rests with the commanding officer of the aforesaid detachment, on whose person shall be visited the fatal consequences attending the escape of the prisoner; moreover, that the whole party must be put on their guard not to be seduced by the well known persuasive loquacity of their old chieftain; and that, for the better security of his person, a most vigilant guard be kept on his every movement, during his march to the capital, etc., etc.

VARIETIES.

British Debt.—The amount of the National Debt of Great Britain is a fraction less than $4,000,000,000. It is this enormous irredeemable debt—this blighting incubus upon the people—that keeps them in abject submission to the British aristocracy.

Consumption.—This disease has been perfectly cured in England, by perforating the cavity of the lungs through the wall of the chest. A full account of the operation is given in the London Medical Gazette.

Something New.—A dentist in Hartford, Conn., has adopted the use of nitrous oxide gas, in teeth pulling. It is said that after taking this gas the patient feels no pain.

Price of a Kiss.—The Norwalk (Ohio) Examiner states, that a man, "pretty well, how come you so", was recently arrested and fined $8 and costs for kissing a lady without her consent. Served him right!

Hypocrisy.—A hypocrite always strives to avert attention from his own wickedness, by denouncing unsparringly that of others. He thinks he shall seem good in exact ratio as he makes others seem bad.

Detraction.—Every man ought to aim at eminence, not by pulling others down, but by raising himself; and enjoy the pleasure of his own superiority, whether imaginary or real, without interrupting others in the same felicity.

A Pretty Thought.—A coquette is a rose from which every lover plucks a leaf, the thorns being reserved for her future husband.

What is Bravery?—Some men are courageous and some are not, but we should like to see that man who would deliberately allow a woman to catch him making mouths at her baby.

A Large Hog.—The Piqua Register states that a hog was brought to that market that weighed 813 pounds. It was two years and 9 months old.

A Fact.—It is confidently asserted that a poor young man has but two alternatives—either to go to work, or go to the devil. A great number choose the latter.

The way to pay Military Fines.—A person named Gulick, collector of Military fines in New York, was thrown neck and heels out of the house of one Wm. H. Brown, a printer.

Positiveness is a most absurd foible. If you are in the right, it lessens your triumph; if in the wrong, it adds shame to your defeat.

The story that there is a chap down east so cross-eyed, that he courts two girls at once, is contradicted by one of the girls.

The amount of coinage at the Branch Mint at New Orleans, during the past year, is stated at $4,209,500; of which there was gold $3,010,000.

Return of the Exiles.—Last Saturday morning, says the St. Alban's, Vt. Republican, the quiet of our little village was suddenly broken in upon by the arrival, from the South, of thirty-eight of the Canadians exiled from Van Dieman's Land, for participation in the troubles of 1837.

It is nearly two years since the British Government pardoned their offences, and gave them liberty to return to their homes. Since that time they have been at work to earn the necessary funds to enable them to reach their own shores. They appeared healthy, well dressed, and in high spirits, and spoke well of the treatment they had received at the hands of the British authorities. Two of them on returning to their homes, where they had expected to meet the smiles and joyful tears of their wives, found that these last had supplied their places with other lords.

From the N. Y. Herald.

Extent of the Storm, &c.—We give further extracts to-day relative to the storm, showing that it extended hundreds of miles north, east, west, and south of us, and that this city was the centre of its violence.

The mails are not yet regulated—There are still two due from the south, three or four from the west, and two from the east. Those from the latter point are probably detained by the immense quantities of ice in the Sound which extends from one side nearly to the other. The New Champion from New Haven, arrived yesterday, had to force herself through fields of ice.

We received of Adams & Co., late last night, Boston papers of Thursday, in advance of the mails.

One mail arrived yesterday from the south and our special southern express came in twenty-four hours ahead of it with dates from New Orleans of the 29th ult. Adams & Co., with commendable enterprise, run a special express from Philadelphia, leaving there at 6 o'clock on Wednesday night, and arrived here early yesterday forenoon four or five hours in advance of what was called the government express.

All the northern mails are in; the trips on that route are now regular.

Our rivers, harbor, and bays are full of floating ice, presenting from the Battery a sight worth seeing. The ferry boats make their trips with considerable difficulty.

We learn that Capt. Dixon, the commander of the Brooklyn ferry steamer, saw a boat in a dangerous situation, surrounded by acres of ice. He went to its assistance, and succeeded in rescuing a man who was in it from his perilous situation. When taken off, the man had lost both of the oars; the bottom of the boat was broken in by the ice, and he was standing up to his knees in water, keeping her afloat by bailing. At the time of his rescue he was in a state of exhaustion, and it was with difficulty that he was restored to animation.

The ship reported ashore yesterday near Hempstead proves to be the Sheffield, from Hull. We learn that the captain, crew and passengers were all landed in safety. The U. S. steam cutter, Captain Hunter, sailed yesterday to the assistance of the vessels reported ashore—also to relieve others on the coast. The lighter schooner Excellency was also despatched by the Insurance Companies to the assistance of the Sheffield. The drift ice still continues in the harbor.

Walking Variety and Provision Store.—An old lady, apparently about fifty years of age, genteelly dressed, with cloak and muff, was brought before the New York police office lately, upon a charge of attempting to steal an umbrella. Upon searching her, the following articles were found secreted in her muff, viz: Two ladies' caps, one hat feather, one pair of worsted mitts, one dozen spools of cotton, one gentleman's glove, one worsted cuff, two cut glass tumblers, and four business cards. Tied to her waist beneath her dress, were four large pockets, within which were found three large oysters, one boiled crab, one steak of fresh codfish, seven large red onions, two very large flat Dutch turnips, one apple, one orange, one potatoe, three large pieces of taffy, four doughnuts, two muffins, two pound-cakes, and a copy of Bishop Onderdonk's trial.

Postage in France.—The Paris correspondent of the Boston Atlas notices an article recently published by Chevalier on Post Office Reform, in which he recommends a great reduction on the postage of letters. The present postage on letters from the north to the south of France is 30 cents, yet in neither of these districts can a day laborer gain over 25 or 30 cents a day in harvest time, and 15 at other seasons. The report of the committee on postage, appointed by the chamber last year, and presided over by M. Chegaray, is highly commended. This report recommends establishing a uniform charge of 4 cents for all letters, except those mailed at Paris for the city itself, and in any town for the town itself; the first of which should pay three cents, and the latter two cents, as at present. The committee is of opinion that if the tax were reduced to four cents, it would be well to abolish the present system of franking office letters; and finally it observes that if England, in place of adopting a tax of two cents, had left it at four cents, the postal reform would have benefited the treasury, instead of injuring it.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

On looking over our Mexican files, we have discovered a number of documents which throw a great deal of light on the present position of affairs in that republic, and which seem to indicate that the storm is lulled for a moment, to break out in some other quarter. The following are extracts:

[From El Vera Cruzano Libre, Jan. 13.]

We have received from the captain general of the department, the following documents, which we insert with much pleasure.

Office of the Governor General of the Department of Puebla.

Excellent Sir:—

The annexed document will inform your Excellency of the happy result of the question which has agitated the whole republic, as to its form of government. The means employed by His Excellency, General Santa Anna, to possess himself of this place, were very disgraceful, since they had for their object to sacrifice the lives of the Mexican soldiers, who were necessary for the service of the nation.

All the forces of General Santa Anna were to remain at Amazoc, until the supreme government had resolved on what terms the present difficulty should be settled. No doubt, your Excellency will have to use great vigilance and caution, with the understanding that the aid of Don Nicolas Bravo, who is in the environs of this town with a powerful force, will not be wanted; and, therefore, that he can fall back, or make such a disposition of his forces as he may deem necessary. I think it also of importance to inform your Excellency, that notwithstanding the order of General Santa Anna that his troops should remain at Amazoc, hundreds of men, including generals and other officers, have presented themselves at this place.

God and Liberty.

IGNACIO DE INCLAN.

Puebla, Jan. 11, 1845.

To His Excellency, the commanding general of the department of Vera Cruz.

Office of the Governor General of the Department of Puebla.

Excellent Sir:—

A Mexican before all, and having been distinguished in a thousand ways by the country in which you first saw the light, I cannot resist using all the means in my power which will tend to produce the results indicated in your note received this day. I hold the lives of my countrymen in great esteem, and since your excellency has proposed certain arrangements to the supreme government, which will prevent the further effusion of their blood, I shall look upon their happy termination with pleasure, relying that you will order your subordinates to evacuate the positions they now occupy, and fall back to Amazoc, while I, myself, will retire with my own troops. I will do this so that nothing may interfere with the negotiations. Should any outbreak occur, I shall immediately advise the chief magistrate of the nation of the fact.

God and Liberty.

Puebla, Jan. 10, 1845.

IGNACIO DE INCLAN.

To His Excellency, Don Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna, General of division.

Office of the Gov. General of the Department of Vera Cruz.

The courier that brought the documents from Puebla was seized by a small body of troops who were at Aqualpeque. They prevented his having any communication with the postillion, and took him before General Torrejon, who was on the 12th at San Antonio. After having detained him a short time at Santa Gertrudis, and having broken the seals, and perused the documents, they returned them opened, and in this manner I received them.

Vera Cruzano! His Excellency, Gen. Don Lopez de Santa Anna has placed himself at the disposition of the Supreme National Government, with all the troops which were in opposition to the Constitutional Government. This happy event, so pleasing to those who possess the feelings of humanity, is still more so to all Mexicans, who have always been in favor of the cause devoted to legitimate principles. The result of Gen. Santa Anna's decision, is the stopping of the effusion of blood in heroic Puebla.

I have directed, as was proper and agreeable to the gratification I feel, that the happy result be celebrated, and you will do the same; but in the transports of your lawful rejoicing, do not forget that we should be cautious, and more vigilant than ever; and I also command the troops of the garrison and in active service to exercise the same vigilance as heretofore.

IGNACIO DE MORA AND VILLANIEL.

Veracruz, Jan. 13, 1845.

We are very much disposed to believe that Santa Anna has proposed the negotiations merely to gain time and accomplish some other purpose than a peaceable termination of his present difficulties. It is not, indeed, to be supposed that such an unscrupulous leader would negotiate if he had means of compelling his antagonist to submit, and his conduct is, therefore, indicative of weakness, but we have no doubt that his chief purpose is to gain time in order to recruit his forces, and to make arrangements for striking a blow that may yet give him complete ascendancy in the government of Mexico.

A new Movement.—The abolitionists of Pittsburgh held a meeting a few evenings since, and adopted resolutions, recommending the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Pennsylvania, to use their influence to have the capital of the United States removed from Washington to Alleghany county, Pa., on account of the existence of slavery in the District of Columbia.

Shipwrecks in 1844.—Two hundred and eight vessels were wrecked in the last twelve months on our coast alone, in which one hundred and five lives were lost. Twenty vessels are yet missing, and a number of wrecks have been passed at sea, whose melancholy story will never be told.

American Peaches.—Mr. Edward Wilmer, on leaving this city for England, in September, took a box of peaches, which on his arrival at Liverpool were found to be in excellent condition, and were greatly admired by the friends to whom he presented them, as the product of the United States.

was done. If contrary to law an action of trespass might have been sustained and a remedy found in courts of law—but instead of that, a hue and cry commenced—a mob was raised—violence threatened—warnings sent out—and the surrounding country excited by rumors and false reports, which flamed by the constant breeze of prejudice, resulted in the difficulties and disgraceful scenes which occurred in Hancock county.

The military force was not called out to suppress the turbulence of the Mormon people, but to stay the progress of anti-Mormon mobs, which had assembled and were organized by the Governor, for no other purpose but to get them under command that he might regulate their operations, and keep them from the commission of deeds of violence, which they had conceived and were about to put into execution. The expense of that war as it is called is not chargeable upon the Mormons.

As soon as the Smiths had assurance of protection from murder (which as subsequent events go to prove they had good reasons to fear) they gave themselves up to be tried by the laws of the land; and sir, what act of theirs has ever shown the amount of perfidy and treachery exhibited in the cold blooded assassination of those men in prison, protected by the arm of the law with an assurance of safety from those who sought their destruction, and the unqualified pledge of the commander-in-chief, the highest executive office in our state, to shield them from violence? None. The history of our country—the annals of the world bear not the record of so base an act, and even the legendary tales of savage life can scarce afford a parallel.

The anti-Mormon mob, represented here as being made of the peaceable and respectable old citizens of Hancock county, have stained their hands in the blood of innocence; they have murdered the prophet of a religious people—violated the sacred laws of civil and religious liberty—blotted the pages of American history with an indelible tint of dishonor—destroyed the peace of Mormon citizens—heaped upon themselves a load of infamy, well merited, and are now seeking at our hands legislative sanction, which if granted, they will never rest until that proscribed and oppressed people are exterminated from the state of Illinois.

They murdered the Smiths at the very time they expected the Governor, was in the city of the devoted prophet, coolly calculating that he would be put to death by the incensed populace of Nauvoo, upon which they could better arouse the provisions of the mob to carry out their base designs. Yes sir, they betrayed their honor and their trust, put in jeopardy those who had confided in their integrity, and offered the life of our executive officer as a price for Mormon persecution.

But in this they signally failed. The Mormons do no acts of violence—suppressed their just indignation, and appealed to the majesty of the laws, satisfied with the poor redress that they afford.

The insatiable vengeance of the hellish crusaders was not staid even here; they were not satisfied with having washed their hands and stained their garments in the blood of unprotected prisoners, but would seek other victims, and sacrifice the peace and safety of every Mormon citizen. Military encampments were ordered—wolf hunts got up; and every machination resorted to, to effect the expulsion of the peaceable Mormons from their homes and possessions in Nauvoo and drive them from our state.

Mr. Speaker, why this continued opposition? Why are we brought up here to be made the objects of vindictive legislation, when the very cause of all complaint is removed? It was Joseph Smith—the prophet of the Mormon people, who was alleged to be the sole cause of all difficulties. He is no more—they have wreaked their vengeance upon his head—they have murdered him, and just now he is as in olden times; because the fathers have eaten grapes, the children's teeth are set on edge. If the cause has ceased, should not the effects cease also?

But the idea is held out by honorable gentlemen upon this floor, that the Mormons are not capable of self government. The gentleman from Sangamon (Mr. Logan) asks, will you trust a child with an ax; if as the gentleman would represent the Mormon people, are so inferior to other citizens—so weak and imbecile, it is the duty of the legislature to provide for them, and in the plenitude of their wisdom, should appoint the gentleman from Sangamon their guardian. But sir, I appeal to those who have visited Nauvoo, who are conversant with that people to bear me witness, when I say there are for their numbers, just as many good men and citizens in Nauvoo as any other part or portion of our state. They may have vague notions, so have others; there are good and bad in all societies. Whether they be Mormons, or claim an older name made sacred only by its antiquity—and often made to cover other than virtuous deeds.

The great argument urged in favor of the unconditional repeal of their charter, is that they have transgressed their powers. If that was a good reason why not apply it in other cases—magistrates sometimes make decisions, not authorized by law, yet no man would be so unreasonable as to say the office of magistracy should be abolished.

If their charter contains too many grants of power, restrict it. If they transcend their delegated powers, take your remedy as provided by the laws of the land. Should you repeal this time their city charter, you take from them the means of paying the debt which hangs over them; that debt sir, is in city script and held mostly by laboring men for work done—taxes are already levied, and in two or three years the debt can be paid, but by the passage of the bill before the house, we should deprive these creditors, who are poor and honest men of the only means by which they can obtain their pay for services rendered upon the streets, public grounds, and other city improvements. I know there is a section in this bill, which provides that all the property belonging to the incorporation, shall go over into the hands of a receiver, who is to sell it, but when sold, I will venture to say, it would no more than pay him for his trouble, and would effect nothing towards the payment of debts contracted by the city authorities, and which must be in that event a total loss.

It is urged by some gentlemen, that the general incorporation act is sufficient for Nauvoo. That act, sir, covers only one mile square, and can embrace no more territory. Nauvoo extends for the distance of four miles; has a population of over twelve thousand, has become an object of curiosity.

People visit that place in steamboat loads, and how can they maintain order, preserve the peace, and protect persons and property, without an active and efficient police? Sir, it would be utterly impossible to talk about a denial of justice in Chicago, and the creation of a special court for their benefit, and at the same time take from Nauvoo their unperforated court, and leave them, with only two magistrates, to attend to all the business of so large a place; where is the consistency and where is the justice of such a course? Have not the Mormon citizens paid their taxes? Are they not adding by their industry to the wealth of our state? And are they not entitled to equal benefits from our institutions, and equal protection by our laws? By what principle of a free and republican government are we taught to make individuals distinctions, and give preferences to one religious denomination over another? Sir, the Mormon faith is as dear to them as yours is to you, and while you may look upon their doctrines as founded in error, they look upon yours in the same way. I have learned not to despise the opinions of a man, however much I differ with them, especially his religious belief for that is the altar of his heart, sacred from the controlling hand of power, and subject to the decision of no judicial tribunal or human institution. It is a matter known only to himself, his conscience and his God.

Smith was ever willing to open his doors for public worship of every kind, and leave the matter of religion subject to fair investigation. Gentlemen say they are willing to give to the citizens of Nauvoo, the same kind of a charter granted to Warsaw and Carthage. In those towns where there are probably five hundred citizens, it is to be expected the same kind of a charter is required as in the city of Nauvoo, where there are over twelve thousand! There is no comparison between those places. I do hope their police organization will not be taken from them. They should have a mayor and common council to preserve the health and order of the city, and because of religious opinions preferences should not be made nor the rights and privileges of any part of our community taken from them.

If religious persecutions and proscriptions commence in this hall, where will they end? Make the Mormons the objects of your legislative vengeance now, and some other denomination will follow next in the train, and our boasted and far famed institutions of civil and religious liberty will be in danger of subversion, and a final overthrow. I do hope sir, men may be actuated by higher and nobler motives than would dictate such a course. May the eternal principles of justice and right be manifest in the actions of this house; and the spirit of religious freedom which fired the heart of the immortal Jefferson, arrayed against hostile hosts of bigotry, but marked him the true apostle of democracy; breathe its hallowed influence, through the soul of every man and lead us in the discharge of our legislative duties to deal out even handed justice.

WISTAR'S BALSAM
THE
OF WILD CHERRY GREAT REMEDY FOR

CONSUMPTION OF THE LUNGS.
Coughs and Colds, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pains or Soreness of the Chest, Difficulty of Breathing, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Croup, &c.

AMONG all the famous medicines for Consumption, none seems to be meeting with greater success, or gaining a higher reputation than that most wonderful article, Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry! That it stands at the head of all other remedies is now universally conceded. It has cured thousands upon thousands—of all classes—in cases of the most dangerously Consumptive character—and physicians of the greatest eminence throughout our whole country unhesitatingly recommend it as the most powerful curative of Pulmonary diseases, in the whole range of Pharmacy. Thousands of consumptive patients have already tested its exalted virtues, and confessed its surpassing, excellent and amazing power. The remarkable success of this Balsam is no doubt owing in a great measure to the peculiarly agreeable and powerful nature of its ingredients. It is a fine Herbal Medicine, composed chiefly of Wild Cherry Bark and the genuine Iceland Moss—the latter imported expressly for this purpose) the rare medicinal virtues of which are also combined, by a new chemical process with the Extract of Tar—thus rendering the whole Compound the most certain and efficacious remedy ever discovered.

A CASE OF ASTHMA.

The following is from a distinguished Lawyer of the city of New York, who had been afflicted with the Asthma for upwards of 'Twenty Years' and who, after reading such cases can doubt the efficacy of this medicine!

New York, January 25, 1843.
I have been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for 24 years—sometimes so severely as to be confined to my room for weeks; and although attended by various medical advisers, of the highest reputation and skill in the country, the relief was but partial and temporary—twice the disease proved nearly fatal to my life. Some few weeks ago I commenced taking Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, which gave me instant relief, and a single bottle produced in a few days what I believe to be a radical and perfect cure.

Of Mr. BACKENSTOS, in the house of Representatives, January, 1845, against the Senate Bill, for the unconditional repeal of the Nauvoo Charter.

Mr. BACKENSTOS of Hancock, said, he arose under embarrassment, to speak upon this question, having been preceded by gentlemen on both sides, who had favored the house with a display of talent and ability which it was not his good fortune to possess. But, impressed with the importance of the bill to a very large and respectable portion of his constituents, he felt called upon to say a few words, and state to the house some of the objections which might be urged against its passage. He considered it a matter of deep interest to that persecuted people who are to be affected by the bill now under consideration, involving their peace, happiness, and prosperity; it certainly was a subject which had enlisted the feelings, and in some degree the prejudices of a great portion of the community; on the one hand the anxious citizens of Nauvoo are looking for the maintenance of their just and equitable rights, while on the other the vindictive spirit of intolerance and persecution are awaiting their victim.

The foiled ambition of disappointed demagogues is struggling to mount itself upon the misfortune and ruin of that people; demons in human shape infest our gallery with their presence; they are watching our deliberations with breathless anxiety and earnest expectation that we will sanction their deeds of violence and crime by our acts of legislation. I have been sorry, Mr. Speaker, to witness the manifestation of prejudice which has been exhibited during this discussion. Men occupying the high and responsible seats of legislators should never suffer themselves to be moved by excitement, or influenced by so base a passion as prejudice; these are the elements of feeble minds and ungenerous hearts, and should never be suffered to enter the sacred retreats of liberty and laws—the hall of legislation.

The remarks made by the gentleman from Macon, (Mr. Benedict,) told us in language too plain to be misunderstood, that he felt their influence and was subject to their control. His eloquence no one can help but admire. In his manner, his gestures, and his language, he was truly sarcastic, and upon the whole succeeded admirably well in scandalizing the "Mormons." He said, he was willing to mete out even handed justice to them and gave us the beautiful and well painted figure of a scale suspended from the finger of the Almighty; and while he gazed contemptuously upon the picture he had drawn with an expression of vindictiveness, while on the other hand he would also apply the sword of vengeance, which part of the figure he represented with a smile upon his lips at least he showed a disposition to imitate them upon the altar of indignation. Perhaps there may be some good reason for the deep interest the gentleman seems to take in their prosecution and oppression; great men (I understand he has sometimes aspirations to a seat in the United States Congress) are sometimes disappointed, it may have been so with the gentleman from Macon, (Mr. Benedict,) inasmuch as in 1842, he made a pilgrimage to the city of Nauvoo, first procuring letters of introduction and recommendations from a distinguished latter day saint, then living at Spring field, to the Mormon prophet, and other leading men at the city of Nauvoo. [Here Mr. Backenstos was called to order by Mr. Benedict, the chair deciding Mr. Backenstos not out of order, proceeded.] It has ever been a custom whenever any distinguished individual visited that city, to throw open the public halls and extend to them the freedom of the city. This usual mark of respect was, however, omitted on this occasion. I do not wish to be understood as charging the gentleman with having been moved altogether, because of this neglect, but might it not be true that he left Nauvoo, disappointed?

Mr. Speaker, one very important reason in my mind why we should not repeal the city charter of Nauvoo, is that you strip the largest and most populous city in this state of all her police regulations. Why not amend the charter in all its objectionable features? Why not leave them powers sufficient to maintain an efficient city organization? Shall we in any manner take part by our acts in this hall, and sanction the violence and crime committed in the wild and lawless crusade against the citizens of Nauvoo?

Already have I received letters from Hancock, signed by some of the best settlers of that county, who say that the cry has now gone out that the legislature have sanctioned the violence of Mobocracy; that we are with them in all their acts, give free tolerance to their crimes, and sanction their murder. Let this be true, let those wrought up by excitement—impelled to action by heartless prejudices, swear that we approve of their course, and new scenes of increased difficulties will arise and more blood will be shed, the peace of the people of Hancock hangs upon the action of this House. Let gentlemen well consider before they subscribe to any act of partial legislation, which is to endanger the safety or destroy the just rights of any community.

During this discussion, the Mormons have been accused of every offence known to the catalogue of crimes, every depredation committed in that section of country where they live, has been heaped upon them, no matter where the charges originated, or how they have been propagated, whether true or false, they have been dealt out with an unsparing hand and urged against them as reasons for the repeal of their city charter. That base men are located amongst the Mormons there can be no doubt. That base men calling themselves Mormons infest the city of Nauvoo, is equally true, how can it be otherwise in the nature of things with a population of from 12 to 14,000 souls. I do not appear on this floor to justify the citizens of Nauvoo for any wrongs committed, but I appear to defend them and all others in their just, equitable and constitutional rights. Neither do I appear in this hall for the purpose of abusing or saying hard things against the Mormons or anti-Mormons, let even handed justice be done unto all. It is said that the people of the city of Nauvoo have violated their chartered privileges, that they had issued the writ of "habeas corpus," and released or discharged the Mormon prophet. This is true, they did issue the writ of habeas corpus; but is there nothing to be said in palliation for that proceeding? Let me inform this house that one of the ablest jurists of the military tract, publicly declared that such power was granted in the charter of Nauvoo; the legal gentleman procured the writ and afterwards appeared before municipal court, and ably contended that the charter granted them not only the power to issue the writ, but also to hear and determine the case, which resulted in the discharge of the accused. It is true we were at that time on the eve of a warmly contested congressional election, the Mormon vote being considered no small item in deciding the question. Mr. Walker, the whig candidate for congress, on several occasions in his stump speeches, declared that the Nauvoo city charter granted to the municipal court of that city, the power to issue the writ of "habeas corpus," in the case which arose upon the requisition of the executive of Missouri, for the surrender of Joseph Smith, and also that the municipal court had the power under their charter to hear and determine the case. All those acquainted with Mr. Walker's legal abilities, and also with his general high character and standing in the community, will readily attach great importance to his legal opinions.

Mr. Speaker—I would ask whether there is not some mitigation for this stretch of the power granted, or supposed to be granted, in the Nauvoo charter. It has been urged by those in favor of the senate Bill for the unconditional repeal of the charter, that the citizens of that place are a lawless banditti, gathered together for the purpose of protecting another. Sir, I here declare that such is not the truth, I know that community too well to be mistaken; such a charge is a foul calumny against thousands of honest, virtuous, law abiding, peaceable, industrious, and unoffending citizens, and I feel myself called upon in justice to that portion of my constituents, to throw back the foul aspersions with indignation to the feet of him who gave them utterance.

Much has been said in the course of the debate concerning the quiet and peaceable old citizens of Hancock county; many encomiums have been heaped upon them.

Mr. Speaker, I can not command language strong enough to express my feelings in giving utterance of praise to the moral worth and commendable conduct of the "quiet and peaceable," old citizens of Hancock county. Gentlemen would not I presume, have bestowed so many eulogies upon the quiet and peaceable old citizens of Hancock county had they not known that they were speaking praise-worthy of many Mormon citizens. I will here remark that many, very many of the old citizens of Hancock county have embraced the Mormon religion. The term of "old citizens" in Hancock is not understood to imply, by the anti-Mormons, those pioneers of the county who have made the first settlements in old Hancock; but have joined the Mormon church and live an exemplary life, will have lost their old citizenship according to anti-Mormonism; any scape gallows or blackleg, who may happen into Hancock county, and who rails out against the Mormons and cries out extermination &c. he will then pass for an "old citizen" if he has been in the county but one week. If any old cow, horse, or pig, strays off within 30 miles of Nauvoo, it is always charged upon the poor Mormons, in the absence of all testimony. If any crime is committed in Hancock, it is always managed such a way by the time the news passes through the columns of the Warsaw Signal, as to saddle the offence upon some Mormon, whose name is unknown to the editor or any one else.

Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the gentlemen on the other side of the question have been charging all manner of crimes against the Mormons, they have indiscriminately impeached, indicted, and found guilty of every possible crime, known to our laws; such has been the declarations of gentlemen upon this floor. All the disturbances in Hancock have been packed upon the Mormons; this is not only untrue and unjust, but is also calculated to mislead the public mind; one general impeachment has been made against the Mormons. Now sir, I have drawn up an impeachment with specifications against these "self styled" law abiding anti-Mormons; I do not design to say any thing which is not susceptible of the clearest proof; in the first place, I will state that the enemies of the citizens of Nauvoo formed a conspiracy to provoke them into an outbreak. (Here Mr. B. made sundry charges of crime and misdemeanor against the anti-Mormons, as follows:

I charge them with having called public meetings and loudly and strongly threaten the extermination of the Mormon population, and all those who would not join in their wicked schemes.

I charge them with having reported that their property was stolen by Mormons, when there was not the slightest evidence to that effect.

I charge them with having torn down the dwelling of a peaceable citizen, because he would not join them in their crusade against the Mormons, and driven him and his family from their home.

I charge them with having driven from the county seat of Hancock, peaceable and quiet citizens, some of whom were amongst the first settlers of that county, charged with no other crime, and guilty of no other offence, than that they were Mormons.

I charge them with having threatened and resisted the sheriff and his deputy, when acting under and by authority of law.

I charge them with openly resisting a constable when in the lawful discharge of his official duty, by assembling an armed force, and at the point of the bayonet preventing the arrest of a man charged with crime.

I charge them with having posted upon the doors of the dwellings of peaceable and unoffending families at the hour of midnight, written notices warning them to leave their homes in a given time, threatening them with vengeance and destruction if they did not comply; filling even the hearts of men with consternation and dismay, and distracting defenceless women and children.

I charge them with having made base and false representations to his Excellency Gov. Ford, through some of their safety committees, and of endeavoring to inflame the public mind with the free circulation of falsehoods.

I charge them with having sent emissaries to the state of Missouri, to procure aid to carry out their base and wicked designs.

I charge them with having undertaken to revoke a contract through one of their kind committees, between one of the first settlers and a peaceable quiet Mormon.

I charge them with having assembled, with dirks, pistols, bowie knives, and clubs, to intimidate and resist the county commissioners court of Hancock, when in the due exercise of their public functions.

I charge them with having called out the militia of the neighboring counties, in the name of the Governor and commander in chief without his authority or consent.

I charge them with having leveled their cannon and fired their muskets into steam boats, when on their way up the great Mississippi river, compelling them to land at the town of Warsaw, there to be detained to undergo a search.

I charge them with having hanged our Governor in "effigy" because he would not join them in their oppressions of the Mormons, and

I charge them with having committed murder without a parallel for its atrocity and cowardice on the annals of American history.

Mr. Speaker, these are crimes and misdemeanors, which I charge upon the Anti-Mormons in and about Hancock county; and sir, these charges are substantially true and I defy any one to controvert them, they are susceptible of proof and cannot be denied; those outrages which I have enumerated have been committed by that portion of the Anti-Mormon party, which we might well denominate as the Mob portion; there are many who style themselves anti-Mormons, yet at the same time they look upon this Mob faction with alarm and indignation. Then, Sir, if you are in search of crimes and criminals in Hancock county, you need not go amongst the Mormons, for you will find them as thick as hail amongst that very class of citizens who style themselves anti-Mormons, who are asking this legislature to repeal the Nauvoo city charters in order more successfully to oppress that people and drive them from our state. Do the citizens in the surrounding counties of Hancock ask or petition us for the repeal of the Mormon charters, as some are pleased to term them? Does your table groan under the petitions which have come up from the people praying for an unconditional repeal of the city charter of Nauvoo? No; not a single petition has made its appearance. No voice has been heard demanding this hasty action. It would be regarded as an act of oppression, unprecedented in this country and without a parallel in the history of legislation, to repeal a city charter, against the known and expressed will and wishes of the people, who reside under the operation of the chartered privileges. If the charter is repealed, it will be regarded, and I fear too truly, the legitimate offspring of religious prejudice and religious persecution.

Political aspirations have had much influence in waging war against the Mormons. Several of the leading Anti-Mormons have been, and continue to be the peculiar friends of the citizens of Nauvoo until they were disappointed in getting office through their votes, when they immediately turned against them and became their bitter enemies. One of the leading anti-Mormons who now holds a high office proposed to resign his office in favor of Hyrum Smith, the Patriarch of the Mormon church, and give his influence for Mr. Smith's election, on condition that he Mr. Smith, would procure for him a nomination for Congress, which to the honor of the Mormon, he said, was refused;—this occurred shortly before the "Carthage murder;" this same individual stands now indicted amongst others, for the murder of the Smiths, and that too, by an anti-Mormon grand jury; thus clearly establishing that political considerations govern at least some of that party; other cases might be cited which go to prove the same thing, and were it proper, names might be called and proof submitted to this House, to bear me out in this position.

While gentlemen are so loudly charging the people of Nauvoo with so much crime they must bear in mind that there has been less criminal cases in the Hancock circuit court, than in any other county in the State, of equal population. I was clerk of the circuit court of Hancock county, for several years, preceding my election to a seat on this floor, and necessarily must know all about the criminal proceedings in the circuit court of my county. The city of Nauvoo with a population of from 12 to 14,000 inhabitants, does not average exceeding twenty cases a year, of every description of crime.

Mr. Speaker, I will ask the special attention of the House while I would compare the city of Nauvoo with the city of Chicago, containing about an equal population; are we not told by an honorable member of this House from the county of Cook (Mr. Arnold) and also a distinguished member of the Chicago bar, that the criminal business of the city of Chicago consumes the entire time of the court during its sitting at that place, and that at the last term of the court, but one case out of the criminal docket was tried; thus creating the necessity of establishing a new court, in order that justice may be administered also in civil cases. How does this comparison stand, does it not prove that the city of Nauvoo is by far the most peaceable, moral, and law abiding city of the two? Where is then the justice of harping so much about Mormon vices and depredations? Sir, it is all a shallow pretence in making these charges, to mislead the public, and prejudice the minds of members, in favor of repealing the Nauvoo charter. Why are unwarranted attacks made upon the city of Nauvoo? Is it because the inhabitants of the city entertain peculiar religious sentiments, or is it because of their political predilection? I apprehend that it will be regarded by the world as a religious persecution, and I predict that it will have a tendency to increase their strength and numbers just in proportion to the persecutions which are heaped upon them; the history of religious persecution throughout the world, bears me out in this position.

With the Mormon religion, I have nothing to do; I am not a believer of their doctrine, nor an advocate of their church. If they choose to worship a stone, it is not my right to interfere and prevent them, it is a matter between them and their God. The gentleman from Jefferson (Mr. Hicks,) has thrown out a long speech, which I have no doubt is intended to do him much good when he again comes before his constituents for office; he read some Buncombe ordinances from Brown's history of Illinois, which is a good offset to his Buncombe speech.

The gentleman from Sangamon, (Mr. Logan) the acknowledged leader of the minority of this House has defined his position with regard to the bill now under consideration, which of course settles the question so far as whiggery is concerned. He fears that the Mormons have not located at Nauvoo solely for Manufacturing, Agricultural and Commercial purposes, but that they have some other object in view. Sir, is it not notoriously known that it is a part of their religion to gather together, and build a "great Temple," to the Deity; and does not the very argument of the gentleman tend to religious intolerance? He deprecates what he is pleased to style this one man power; does he forget that were his position true in relation to the Mormons (which I deny) he is battling against the federal principles so ably contended for by Alexander Hamilton, the founder of the political party of which he himself is so distinguished a member? The gentleman from Sangamon further tells us, that he voted against amending the Nauvoo charter in the session of 1842 & 43, this is true; and so did every leading whig in the House and Senate, at that time. This can be accounted for from the fact that there was a congressional election, to come off in a few short months; the Mormons were expected to hold the balance of power in one and perhaps two of the congressional districts. The course of the gentleman and his political friends on that occasion, is not at all surprising. The secret of their present bitter hostility to their city charter lies concealed in the simple fact that they did not receive the Mormon votes at that and subsequent elections.

It was then admitted that they had chartered privileges which were not granted to any of the other cities in this State, and if it were not for motives like these, why did whig gentlemen vote to retain those extra powers in the Nauvoo charter.

Gentlemen have asked how it is that so many reports are put in circulation, concerning Mormon depredations and Mormon outrages. Sir, how can it be otherwise, when such slanderous journals as the "Warsaw Signal," and a few other kindred priates are constantly busy at work, gathering and manufacturing all kinds of falsehoods for their columns, which are in many cases circulated free of charge throughout the country, in order to fan the excitement, and prejudice the public mind. No matter what the Mormons do, it is always wrong, their motives are impugned, and their actions belied by their enemies.

The public vehicle of mischief, the "Warsaw Signal," whose slanderous propensities has no equal in the country, (excepting one who I shall notice in due time) is entitled to much of the credit in bringing dishonor and disgrace upon our state, in the late and lamentable disturbances in Hancock county. I might say much upon this subject, but will forbear. The hireling who infests our gallery daily, is also entitled to his full share of manufactured slanders against the citizens of Nauvoo, and all those residing in Hancock county, opposed to "mobocracy." Sir, he is seen sneaking and skulking about behind the doors, and stair ways; makes it his business to misrepresent the proceedings of this House, and scandalizing democratic members of this legislature; his notorious insolence and disregard to truth precludes him from a seat within the bar of this or the other branch of the General Assembly, with respectable reporters, he who bears the evident mark of condemnation upon his countenance, and I might say, whose forked tongue has ceased to sting, whether the object of his malignity be ranked among the higher or lower classes of society. It is from such sources and such men that the numerous reports of Mormon outrages reach the public ear.

Town rivalry had also something to do with this opposition to Nauvoo. While Warsaw was on the decline, Nauvoo was rapidly increasing in wealth and population; a plan to bring about a re-election was soon concocted by the leading men of Warsaw, who made one pilgrimage after another to Nauvoo, imploring the Mormon Prophet to aid them in building up a city adjoining the town of Warsaw, by a ceding a portion of the Mormon population in and about Warsaw, and commence the building of a new city. The bubble soon exploded, and the speculation failed. This gave rise to dissatisfaction with some who had heretofore been exceedingly polite to Lieutenant General Joseph Smith.

Mr. Speaker, I was in hopes that the Senate bill could not pass, but be so amended by this House as to leave to the citizens of Nauvoo a reasonable and modified charter; but, sir, amendment after amendment has been laid upon the table. There seems to be a disposition to prosecute that people, and deny them even handed justice. It is too evident that vengeance is to be dealt out without regard to justice because they are Mormons. I had intended to offer an amendment to the bill, providing for a limited charter, being fully satisfied that it would avail nothing. I am sorry to say it, but I do think prejudice is so strong that justice will not be done. I arose more for the purpose of entering my protest against the passage of the bill now under consideration, than with any hope of preventing its passage. If the city charter of Nauvoo is unconditionally repealed, I now take this opportunity to say in my place, without fear of successful contradiction, that it is an act of wanton legislation, unwarranted by circumstances, and without a parallel in the history of our country.

What does the information of the Governor prove in his special message to this General Assembly, in relation to the Mormons and their persecutors, but that the Mormons are the least to blame? Sir, as I before said, I have no affinity with them whatever, neither in a pecuniary or religious point of view. I can bear testimony to many things contained in the special message. The Mormons are certainly a more orderly and law-abiding community than the anti.

There is no doubt some bad men have and do exist among them; how can it be otherwise, in a community of 11,000 souls? Is it honorable and right to make the innocent suffer with the guilty? I will now close by appealing to gentlemen on this floor to forbear to do the act; a sense of honor and love, of even-handed justice would seem to demand that the Senate bill should not pass. Withhold your hands from the sacred rights of Mormon citizens, and leave them in the peaceable possession of civil and religious liberty. Do not persecute for opinion's sake, and thus destroy the sanctity of our constitution and laws, but extend to all parts of our state the benefit of equal legislation!

NO GOD.

We present below, the proceedings of a meeting of the "No Godders," the Communists, or Infidelists. How true it is—"without God men are fools." Nothing but Mormonism can "stand the crush of worlds, and wreck of matter."

SKANEATELES.

[Correspondence of the New York Herald.]

Skaneateles, Jan. 4, 1845.

Fourism on its Legs—Socialism in its first Age—Skaneateles Community—A Social System without Religion or Revelation—Its Body.

Mr. Editor:—

Believing you to be one of the few, that can courageously and fearlessly publish truth without fear of party; and as our country requires truth, I am induced to send you a description of a meeting that took place in this village last evening, in consequence of the following notice:—

JOHN A. COLLINS.

The character of this "Great Apostle of Social Reform," will be exhibited at the Congregational Hall, on Friday evening, at half past six o'clock, by those who know:—

January, 2, 1845.

In consequence, the house was filled to overflowing. At the appointed hour, Wm. Rector, an expelled communist, made the enquiry, whether the assembly wished to have a chairman to preside; the answer or vote being in the affirmative, James Cummings Fuller was installed, and on a vote for secretary, William M. Barnum, received the appointment.

After some preliminary remarks from the chair, Wm. Rector was called for to address the meeting. He began by saying he went to the Community, about 15 months ago, and stated that he went there as a free agent, not as a member of a secret association—that when he first saw the evils, he was not in a condition, either in pocket or wardrobe to leave. He censured the presses in this village justly, I think, for not publishing Miranda Randall's letter, wherein she had set forth J. A. C. in his true light.

The first trait in Collin's character that he took up, was his adaptation for business habits, which Collins says "he is more suitable for than any man in the universe." To this end he called the attention of the meeting to a long advertisement in the village papers, in which he proposed to do blacksmithing, shoemaking, saddle and harness making, tailoring, carpentering and joining, masonry, painting, sawing lumber to order, to erect buildings by contract. This work was promised to be done in a workmanlike manner, and on reasonable terms. This advertisement had a tendency to deceive, as at that time they had no sawmill, no forge. Tailors they hired, saddlers and masons (See 4th page.)

The Hibernia says the Herald, arrived at Boston at 9 o'clock Wednesday morning, with London papers of the 3d, and Liverpool of the 4th inst.

We regret to state that no tidings of the United States or England, had been received at Liverpool to the 4th inst.

The new movement in Ireland, in opposition to repeal, was producing great excitement.

O'Connell is arrayed against the Pope. No change in the price of cotton.

The English money market was easy.

The Pope of Rome was dangerously sick.

Zurbaro, the Spanish Insurgent Chief, has been captured, and executed by the civilized government of Spain.

State of England.—The present state of things (the increase in the revenue, &c.) is a great triumph for Sir Robert Peel, after all the difficulties that were thrown in the way of his ascending to the premiership, and affords manifest evidence of the benefits of a calm and steady government. He found the exchequer empty, and some thirty millions added to the national debt by his predecessors;—there were no apparent sources of improvement; trade languished; the funds were low; no confidence in the money market; men of capital shrank from employing it; and the people generally are dissatisfied; but in less than four years the whole scene is changed. We have now a large surplus revenue; a diminished and diminishing debt; public credit and the national funds never stood so high; trade flourishes; foreign wars have been successfully concluded; home agitations have nearly ceased; moreover, these substantial advantages may be fairly regarded as the harbingers of further and greater improvement, political, financial and social.

IRELAND.
At Limerick, on Sunday night, a party were assembled at a "wake" in Changelane, one of the poorest localities in the city, and the room in which the body was laid out was densely crowded. The floor suddenly gave way, and all within were precipitated to the room beneath, which also fell, carrying all to the next and that again, being the third, to the ground. By this melancholy accident eleven persons were killed, and from fifteen to twenty grievously maimed—some with legs and arms broken, skulls fractured, and one man had his back broken. The Irish papers continue weekly to furnish a melancholy list of agonizing outrages. In the last Nenagh Guardian three attempted murders are reported, the circumstances attending which are of the most horrible and revolting character, and a fourth is noticed as having occurred in that neighborhood, by the Dublin Evening Packet.

SPAIN.
The capture and execution of Zurbaro, in Spain, is the only intelligence from that country worth narrating. The previous accounts, which stated that he had succeeded in getting over the frontier into Portugal, caused the news of his arrest to excite much surprise as well as sympathy.

BELGIUM.
The latest news from Belgium states, that in the Chambers it was decided, by 65 to 22, that no address for the dismissal of the present administration should be presented to the King.

PORTUGAL.
On the 10th, Count Tejo laid before the Chamber of Deputies his anxiously expected budget for the year beginning on the 1st of July next, and ending on the 30th of June, 1846, from which it appears that a surplus of about 30,000,000 is calculated upon.

ITALY.
Letters from Rome state that the Pope is in a most alarming state of health, and that the cardinals are on the qui vive for what may happen. His holiness is upwards of seventy-nine years of age.

SWITZERLAND.
Accounts from Switzerland say that several cantons are in open warfare. At Argovie the insurgents, after having taken the arsenal, without any resistance being offered on the part of the government, seized on the ammunition and other stores, which were collected in large quantities, and marched towards Lucerne, where they were to meet the insurgents of the other cantons. The cantons of Berne were taking measures to refuse a passage to persons coming from Freiburg to join the other malcontents at Lucerne.

AUSTRIA.
Most of the persons who had been found guilty of political conspiracy in Austrian Galicia, in 1840, have just been pardoned by the Emperor of Austria. The punishment of those who were condemned to death has been commuted to imprisonment.

RUSSIA AND CIRCASSIA.
It is long since any thing has made such a great sensation in St. Petersburg as the dismissal of General Von Rennenkampf, who has sent to the Emperor false reports respecting the events of the war in the Caucasus. The investigations that have taken place on this occasion are said to have led to the discovery that the person accused is by no means the only one who has been guilty of this crime; on the contrary, that it is something common, and has already been practised for years in Caucasus. Hence the occasional acts of violence when no victories had been gained; hence the exaggeration with which the deeds of the Russians were sometimes extolled, while the mountaineers are every where masters. The last accounts from Georgia bring the information that in the month of November the Circassians took two Russian forts, and put the garrisons to the sword.

The Emperor of Russia is said to be so much amazed at the interminable war with the Circassians, that he is determined next season to take the field in person.

GREECE.
The Chamber is at length formed;—and, under the dictation of Coletti, enforced by the bullying of Grivas, Camillo Deligamis has been elected President, and Canaris and Calpurnius Vice Presidents. Amongst these Canaris is the only one who has the slightest pretension to respectability; and the President, who can scarcely read, and has less skill in writing, must feel the awkwardness of his position as the head of a legislative assembly. In fact, he himself was so conscious of the absurdity, that he most strenuously protested against the nomination; and was only persuaded to retain the dignity thus thrust upon him by the promise of the portefeuille of minister of marine. This promise has been kept;—and to-day his appointment took place. The Greek President has not one qualification befitting his high office. It would seem as if Coletti, having shown his contempt for the constitution, is resolved to make a farce of the representative system.

TAHITI.
From a letter addressed to a gentleman in Yorkshire, by his friend in Tahiti, which contains the latest accounts from that part of the world, and arrived last week, it seems the French continue sovereigns and masters of the ground they stand upon in Tahiti—that the Queen's government has not been restored—that a brief armistice has been agreed upon between the French and the native chiefs which seemed on the point of being terminated—and that many of the English missionaries are taking their departure.

MOROCCO.
News from Morocco has been received by way of Gibraltar, giving a most deplorable account of the internal state of the empire. The Kabyles were pillaging the towns, whilst the Emperor is described as having lost authority since the battle of Isly.

NEW ZEALAND.
Papers to the 13th of October have arrived, at which dates affairs in the colony continued in a very unsettled condition. Complaints are made that Capt. Fitzroy leans to the natives, and shows not the least desire to promote or protect the interests of his fellow countrymen. Another dispute between the Maories and the settlers at the Bay of Islands, had taken the Governor round to the spot. He arranged all the differences, in a manner, however, not satisfactory to the settlers, and the troops which had been sent from Sydney at his solicitation, in consequence, returned in the same vessel which took them to Wellington. Capt. Fitzroy, with the concurrence of the council, had declared the Bay of Islands a free port, a measure which had given great satisfaction to the aborigines. The land question also is made a matter of complaint against Capt. Fitzroy, and the aborigines are evidently determined not to give up their titles without being well remunerated.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.
We have advices from the Cape of Good Hope to the 17th of December. Since the visit of the Governor to the frontier the colonists have enjoyed more perfect security against pillaging by the Caffres than at any former period, and the tour has thus far been attended with the most beneficial results. The association formed for the encouragement of the growth of cotton wool is proceeding with spirit, and they have taken measures to procure the best kinds of seeds from the U. States.

DEFENCE OF THE LAKES.
The policy of England in the construction of ship canals to connect the American lakes with the ocean, a policy now on the eve of consummation, has at length drawn attention on our part, and the inquiry is arising as to the best means of countervailing the movements of our sagacious rival. The subject was alluded to in the Senate of the United States on the 7th, and a resolution adopted, calling upon the Secretary of War to report as to the best means of defending the lake frontier.

An article in the Southern Literary Messenger, by Lieut. Maury, presents in this connection a strong array of facts and considerations which are of the utmost moment. We quote some passages:—Republican.

"As soon as Great Britain began to recover from the exhausting effects of her last war with us and the continent, she recollected what had occurred on the lakes, and with deep-smothered feelings of national chagrin, began to cast about how she might, for the future, best strengthen herself in that quarter. The treaty of Ghent stipulated that neither of the contracting parties should keep aloft on the lakes any armed forces beyond a gun boat or two. How then, could she make ready against the next war? To build a lake navy, and leave it on the stocks to rot, would be bad economy. Besides, it would be attracting too much attention, and would put us, too, on our guard. She therefore, quietly went to work, and under the pretence of carrying out a system of internal improvements merely for the accommodation of Canadian commerce, set about connecting the lakes with the ocean by means of larger ship canals—the largest on the continent. Through these canals she can now, in case of war, cover the lakes with all the light forces of the British navy.

For the last 10 or 15 years that nation has been constantly engaged on these works. She first constructed the Welland and the St. Lawrence canals; with these two links on the military chain thus drawn she at first thought to make sure her future supremacy on the lakes. But she saw the importance and power and the strength of the west growing and extending and enlarging themselves by broad spreading, more and more every day. She therefore judged it wise to tear down her first works, to commence new, and build larger. The Rideau canal was forthwith commenced, and no less than 6,000 laborers set at work in deepening and widening the Welland canal. This canal, though not yet completed upon its enlarged scale is navigable in the summer. They are now at work on it, and expect to complete it next year. It has a lock at either end 185 feet long, and 45 broad; and though unfinished, it is already capable of passing vessels 450 tons burden, (larger, be it recollected, than Perry's flagship of Lake Erie) from the ocean around the falls of Niagara, and up to that very lake, and thence through Huron to Michigan or Superior.

Our commerce on the lakes at this time amounts in value to one hundred millions of dollars annually. It is but in its first beginnings. Every year adds to the rich aggregate. It will soon exceed by far the entire total of our foreign commerce. In the event of war with England, what means have we of protecting the trade? By what possible device could the vessels and cargoes of our people on the lakes be saved from the hands of the enemy or from destruction?

Apart from the value of the commerce on the lakes to which war with England would bring immediate ruin, the exposed condition of the towns and coast on the lake frontier is to be regarded. Buffalo, Erie, Cleveland, Detroit, nay every port and village on that long line of lake shore would be left at the mercy of the British armaments which in a few weeks would be transferred from the docks of Plymouth and Portsmouth to the inland waters of Erie, Michigan and Huron.

Lieut. Maury urges the fact upon the country that unless, in a war with Great Britain, we can assemble as strong a naval force on the lakes, and I get it there as soon as she can, we can not defend them. "Suppose," he adds "that England should declare war with us to-morrow: in two weeks time she could have, of her sixty war steamers, thirty or forty on the lakes. In that time not one could we add to the only one which we have there; we could not build them in so short a time. To do that would require months, and there is no channel by which we could send there any disposable naval force which we might have on the Mississippi, in the Gulf, or along the seaboard. With such a strait of us, what would become of our lake commerce? It would be struck lifeless in a day. The lakes are narrow, and these steamers, in a line abreast, stretching across from shore to shore, might, with brooms at their mast-head, literally sweep the lakes from "Sackett's Harbor," to "Fond du Lac." There would be nothing to prevent it. In one month's time all our trading vessels there might, either be sunk or burned, or held as English prizes."

What can be done to avert this prospective, though contingent calamity? It is not the part of wisdom to sit inactive while the means of doing so much mischief are in the hands of a foreign power, ready at any moment to be employed against us, and that at our very doors. No Government unless imbecile or impotent, could be expected to remain inert while the possibility of such a disastrous visitation existed without being guarded against.

Happily the means of self protection are at hand; and it only remains for the government to make an efficient use of them. Lieut. Maury suggests that the Illinois Canal, designed to connect the Mississippi with Lake Michigan, be taken under the control of the government, and completed upon an enlarged scale so as to admit steamers and large vessels to pass from the Mississippi to the Lakes.

The establishment of a navy yard at Memphis has been already directed by act of Congress. At this point could be built vessels of any required size and armament, to be transferred as occasion demanded from the Mississippi to the bosom of Lake Michigan or Erie, or wherever danger threatened in that quarter. The resources of the great west could be thus brought into active development for naval purposes; and a permanent communication being opened between the Mississippi and the lakes, an identity of interest would be at once established along the whole extended circuit from Buffalo to New Orleans. Let us hear Lieut. Maury on this point:

"The Illinois Canal is for sale. When completed on the scale of the Welland and Rideau canals, it would give us the same supremacy and advantage on the western lakes that Great Britain now has in the eastern. She can approach them from the sea, and we cannot; with the Illinois canal equal to hers, we could approach the western lakes from the sea, and she cannot. We could therefore meet her at least half-way, and dispute lake ascendancy with her with many natural advantages in our favor. The latitude of the Rideau canal is 45 1-2 deg., the extreme northern point of the Illinois is 42 deg., more than 200 miles difference of latitude in our favor. We could, therefore, in case of war, commence the assemblage of a fleet on the lakes at least a month or six weeks earlier in the spring, or later in the fall, than she could, which natural advantage would be sufficient of itself to turn the scale in our favor.

The completion of this work upon a scale commensurate with the objects in view, (the connecting the Gulf and Lakes by steamboat navigation,) is an important link in the system of general defence. It is a great national work, upon which in war, the integrity of our soil in seven States entirely depends, and one upon which the great western valley must mainly depend for safety and defence. I therefore run up the lake flag, and go for forty-fying them with "motes and ditches," instead of parapet and wall.

This is a grand project—one, moreover, which the dictates of prudence and policy commend quite as strongly as it is embraced at once by the ardent mind of enthusiasm. It satisfies the reason; it fills the imagination; it is in grand accordance with the spirit of the age, it is worthy of the republic and its destiny of greatness. What remains but to accomplish it forthwith? Let no abstraction of the brain come in to divert the national mind from so practical, so useful a purpose. As for the constitutional power in the case, it would be a hard thing indeed if a nation had not the right of self-defence and self-protection—and this measure looks to that very end, and is essential thereto. [Balt. Amer.]

Locusts.—Extract from a letter dated Fayal, Azores, Dec. 8:—

"A singular phenomenon occurred here about the middle of last month; during a strong southerly wind, an innumerable quantity of large red insects, resembling grasshoppers, fell on the island, and on the sea around. On examining them, they were found to correspond exactly with the descriptions of the Egyptian locusts. All the other islands were visited in like manner, and a vessel, which arrived a few days since, reports having sailed through them during the day: such vast quantities having fallen and perished. They must have come from Africa. They are fast disappearing."

Iron Vessel.—We copy the following from the Pittsburg Advertiser of the 11th:

Yesterday afternoon, an iron vessel, called the Hunter, was launched at the iron ship yard of Mr. Tomlinson. This vessel is about 130 tons burthen, built on Lieut. Hunter's plan of submerged propellers. She belongs to Lieut. McLaughlin, of the United States navy, and is intended for commercial use; or, as is reported, is to go to Russia, to give the Autocrat a specimen of American skill, and of Lieut. Hunter's plan of propulsion. She is to be full rigged, as a brig or schooner, we have not learned which.

Two other iron rigged steamers, constructed here, are about, one launched at Erie, the Michigan, a large war steamer and the revenue cutter Jefferson, launched at Oswego, on Lake Ontario.

In addition to these, we have two on the stocks. One, a large iron steamer, to be ship-rigged on Hunter's plan, called the John Tyler, intended for a revenue cutter for the Gulf of Mexico. This will be launched shortly. The other is an iron forty four gun steam frigate, to be ship rigged, of about 1,100 tons—This will be a splendid vessel, and the largest iron vessel ever built in the United States. She will not be launched until next season. Both these are on Hunter's plan.

Self Instruction.—Lord Brougham once remarked, that if we were deprived of what we learn during the three first years of our lives, we should be the most ignorant beings on the face of the globe. The following referred to in that remark, is evidently science, acquired by self-instruction. A knowledge of the productions of nature, and of the laws which govern them; obtained by direct observation and diversified experiments—by self-moved, self-impelled, delightful and almost ceaseless efforts, on the part of the young and self-taught pupil.

"Bless my soul," said an old lady on seeing the political heading in a newspaper, "Illinois moving?" "I hope it won't move on to my son William's farm on the border of Indiana."

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12, 1845.

DEDICATION.
Last week, the "Music Hall" was dedicated in an appropriate manner. Three evenings were occupied for the services, during which time the music of the band, and melody of the choir, like the wine mentioned in scripture, cheered the heart of God and man. We shall hereafter, give this branch of our city improvement, a "sweet touch or two."

COPY-RIGHT.
We have the pleasure of stating that the copy-right of the Book of Mormon according to the act of Congress, passed in Feb. 1831, remains "secured," till June 1857. This is as it should be, aid at once puts a veto on the calculations of those who would print that book for speculation.

RETORT CORTEOUS.
The Editor of the "St. Louis Organ," who only acts when acted upon, like a bean in a bladder, thus rattles out his prayer; "shades of steel and feathers look down upon us;"—which meaneth, use no razor upon us, till we have remained in a goosery long enough for our beards to grow.

SHARK FOOD.
President Polk's journey from Tennessee to Washington, was characterized by a little unwarranting. The following from the New York Herald, is a specimen.

P. S.—The Chevaliers L'Industrie robbed two of Col. Polk's friends to-night in landing—Mr. McAllister and Mr. Churchill, members of the Kentucky delegation, who accompanied the President from Louisville to this city. Mr. Churchill, I understand, was robbed of $200 in gold and Kentucky bills. Mr. McAllister lost $300, mostly in Indiana and other Western money. A great time for pickpockets and office-burglars truly! eh? S. H.

Church and State.—At the last election in Canada, the political excitement ran so high that several clergymen voted, though for doing so they were subjected by law to a fine of $2,000. Eighteen of them had been indicted for the offence, and petitioned Parliament to remit the fine. It seems that there is no prospect of their petitions being granted.—Eastern Paper.

¶ If you wish to find the seeds of criminality and corruption, go to Bual's priesthood from Cain to Canada. The corruption of the clergy is as thick as the Egyptian Fog.

THE RICH DUTCHMAN.
The rich Dutchman, mentioned below, had better keep his money out of Illinois Taxes and Tyrants' touch pockets.

A great wind fall.—The New Era of yesterday, has the following announcement: "We have it from a reliable source that a German farmer, by the name of George J. J. Geyer, living near the village of Lewiston, Fulton County, Illinois, is about to start on a trip to Europe, for the purpose of taking possession of the snug fortune of two millions six hundred thousand dollars worth of property. He recently received a letter from the firm of Rothschilds, at Frankfurt, stating that a law suit had been pending for more than thirty years in the courts of Germany, and in which his wife was one of the heirs at law, had been decided in their favor; and that a division of the amount in litigation, was about to take place, and they wished to know his pleasure concerning the amount coming to his wife, which is stated to be in round numbers two millions six hundred thousand dollars. Geyer emigrated to this country fifteen years ago, and settled in Fulton county, where he has followed the occupation of a farmer. At the time he left Germany, the gaining of the suit was considered doubtful."

Bishop of New York.—The standing committee of the diocese of New York have published the result of their deliberations upon the sentence of Bishop Onderdonk. Chief Justice Jones, Murray Hoffman, and G. C. Verplank, compose the committee. They decide that Bishop Onderdonk has not been degraded or deposed from his diocese, but is still a Bishop; and that under his suspension the standing committee is the regular constituted ecclesiastical authority of the diocese.—Republican.

¶ Spiritual wickedness in high places, is the order of the day. Jones, Hoffman, and Verplank, have as little regard for the sanctity of religion, right and virtue as Satan had, when he took our Saviour up on the top of an exceeding high mountain, and showed him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, and said all these will I give thee, if thou wilt worship me. Underdark, for so he ought to be called, is so much given to gynococracy, that, if he had the sanction of a string of corrupt committees as long as Lucifer's "great chain," he still would be considered, by honest people, "an old drunken debauchee."

EXTINCT HUMAN RACES.
We see it stated in a Philadelphia paper, that in the remotest parts of North and East Asia, remains have been discovered which prove that nearly the whole of that great continent was once occupied by human races whose very names have perished. Some of these nations appear to have made progress in the arts and civilization. Their tombs are found spread over the countries eastward of Jenney, in great numbers, and are of magnificent construction. They contain fragments of earthen manufacture or porcelain, ornaments, and various implements of silver, gold, and copper. The learned academicians of St. Petersburg have satisfied themselves that such relics belonged to a people who must have disappeared before the light of history dawned upon these countries. Discoveries leading to a similar result have been traced through the New World, from the countries bordering on the Mississippi and Ohio, where tombs are found containing skeletons of a different conformation from that of the present native tribes, to the high table-land of Thibet, in the Peruvian Cordillera, where are seen the supposed ancient representatives of the Flat Heads. Even in the islands of Polynesia, vestiges are discovered which have been referred to a former race of inhabitants; and there are facts which indicate that extensive countries in Europe were occupied by races of a different physical character from the present natives, in times which preceded the arrival of Celts and Goths, and other Indo-Germanic nations from the East.—Lancet, &c.

¶ The foregoing remarks are used by philosophers and speculators upon the bible, and mankind to prove that revelation is false; that the world always existed, and that the varieties of the families of the earth are spontaneous. It is a little astonishing that men, having reason enough to read, write and reflect, should come before the world with such arguments to disprove revelations, when every person of any understanding whatever, discerns upon the first perusal, strong testimony in support of the bible. Such relics prove that there has been a flood, according to the bible; the remains of various races of men, bear testimony, that "there were giants in the earth before the flood;" that there have been "mighty men, and men of renown;" in all ages, and in all countries.

Why men are so blind to true knowledge, is more mysterious than the most marvellous mystery they produce to sully the everlasting truth. All the ruins, all the countries, and all the remains of nations, mentioned in holy writ, are on hand as witnesses of the facts. And scattered over the globe, and the oppressed Jews mourning among all nations, "till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," tell a story that twenty five hundred years have not been able to gain say, or disprove; and yet we find the "little horn," rising up and speaking "great things."

All we have to say, is, dig up the ruins, publish the marvellous findings of cities; and then remember, that these things substantiate Mormonism, more forcibly than living witnesses. The original is better proof than a copy. Roll back the curtain of ages, and let the truth come to light. All things hidden must be uncovered, and the knowledge of God fill the world, as the waters do the sea.

COMMUNICATIONS.

THE CONCERT.
"Music hath charms."

Mr. Erwin:
The late Concerts, which came off at the new Music Hall, in this place, on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday nights of last week, was attended with great interest on each evening. The Music Hall is a large and commodious brick building, suitable to convene some seven or eight hundred persons. It is finished at the north end with a raised floor or platform, furnished with seats and desks for the accommodation of singers and musicians.

On Wednesday evening I was in attendance to see what music there was in Nauvoo. At sun-down the house was filled beyond convenience, and it was found impossible for more to enter. At dusk the house was lighted with three chandeliers, which spread an ample light over the vast assembly, disclosing hundreds of happy and smiling faces exhibiting the beautiful and intelligent faces of Nauvoo.

The choir consisted of twenty-seven female singers, and eighteen gentlemen. There were twelve of the kind and present. Two pieces were performed and a prayer was made by Elder Almon Babbitt.

A programme of the pieces performed has already been published in your paper, so I need not recapitulate them. But permit me to say, they were performed excellently—they could not have been surpassed. The "Seer," a hymn composed by Elder John Taylor, on the massacre of the Prophet, was sung elegantly. The "Lamentation of Zion," a duet composed by Wm. Clayton, was sung by Elder J. Kay and Miss Susan Divine. Mr. Kay as a singer, would do credit to any Eastern concert. His voice is full, soft, and well cultivated, and he varies it with harmony and skill. The female voice was full of melody and sweetness. This was an affecting and sentimental piece, and excited a deep intensity of feeling.

The glee sung by Wm. Cahoon and lady, and Mrs. Bayles, was sung with credit.

DISUNION.

The movements of those factions, and misguided men who talk and affect to think of the dissolution of the Union, as a very unimportant matter, is calculated to excite mingled feelings of indignation and regret—indignation at the continuous attempt to overthrow the greatest fabric ever reared by human wisdom—and regret that our land is disgraced by such fanatic fools. These movements would awaken more apprehensions if they were entirely unprecedented, and if a patriotic devotion of a large majority of the people to the Union had not been repeatedly tested in times of fiery trial. The majority has resisted and frowned down every attempt at they had none of, and of harness makers but one. As to building, they had to hire mechanics from the village to put them up. He gave a specimen of Collins' business habits, with regard to purchasing a wood lot up the lake, hiring choppers, and conveying his logs on railroad, whereby the logs cost more than the lumber was worth when sawed, besides having them in an unsafe situation—his giving his note, and refusal to pay the same—representing himself as an agent of a paper called the Social Pioneer, by which he incurred a debt of ninety-six dollars, which he drew from the Treasury, and never accounted therefor. He then treated of John's benevolence, and added two or three cases of his brutal conduct to a Mrs. Valzezer, his unmanly threats to her—his conduct with regard to Edward Ellib, of Philadelphia, who was threatened to be turned out of his room, after having obtained all that could be obtained from him, because he had expressed himself unfavorably to his measures—his abusive language to females—his conduct to himself (Rector)—how, in order to get a remuneration for his labors, he (Rector) had taken a yoke of oxen, wagon, and fifteen bushels of wheat, after endeavoring, in vain, to obtain a settlement with Collins; which wheat he sold—how Collins, a man that disbelieved in an appeal to the law, issued a writ of replevin, and arrested him (Rector). Spoke of Dr. Dwight, and a man named Beckett, as two of Collins' strenuous supporters. Also of Collins' complimentary toast in regard to the Boston Investigator—a paper which will publish nothing detrimental to his, Collins' interest.

O. Kellogg, of Ohio, then stood up to speak. J. A. Collins also stood up, but was received with loud signs of disapprobation, hisses, cries of "down with Collins." The chairman interfered, restored order, and requested Collins to sit down. Collins sat down with a countenance resembling that of a demon; as it appeared, from the expanded veins in his forehead, that he was wrought up to the highest pitch of excitement. Kellogg then accused Rector of frequently taking community property. An enquiry from John Milton Arnold, whether it was not a community principle for each to help himself to what he wanted, called forth loud applause, Kellogg proceeded. (Hissing and great uproar.) J. A. Collins stood up. (Hissing and increased cries of "down, down.") The chairman called on him to sit down, he refused. (The uproar at this crisis was tremendous.) After some time the chairman obtained order, and then stated that he thought that a person who would not observe, and pay respect to the chair, ought not to have a hearing. (Great cheering.) Upon this, the great advocate of social reform, with veins that seemed ready to burst from mental excitement, and a countenance the most diabolical I ever saw, resumed his seat, muttering "infamous! infamous!" After Kellogg had done, Collins stood up, and amidst great confusion, endeavored to substantiate his character as to honesty; attacked the character of Mr. Johnson, a leading communityist, now in Boston, who left some time since. This was received with every mark of disapprobation, inasmuch as Johnson was not present—and also foreign to the object of the meeting.

Rector then substantiated his former statement. Cries for Prior, Prior, G. Prior is a respectable man, for many years a resident of Philadelphia, and of late years of this town and Waterloo. G. Prior then stood up and confirmed Rector's statement—spoke of the creed that was published, something over a year ago, as being got up for a particular purpose, which was to get rid of Johnson, whose ideas of liberty were more enlarged than Collins'—spoke of Collins' hypocrisy. Collins here stood up to explain. (Great confusion, hisses, &c.) A vote being taken as to whether Collins should explain or not, was carried in the affirmative—he then spoke of his former good friends and zealous coadjutors in a manner both sneering and contemptible—of his good deeds as a peace maker—his good management as a farmer—spoke of the farm as one of extraordinary fertility, as it, according to his estimate would produce 70 bushels of shell corn per acre—stated his benevolence would not allow him to assist a single individual, but must extend to the mass; and therefore, if he could not assist the whole world, he refrained from relieving the wants of the solitary indigent—stated that the advertisements in the village papers had been inserted under an impression that the members of the community would have carried out his intentions, but that he found them intractable. He had no complaint to make but against those who opposed him in his ambitious views. Mr. Kennedy, a late member, then spoke; he said he believed there were many candid and honest people at Community Place, and he wished the audience to observe, that he did not consider J. A. Collins and community as synonymous—that as far as his experience was concerned, he must say, that what Rector had stated of Collins was too true.

A Mr. Holmes then took the floor on Mr. Kennedy's setting down—he appears a perfect counterpart of Collins he endeavored to convince the audience that the difference consisted in mere matters of opinion, and charged Rector with being idle, and that he considered G. Prior had stated what was not true. Prior hereupon called upon Holmes for proof.

Holmes after much deliberation and hesitancy, said he did not think that Collins had invited Prior to the Community as stated by Prior, but Prior stated that he had the letter by him, and offered at a future day to produce it, wherein the invitation was given to him by Collins. Rector charged Collins with uncommunity principles, with regard to his conduct to a man named Jackson. Collins replied that Jackson was a man with a large family, and though he did not object to Jackson as a man, still he would dispense with him to get rid of his family. Prior charged him with hypocrisy in his conduct to Mr. Johnson, inasmuch as that he heaped the most opprobrious epithets on his head—but at his parting with him he must salute him with a kiss. This was confirmed by a lady then present, not withstanding Collins' denial. Prior also charged him with being an encourager of licentious conduct, which Collins did not deny but in a general way—giving the lie to all Prior had stated.

The meeting continued from half past ten, during which it seemed as if hell had been let loose—such rioting, hissing, and yellings require a more graphic pen than mine to describe. Collins was denounced as a complete tyrant in his conduct, that he acted under the cloak of professed love to all mankind—as a covetous, and an ambitious man—a perfect atheist, under the cloak of a true worshipper. Collins denounced his accusers as being idle and poor; and, therefore, of no consideration in the public eye, on account of their poverty. This is rather strange doctrine for a man, whose whole life has been prowling on the public, as a beggar, for livelihood; and according to his own statement, who has ever acted the hypocrite.

Much praise is due to the Chairman for his impartiality towards the speakers; and the enthusiasm with which his observations were greeted, plainly showed that the audience appreciated the course he pursued.

The cause of the trouble at Community appears a jealousy of too much power invested in one man—and that man John A. Collins. Johnson, who is somewhat of a lawyer, and about the most honest and industrious amongst them, has been a complete thorn in the flesh to Collins in curbing his ambition. As a last resource, Collins got a friend to buy Johnson's interest in the concern, and to give him employment in Boston at a yearly salary. When Johnson got to Boston, he exposed Collins, and raised such a rookery at Community place, that in order to keep possession of the station of ruler, it became necessary to have a clearance of all opposers to the one man in power; accordingly a large number left, and one man undertook to remunerate himself by taking off some of the Community property, and for so doing was arrested by virtue of a writ issued in Collins' name. You know Collins, and I need not inform you what a serpent man he is—a perfect kaleidoscope—never catch him in a position twice alike—beautiful in theory, but unsubstantial in practice.

On the following Wednesday, the 3th, another meeting was held in the same place, and the same persons presided. The charges were a recapitulation of the former statements, with additions of Collins' mode of keeping accounts—inasmuch as an arbitration lately held at Community place, Collins had made no entry of property to a considerable amount to the credit of the Community, and had represented the liabilities of the association much greater than they were.

Collins in a specious speech endeavored to explain, and was listened to with the greatest attention. Considerable recrimination took place. From Collins' account the association were between two and three thousand dollars in debt; and according to his opponent, a balance of from four to five hundred dollars made the Community so much better than nothing!

Mr. Orris, formerly an attorney in this county, seems the most independent man at Community at present, stated that he thought Rector a misused man, and had so stated at Community. Collins admitted that though he had charged Rector with being idle, that he had made an advance of a considerable sum of money to him, in order to keep him there to work at a dollar a day. Rector called upon one young man from New Hampshire to state if he, the young man, did not receive the treatment due a man, and if he was not deceived with regard to Community. The young man, with a care-worn countenance, declined saying any thing at present. This seemed to imply, I dare not—I am too dependent on the Community now, but the time will come when I may open my mouth too. The result of the exposition was this, that the citizens are clearly convinced of what they have long thought of this association—that it is an atheistical seminary, and an impure fountain—that the sentiments published to the world are not, neither can they be, carried out there.

The house was crowded to excess: the greatest order was observed, for which the chairman deservedly received a vote of thanks, which was enthusiastically given. It is no easy matter to make Community folks observe the rules requisite at such meetings, as they follow the impulse of their own feelings, unobscured by common usages. The meeting continued until half past ten, and then retired in a peaceable manner.

One member accused Rector of thieving, for which he has obtained lodgings in the county jail, for a time to await the result of a trial.

COTTON IN CALIFORNIA—THE OREGON SETTLERS.

A gentleman, who left the Pacific coast, in December last, informs the editors of the New Orleans Picayune that two or three Americans are about to engage in the culture of cotton in the lower part of Upper California, and that they feel confident of raising a superior article and in great abundance. Their rancho or plantation is not far from San Diego, in lat. 33 deg. north, the climate being warm and delightfully fine.

The gentleman says that many of the Oregon settlers have arrived in the neighborhood of the bay of San Francisco, in the Upper California, and taken up their abode there.

They report Oregon as a poor country—nothing like the one it was represented to be—and appear thankful that the opportunity has been afforded them of leaving it and reaching a more fruitful and genial clime. So productive is the land in the neighborhood of San Francisco, that one bushel of wheat is frequently yielded from a single bushel, and this with very little trouble, while the climate is so warm and pure that sick persons find it a boon. To illustrate the richness of the soil, the gentleman states that he has seen a wheelbarrow full of wheat, &c., manufactured in New England of the best seasoned lumber, shrink up shortly after reaching this section of California, and fall to pieces unless every precaution is taken. American emigrants are constantly arriving and settling in the Sacramento and other streams, flowing into the Bay of San Francisco. At the Yerba Buena the English is the principal language spoken, the people being an American, and the time is not far distant when the Anglo-Saxon civilization and the thrifty products of Anglo-Saxon hands.

Dreadful Storm.—The Journal de Cette gives an account of a dreadful storm which happened at Cette, a small seaport in the south of France, on Tuesday, the 22d instant. About four o'clock in the afternoon a thunderbolt burst over the town, and produced such awful effects, that it is described as resembling a place which had undergone all the horrors of a siege. The Royal arsenal, a large building, was entirely destroyed, even the walls not being left standing. The zinc roof of the building was carried into the air, and broken into thousands of pieces, which fell in different parts of the town, where they did a great deal of injury. Several other large buildings were also destroyed. At the same time a storm prevailed in the harbor which wrecked and sunk six or seven merchant vessels, besides a great number of fishing and other boats. The number of persons who perished is calculated at about thirty, but the exact number was not known, and numbers were still missing whose fate is uncertain. A great number besides are severely wounded, from the falling of houses, and even at the time when the accounts came away, the people were afraid of a renewal of the disasters, as the storm was not then over.

Albert the King.—A report is very current, that a message from the Queen will be delivered to Parliament, shortly after the opening of the session, asking the Legislature to authorize her to confer the title of King upon Prince Albert. The precedents are—Philip and Mary I., and William III and Mary II. The Prince of Orange may be said to have won his title by the sword; on the other hand, Prince George of Denmark, husband of Queen Anne never received the title or enjoyed the dignity of King. —Oxford Herald.

Another Wonder.—Something like the Thames Tunnel has been discovered under the water near Marseilles.

It is a subterranean passage, passing from the Abbey of St. Victor, running under the arm of the sea, and ending under a tower of Fort St. Nicolas. The tunnel is described as being larger than that of London, and of one single vault of stone, and span, and one fourth longer.

Catholic of Ireland intend to convene a meeting at an early period, to take into consideration the danger which the liberty of their church is threatened by the recent legislation of the government, and the attempt to make by its agents to influence and overawe the court of Rome by fabrications, and threats, and promises.

Death of the Great Fool Chief.—The last Western Exhibitor states that the Great Fool, the great war leader of the Kansas Nation, was recently killed in a drunken brawl by one of his own tribe, near the Shawnee Mission above Westport. The name of Fool was given him on account of his rash, adventurous courage. According to the Indian version, a man is considered a fool who fights without caution. As a man, the Fool chief was universally beloved and feared by his tribe, and in his intercourse with the whites he was always a warm and unflinching friend.

Rows in Philadelphia.—The ledger states that on Monday evening about dark, a party of fellows commenced an indiscriminate attack upon the colored people in the vicinity of Seventh and Lombard streets, knocking down and kicking every one they met. Some of the city watchmen, with Alderman Johnson and officer Weisell, interfered and arrested one of them, named Harper, who was held by the Mayor in $1000 for a further hearing on Tuesday morning. They were armed with cord wood sticks, which they took from the door of a citizen. One of the watchmen was felled by a blow on the head, and another was struck severely upon the breast. A number of firemen from Moyamensing also attacked several houses in northern Liberties on Saturday night, breaking in the door and windows with brickbats.

Drinking, with a view to heighten natural good spirits, is like attempting to improve the natural fragrance of the rose by smearing it with pomatum.

A benevolent man would not so much wish for the lever of Archimedes to move the world itself, as for a moral lever that would enable him to lift its inhabitants one degree nearer to heaven; and this glorious privilege every such man does in a degree possess. His example operates as a strong arm, stretched out to raise his fellows to the eminence he has reached himself.

In the heathen mythology, Diana was twin born with Apollo—a useful hint to poets of the luxuriant lass.

It is a severe satire on mankind to say that prosperity is more difficult to bear than adversity. The maxim implies a natural meanness or malignity in those to whom it is applicable, for if a man has but the habitual wish to diffuse happiness, what more does he require to make his prosperity a blessing to himself and to all about him?

Fame, like money, can never be enjoyed, while we are obliged to dun the world for it. That only is worth having which comes unasked.

Genius is the wand of an enchanter—talent, the strength of a giant. The genius of astronomy, with his starry wand, has effectually shivered the fortress of superstition—shivered, but not destroyed;—almost every one possesses a piece of the ruin as a sort of relic; but it can never be re-united as a place of strength to overawe the nations.—Where Newton is freely studied and believed, we shall have no more religious wars.

Nations are sometimes, though rarely, ungrateful; but they much oftener commit the folly of being grateful infinitely overmuch. Let them beware of this; it is wasting one of the most precious streams that Providence has ordained to fructify human genius and benevolence.

Novel Bet.—A Pittsburgh paper says: Some twenty-one years since, a couple of our acquaintance—then young men—made a wager upon the weight of one of the party when he should have arrived at the age of forty years. It was bet that the individual in question would not weigh 180 pounds at forty years of age. From time to time the parties met, and the bet was resorted to as a source of amusement. The other day, the man who was to weigh 180 when he arrived at the discreet age of forty years, reached that eventful period. The parties met and 132 pounds was all he could balance down. He had lost the wager, and at once ordered a splendid bat for his friend who had waited patiently twenty-one years to have the bet decided. Not to let the matter drop, they made a new wager, to be paid by the one who weighed the most at the end of twenty years from that date. The forfeit was to be a half dozen of wine—a special reservation being made in favor of the said half dozen, in case either party should join the Total Abstinence Society in the mean time. Should both parties live, they will be three score years of age before the bet can be decided.

ANOTHER YOUNG REPUBLIC.

We learn by a letter received in Boston, that Northern California, one of the States of the Mexican Republic, was revolutionized on the 14th of November last, and the Mexican Governor, Gen. Michilorena, shut up in the little Fort at Monterey. The State of Northern California will go next, and will be followed by Santa Fe. Thus, one after another, in rapid succession, the States of Northern Mexico will fall unless Mexico comes to some understanding with the United States, by which, after annexing Texas, a well defined boundary shall be guaranteed to the Republic of Mexico for ever. It is the policy of England to control the whole of Northern Mexico, from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific Ocean, all along our Indian frontier as a means of carrying out her designs upon the U. States, and unless Texas is speedily annexed this formidable movement will be beyond control of both the U. States and Mexico. If the Senate of the United States, through the advice of parties whose patriotism is not beyond suspicion, shall reject the act of annexation now before them they will bring upon the United States and Mexico a long train of evils that will increase with the lapse of years.

and lead to the most deplorable results.—Every Senator who votes against annexation, votes for a chain of British Provinces along our whole Southern and South-Western frontier: he casts his vote in favor of giving Great Britain supreme command over 200,000 of the most warlike Indians in the world to scalp and murder our Southern and Western people, or the Mexicans, as English policy may dictate; he decides in favor of destroying republican influence on this continent, and virtually throws the United States, Texas and Mexico, at the feet of European monarchies. Each and every Senator has before him a fearful responsibility to his country on this question, and one vote may decide, for weal or woe, the destiny of the hundred millions of our race who shall inhabit this continent, probably within the present century. The crisis is at hand. Senators must meet the question, and either rise or fall with their votes.—New York Sun.

The Late Snow Storm.—This seems to have been one, covering the widest extent of territory known in many years. On the east, it extended as far as Bangor; on the south, as far as Savannah; on the west, as far as Michigan; and on the north, all over Canada.—It is rarely that so wide an extent of country is visited at once by a storm.

The severe cold of the past days has been succeeded by another north-east snow storm, which commenced during the night and has continued with unabated violence throughout the day. By the time the present storm has exhausted itself, we should conceive the average depth of snow on the ground will have considerably exceeded that which fell last winter. Yesterday morning the usual symptom, promontory of a change of weather, was observable in the dense fog which overspread the city and the surrounding country. —Quebec Gaz., 5th inst.

The lake appears to be completely frozen over. The falling of the immense body of snow into the water, which had been rendered to almost the freezing point caused the ice to form almost immediately. And if the present cold weather long continues, navigation will not open earlier than usual this season.—Buffalo Gaz., Feb. 10.

Inhuman if it were not in Rhode Island.—We learn that one of the poor debtors confined in our county jail, not long since, was unprovided by the keeper with food for five days! The poor man would have starved to death, of course, had it not been for his fellow prisoners, who, taking pity on his unhappy situation, handed out to him from time to time portions of their own rations. The reason that this poor victim to a most unrighteous law, unrighteously administered, was thus driven to the jaws of starvation was the fact that his creditors would not pay his board, and he had not taken the steps requisite to secure an indemnification of the keeper from the state, should he administer him even a crust of mouldy bread. We have this gloomy fact from a reliable source. It cannot be disputed. We wish it had some fictitious shades about it.—Providence Gazette.

THE DEBT OF TEXAS.

The Secretary of State, in answer to a call of Congress for information concerning the finances of Texas, has transmitted a letter from C. H. Raymond, the Texian Charge at Washington, in which he gives a summary of the statistical information upon the subject contained in the Texian documents. Not a word is said of the debt, amount of scrip issued, or anything of the kind—the Charge contenting himself with a statement of the receipts, expenditures, population, &c. He says that the expenditures of the government for all purposes, during General Houston's administration, up to the 1st of November last, excluding $50,873 82, of debts discharged, amounted to $460,209 18. The receipts during same time were $466,159. 09. Leaving a balance of $5,948 91.

The importations reported at the Custom houses from the 1st of August 1842, to 31st June, 1843, amounted to $417,205 32; the exports during same period, $416,767 78. No accurate statement of the duties collected during the quarter ending 1st November, 1842, has been obtained, but they are estimated at $30,000.

From that time to the 31st July, 1843 a period of nine months, the duties collected amounted to $102,452 60; the amount of direct taxes assessed in 1843, was $19,807 93.

According to the tax returns of 1843 the slave population at that time was 52,410. From the 1st August, 1842, to the 31st July 1843, there entered the ports of Texas 273 vessels, and there cleared during the same period, 238. The importations reported at the Custom houses for the year July 31, 1844, amounted to $686,503 03; the exports during the same time, to $615,113 34. The amount of duties collected on importations was $201,413 30; the expense of collecting was $23,551 45—leaving a net revenue of 117,851 85. The amount of direct taxes assessed during the year 1844, was $50,790 52.

THE NEIGHBOR. WEDNESDAY, MARCH 19, 1845.

☞ The weather, last week, was chilly and deadened the gardening prospects materially: but should "blushing spring begin to smile again so lovely," we shall expect to see Nauvoo, like a forest of hands, scratching the face of mother earth, to beautify it. So we work.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Our news from Washington is to the 4th inst. President Polk's Inaugural Address, which is at hand, will compare with any of his predecessors. Should he, in the midst of American and European slight of hand, gaming for the conquest of crumbling kingdoms, maintain his position honorably four years, it will be a miracle.

We shall give the address entire next week; but in the mean time the following is not without interest, to any portion of the United States citizens that may be oppressed:

"By the theory of our government, majorities rule, but this right is not an arbitrary or unlimited one. It is a right to be exercised in subordination to the constitution, and in conformity to it. One great object of the constitution was to restrain majorities from oppressing minorities, or encroaching upon their just rights. Minorities have a right to appeal to the constitution, as a shield against such oppression."

All we have to add is, President Polk, the 'MAJORITY' have oppressed the 'Latter-day Saints,' because they are a 'MINORITY,' in driving them from the State of Missouri; in martyring their best men, and in repealing their city charter, so that they can the more easily destroy the rest; and we appeal to you as the highest functionary of government, to 'shield us from further oppression! Will you do it?'

The Joint Resolutions to annex Texas, and the Post Office bill, reducing postage to five cents under three hundred miles, and ten cents for any distance over, passed both houses and will become the ruling laws according to their several provisions.

The Oregon bill to organize a government beyond the Rocky Mountains, was smothered in the Senate. There is said to be a little hope that Great Britain and the United States will adjust the matter by "treaty."

SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.

We have information from the Society Islands up to October 27. Our mission in these Islands goes ahead of our most sanguine expectations. At Tuoboui Elder Pratt has baptised all the whites but one, and ordained several to assist him in the work. Several of the natives have also been baptised. Elder Rogers, who wrote the last letter, was on the Island of Huahine, where all the whites headed by a missionary, were engaged in keeping grog-shops and levying. Elder Grouard was at Tahiti, where many whites had been baptised, and ere this, some of the natives too. "Truth is mighty and will prevail." The Times and Seasons will contain the letter alluded to at large.

Rafts.—Rafts of timber, fire-wood, &c., have made their appearance at our wharf within the past week. Perseverance and industry makes the world a paradise; and Mormonism and millennium will enjoy it.

The Mermel.—It is understood the steamer Mermel will ply as a weekly packet, between Bloomington and St. Louis during the season. Her intention is to reach Nauvoo, going up, on Friday mornings, and leave Nauvoo, going down, on Sunday mornings. Go it; old Mississippi never fires; and business and being are increased by navigation and marrying.

Our thanks to the officers for favors. The same to the Osprey.

Elder Moses Daily would take this method to inform Sidney Rigdon Esq., that he requests his name stricken off from the list of agents for his paper, as it was put there without his knowledge or consent. Elder D. says that unless Mr. Rigdon will return and confess the fact that he has told, he shall ever regard him as a base impostor and hypocrite; for he declared here in the presence of thousands of witnesses that God had revealed certain things to him; namely, that Joseph and Hyrum Smith were martyrs, that they died approved of God, standing now in the ranks of the "revellers" of God, and holding the keys of the kingdom. Now he says, that Joseph Smith is with hypocrites and unbelievers.

Elder Daily says he will follow no such "Jack o' Lantern."

THE POWER OF TRUTH.

Among all the great signs and wonders of the world, from the beginning till now, not one, has left so lasting and incontrovertible a witness as truth. The wisdom of ages; the inventions of thousands, and the majesty of authority, combined with the pomp, circumstance, eclat, and sycophancy of cowering millions, have passed in their time, like the shining meteor, or trackless wind, into the region of forgetfulness, or into space, where there is no clerk to minate their greatness—and all is vacant.

Not so with truth; she possesses a power to persevere and continue—ad infinitum. Nor are her votaries less vigilant to keep the faith, the pledge, the never failing assurance, than herself.

An Abel though dead yet speaketh. The prophets one after another, would die for the sake of the truth; and the evidence of their constancy, like the sun in his inimitable career, came in with the year and went out with it, and no man, no mob, no king, or potentate has been able to blot it out.

So Mormonism, which, emphatically, is eternal truth, cannot be conquered. Drive her peaceable subjects at the point of the bayonet from Missouri; murder her innocent men, women, and children; martyr her prophet and patriarch in cold blood; taint the mind of the populace, and break the hearts of wicked men, with the stench of false brethren, and the torch of apostasy; rob the church of the benefits of legislative enactments; and blow the fury of wild imagination into a blaze of "utter extermination," as tried the Egyptians; the Philistines; the Babylonians, &c., and the Americans, or Missourians, and Illinoisians—and still be true Mormon spite, moves forward as if God was at the helm; and so he is, and he is the power of truth that cannot be conquered.—Who fights against the Lord? He that fights against the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

As to the apostates they have their reward: "Who would be a traitor, kneels? 'Who's to base as a slave? 'Who would fill a coward's grave? 'Let him turn and flee!"

THE ISLANDS OF THE PACIFIC.

As the Latter-day Saints have to preach the everlasting gospel to "all nations as a witness," it becomes necessary, according to revelation, to study the geography, laws, customs, manners, and every thing else connected with the history of the world, and the various countries that now comprise the variegated and scattered family of Adam.

As we have commenced "the labor" in the Islands of the Pacific Ocean, generally called by geographers, Oceania, we will bring out a few extracts, from such facilities as we have by us, for the general benefit of that mission.

"Oceania comprises the islands lying immediately south of Asia, together with the greater part of those in the Pacific Ocean, situated between Asia and America. They form three great divisions: Malaya, Australasia, and Polynesia.

This region extends from north to south about 6200 miles, and from east to west 11,000 miles. It comprises almost a third part of the superficies of the globe, and its land area is about one-eleventh part of the land surface of the earth."

Our mission having been established in Polynesia, we will speak of that part only which relates to the case in hand. Polynesia comprises a vast space or territory of land and water; any 150,000 square miles, with a population of 6 or 700,000. It is said that the climate resembles that of the West Indies, though more mild and regular.

"The most useful products of Polynesia are the bread fruit, yams, taro root, sweet potatoes, plantains, bananas, and coco-nuts, besides various fruits, comprising oranges, limes, citrons, pine-apples, guavas, figs, &c."

The people of Polynesia are in general mild and gentle, yet fierce and warlike when stimulated by some particular object; and their contests have been carried on with such ferocity, that some islands have been entirely depopulated; they were much addicted to various cruel and barbarous customs, to which their native religion gave full sanction, of which the sacrifice of human beings, the eating of human flesh, the murder of infants, were common. These practices, though not so general as formerly, have entirely ceased.

The Ladrone Islands were the first known to Europeans of any in this region, having been discovered by Magellan in 1512. The original inhabitants have been nearly all exterminated by the Spaniards.

The Caroline Islands are but little known, being situated in a tempestuous ocean and exposed to furious hurricanes. These islands, with the Ladrone, both belong to Spain.

The Sandwich Islands are the most important and interesting of this region. Hawaii or Owhyhee is the largest of the group; its area is nearly equal to that of the State of Connecticut.

The people in 1819 destroyed their idols and embraced Christianity.

A number of missionaries from the United States are residing here, and a large proportion of the inhabitants have been taught reading, writing, and arithmetic. Churches have been erected; the press has been for some time in operation, at which school-books, the Scriptures, newspapers, &c. are printed in the language of the country.

Honolulu, in the island of Oahu, is the capital of the Sandwich Islands; it contains about 7000 inhabitants, of whom 300 are Americans and English. Many American and European ships are always in port, and a considerable number of small vessels belong to the natives. Laheina, on the island of Maui, is also a considerable town.

The Mendana Archipelago comprises the Marquesas and Whaling on islands; they are very fertile, and furnish food to the inhabitants almost without labor; the people are among the most finely formed of any known race, and are but little darker than Southern Europeans.

The Society and Georgian Islands are remarkable for being the first in Polynesia, of which the inhabitants embraced Christianity. Otaheite, or Tahiti, the largest of the Georgian islands, is one of the finest in this quarter of the world. Dancing, once the chief amusement of the people, was performed on all occasions of pleasure, worship, state, or ceremony; but is now less practised than formerly."

The Society group, among which are Tahiti and Tobouai, do not contain more than 20,000 inhabitants. They are situated between ten and twenty degrees of south latitude, and between seventy three and eighty three degrees of west longitude from Washington.

The account given by our Elders, of these Islands, are so encouraging that we begin to feel as if the "Isles were waiting for the law," and knowing that Mormonism never fails of accomplishing the object intended, we feel the fire of eternal freedom burning in our hearts to go and proclaim liberty to the captives. More anon.

Traits of Egyptian Civilization.—All the children (and some past the age of what are usually styled little children) were running about entirely devoid of clothing. We observed a great deal of this in Egypt. Men are often seen in the same condition; and the women of the lower orders, having concealed their heads and faces, appear to think they have done all that is necessary. This is a great contrast with the comparatively barbarous Cingalese, who never even bathe without some kind of covering.—Mrs. Griffith's Travels.

☞ The above is about as rapid an account of nudity or shamelessness, as we recollect to have seen. The Southern gentry, however, of the U. States, Texas, Mexico, West Indies, &c., frequently turn out the blacks of both sexes, and all ages, with all the charms that heaven lent them, uncovered to labor—and who has been so scrupulous as Mrs. Griffiths to notice the insult to decency, morality, and virtue?

A more virtuous race, might improve every part of the globe a little, at the present day, without religion, if it were not for tradition and mobocracy.

The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge; so, of course, they will put a stone into one end of the bag to balance the bushel of meal, in the other because their daddies did so. Should they ride on the top of three bushels, they can change and carry one bushel upon their shoulders to favor the horse.

Pleasant Bedfellows in an Egyptian Steamer.—I had observed several small cockroaches peeping their heads from under the cushions during the day, and I consequently trembled as the evening drew near. My fears were not without foundation; for when G. made my bed upon one of the benches we found a swarm of them. He destroyed as many as he could, but I felt them creeping over me the whole night.—Mrs. Griffith's Journey.

☞ We cannot pass the above without reflecting, that travellers have something worse than cockroaches to encounter on board of American Steamers, in the shape, (as the Yankee might term them,) of blood jobbers. Though some of the Southern ladies, out of sheer modesty, call them "bed bugs and musketoes." On some boats they furnish musketoe-bars, through which the venomous animals thrust their long bills, and play Yankee doodle, while the bugs slyly steal what they need from gentlemen and ladies, and even rob pretty girls while asleep, of all they wish, and all because music and meat hath charms.

Cold Snap.—Yesterday was one of the keenest and most blustering days of the present winter. There is some of the Lion's growl in old March, eh!

COMMUNICATIONS.

A reason for an election in Nauvoo after its charter was repealed by the legislature of the State.—The time of our election, as pointed out by law, occurred just about or before the time the report reached us of the repeal of our charter. It was not thought advisable, however, to omit our election upon a mere rumor that our charter was annulled; but to proceed and elect our officers. (which would never have been regarded criminal in any people but the Mormons) and in the event the above rumor should be officially or confidently announced to us as true, we would then abandon our course and yield to the action of the legislature, whatever might be our opinion as to its legal right to repeal an act "with perpetual succession."

The officers thus elected have never attempted to act in any official capacity. Nor has the city been yet officially notified of the repeal. Will editors do us the justice to copy the above?

ON THE LAWS OF NATURE.

Pure or atmospheric air consists of about 78 per cent. of Nitrogen gas, 21 per cent. of Oxygen, and nearly one per cent. of Carbonic acid; this is the state of pure air, when taken into the lungs. When it is expelled from them, it is materially changed. The nitrogen remains nearly the same, but about 8 or 84 of the oxygen has disappeared and been replaced by an equal quantity of Carbonic acid.

Air is unhealthy just in proportion as it differs from pure air. If we breathe nitrogen or hydrogen gas or any other gases not containing oxygen, we shall immediately be suffocated; on the other hand, if we breathe air too highly charged with oxygen, we shall suffer from excessive stimulus. Oxygen being essential to life and respiration, has been called vital air, to distinguish it from other gases, which will not support life.

When a number have assembled together in a tight room, the oxygen is continually changing from vital air into carbonic acid: thus causing an impurity which is certainly detrimental to health. When we inhale air that is impure, we are violating one of nature's laws, for nature designed that we should have pure air to breathe; and inasmuch as the lungs cannot be supplied with pure air, in the same proportion we are violating an organic law or one of the laws of nature and must suffer the penalty accordingly. It makes no difference whether we have assembled together to worship God, or to perform all the wickedness imaginable; the effects are the same, and why? because we violate a certain law, and justice demands the penalty. If the apartment or room where we meet, is unventilated and we remain there breathing air containing an excessive quantity of carbonic acid, though in other respects we may be as pure and holy as the angels in heaven; yet nature will inflict the punishment. We cannot escape the penalty when we transgress her laws. I feel deeply interested in the subject, I am now discussing, for wherever I go, whether in public assemblies or the apartments or private dwellings, I see nature's laws most outrageously violated, by neglecting proper ventilation.

When will the community become enlightened upon this subject? How long will the Elders of Israel who are to revolutionize this world in religion and every thing else, remain ignorant of these things? How long will our public places of resort, our school-houses, and our houses of public worship, be nurseries of disease for the want of that fluid which is free for the meanest beggar that walks the earth?

Many teachers are so ignorant of the importance of having pure fresh air for the lungs, that I would as nearly as soon deliver my children into the hands of a murderer as put them under their care. Many will keep all the doors and windows closed during the fore part of the day, not even permitting them to be left open a moment, and then, as though there was some carnivorous monster without ready to enter the first opportunity and devour the inmates, charge his pupils, with all the gravity of a judge, accompanied with the promise of a severe cow-hiding if disobeyed, to be very careful and keep all the doors and windows closed during intermission, thus depriving the school room of that pure air that is requisite for the benefit of its inmates. The same fault exists in places where people assemble for public worship or for social prayer meeting. The air becomes vitiated, in other words, much of the oxygen disappears and carbonic acid takes its place. The effects of this is often plainly seen by the restlessness of the congregation, many appearing dull and languid, perhaps some fainting while the preacher or speaker has the satisfaction of seeing many of his hearers nodding, as an assent to nearly every sentence he is uttering.

A New Island.—Capt. B. E. Simmons, formerly of the brigantine Faith, informs the editors of the New York Courier and Enquirer, that on the 31st of October last he discovered an island, not hitherto laid down on any chart. Capt. S. was on his way from Sidney to Valparaiso when he made the discovery. He went completely round it, and found it to be about six miles in circumference. At a short distance from it he found no soundings in sixty fathoms water. A large lagoon was in the middle of the island which seemed to be rich and fertile. On reaching Valparaiso, where he remained for some months, he waited upon the commander of the British squadron and informed him of the discovery. He examined the most recent English charts, but no indication of such an island was to be found. It is situated in the track from Otahite to Valparaiso, in latitude 21 degrees 10 minutes, and west longitude 138 degrees 54 minutes. He named it the Isle of Faith, from his vessel.

The Great Snow Storm of 1717.—The snow storm they have recently had at the North, although a very respectable affair for one of modern getting up, does not appear to be any great things when compared with that of 1717—in fact was a mere flurry alongside of it. One of the papers says:—

"The great storm of 1717 shut people up at home, as snugly and effectually as if they had been locked in. Those who were blockaded had to resort to their furniture and the like for fuel. In some places the snow was thirty feet deep. People made their exit frequently from second-story windows, and the trees cut down for fuel left long stumps behind. One Hannah Dingley, a poor woman who lived not far from New Haven, was buried six or eight days, but was at last discovered by her neighbors, by the smoke of her fire coming through the snow. Hannah died at a la Graham, on potatoes and dried corn, and warmed up with chairs and tables. A flock of one hundred sheep were dug out of a snow-drift on Fisher's Island, where they had been buried to the depth of sixteen feet.

The Poor of England.—Punch—the London Punch—the repository of all the floating wit in the British capital, the unmerciful satirist of royalty, Punch, by the last arrival, relates a story of a poor man that died recently at one of the hospitals he was found, in a frozen state, in an outhouse. The poor man was able heartily, strong and willing when he chanced that outhouse, but he had no work, no money, no friends, and not knowing what to do he entered the outhouse to find shelter from the snow which was falling fast. It was on Thursday that he sought this shelter, and he remained in the piercing cold until Monday morning without food. Misery did its work; the poor creature died. On the inquest his wife testified that he was kind, affectionate, generous and provident when in work, and that his family was always well cared for when he had the means of administering to their wants. But he had been without employment and they could get nothing to eat. And this is the shame of England. Thousands of such cases are weekly brought before the aristocracy of that country, and yet there is no relief granted. We say this oppression of the poor, this grinding of human beings into worse than slaves—we say it is England's shame. Where can what is her glory? A national debt; the enslaved inhabitants of India; the titles of her nobility, and a queen and her offspring.

Poverty is talked of here; it is known and felt there! The white cliffs of Albion are reddened, in our eyes, with the blood of starved millions. England is the only country in which the tomb of the able bodied pauper is embellished with the gold and jewels of the heartless noble.

On Tuesday last we were presented with a few ripe strawberries, which were gathered from the garden of Mrs. George Stone, of Tuskegee. They were not the production of a hot-house, but grew in the open air in the garden. We have never before heard of the ripening of fruit at so early a period in this latitude—the first strawberries last year having been sent us on the 29th of March, and we believe they were as early as any of that season. —[Macon (Ga.) Republican, Feb. 20.]

In Bavaria the press is subject to the strictest censorship. Every morning a police officer attends at the Post-office of Munich, to receive all the newspapers which arrive there, to carry them to the office of the Censor, where they are opened and read. If they contain nothing objectionable they are forwarded to their address; but if they treat of one of the thousand subjects which are forbidden to be discussed in Bavaria, the subscriber loses his journal.

Earthquake near Home.—The New York Commercial says:—“We have just been informed, on reliable authority, that on Friday evening between 7 and 8 o'clock, Staten Island was visited by a slight shock of earthquake. Our informant says that he was reading a newspaper when he was startled by a peculiar rumbling noise swelling into a sound resembling the clattering of a regiment of cavalry over rocky ground, the chair on which he sat sensibly oscillating beneath him. This was at the base of the hill near the beach. But the same sound was heard and the same sensation felt by others at the summit of the hill.”

Punch's Almanac contains some of the brightest wit concocted since the days of Joe Miller. Among its items it records “Strange superstition of the nineteenth century.” This strange superstition is confessed by a correspondent, who writes that walking from one large thoroughfare to another a policeman appeared to him!

A FOG IN LONDON. There was a remarkable fog in London on the night of November 21, of which the London Times gives the following account:—

During the early part of yesterday, the fog which overspread the metropolis and its neighborhood was very dense—at least a Londoner would not so consider it; but as the evening advanced the decrease of light became apparently accelerated by a very great increase in the thickness of the atmosphere; and before five o'clock, the whole of the metropolis was over-spread by that which without exaggeration may be designated as a thick darkness. The streets presented in every quarter appearances of the utmost confusion and alarm. Persons on foot literally groped their way through the mass of smoke and vapor which filled every street, whilst carriages of all descriptions, wagons, omnibuses and cabs, made their way at a foot's pace, and under circumstances alike dangerous to the parties who guided them, and to those with whom they were every moment coming in contact. In vain were vehicles provided with lamps and preceded by torches; in vain was the greatest care and caution observed by those who led or drove; accidents became of momentary occurrence, and amidst the shouting of men the occasional screams of the few women or children who ventured abroad, the glare of the torches, and the active dexterity of thieves, the police found abundant employment; while every one who had a home and no very pressing business to keep him out of doors, hurried into shelter with as much expedition as the prevailing darkness and confusion would permit.

The following account of the weather and of the appearances which the fog presented has been furnished to us from the neighborhood of Kensington and that part of the suburbs:— In the suburbs of the town a light fog began to be perceptible about 8 o'clock, which continued to increase in density during the day, and in the forenoon and evening, extending itself over every part of the town, assuming in the metropolis that opaque color for which a London November fog is so noted. In the evening the thoroughfares the drivers of vehicles were completely brought to a stand still, unless they had previously supplied themselves with a link. In most of the principal streets were at the corners clusters of toys with lighted links, offering their services to conduct individuals or vehicles at a charge of 6d per mile, while others found it a profitable speculation to purchase a quantity of links at an oil shop, and sell them at an increased price in parts of the town where such a desideratum was not to be obtained. In the outskirts of the town the fog was extremely dense, and particularly on the great western road, on which the lighting is still most imperfect, and traveling along it is at all times a more serious and dangerous matter, but more especially so on a night. Very few of the omnibuses along that line of road were sent out by the proprietors, and several of those which were, although they had lighted lamps and links, got on the heaps of gravel on the Park side of the road, and were nearly upset, to the great alarm of the passengers. Numerous collisions during the evening in all parts of the town, but we have not heard of any accidents of a serious character having occurred up to ten o'clock, at which hour the fog was still very dense.

From another source we have the following account:—

Yesterday afternoon the metropolis was enveloped in one of those dense and dangerous fogs so peculiar to this particular season of this year, and for which our climate is proverbial. Such was the thickness of the atmosphere, that the navigation of the river was entirely suspended, not one of the numerous steamboats venturing to leave their respective moorings. Indeed, a sort of Egyptian darkness seemed to overshadow the city and west end, and the tradesmen found it requisite to light up their respective establishments at a very early period in the afternoon. Last night the streets presented a scene of confusion that has not been witnessed for a number of years past. The thickness of the fog was indescribable; and it was not without extreme danger that the passengers could proceed through the various thoroughfares of the metropolis; the greatest gloom and obscurity prevailed, and the lamps on the opposite side of the street could scarcely be distinguished. It was with the greatest difficulty that the various omnibuses, cabs and coaches could proceed through the streets. The confusion which prevailed throughout the different streets of the metropolis has scarcely ever been equalled. It required the greatest exertions of the police, to whom great praise is due for their activity to prevent passengers from placing themselves in imminent peril. Several accidents occurred, but the reporter was informed at the various hospitals, none were likely to terminate fatally. It was stated that the light fingered gentry had busily and successfully employed themselves in their avocations during the confusion which the fog created.

Important from St. Domingo.—Advices from St. Domingo to the 6th are received.

It is reported that Howard considers the Constitution of 1843 suspended, in consequence of the insurrection of the Eastern part of the Island, and instead of a Legislature establishes a Council of State, the members of which are to be appointed and re-elected at his call. It was currently reported that the President intended to be crowned King, taking Christophe for his model, under whom he was formerly an officer.

The insolence of a British officer at the Guano Island of Ichoabo, in ordering off certain vessels waiting for cargoes, was promptly met by the Captain of the ship Shakespeare of New York, who refused to retire unless the British Captain would give him a written order to that effect, which was refused. The Captain of the Shakespeare therefore remained, and would load for New York.

ANOTHER DUEL.—We learn from the Cincinnati Enquirer that a duel came off at 7 o'clock Monday last across the river opposite that city. The parties were Lieut. Durand, of the navy, and Dr. Mosby, of Virginia; the weapons shot guns, distance, thirty paces. Mr. Bouche, of New Orleans, and Capt. Howard, of Cincinnati. Two shots were fired without any damage being done to either of the principals. The conditions were that after the second fire the seconds should determine whether there should be another. They decided that there should not, and so the matter ended. A quarrel grew out of an insult offered to Mr. Durand, who was the challenging party.

CAUTION TO ANTI-RENTERS.—It is hoped this case will be a warning to the illegal combinations and acts of persons who are in open opposition to the laws of the country. The plaintiff, Chancey Keder, brought a suit against Artemas Doughton, Daniel C. Sherman, Elias St. John, and John Deitz, as defendants. In 1841, the plaintiff had been deputed by the Sheriff of Albany to serve writs, and also had declarations to serve in favor of Van Rensselaer, against tenants on the manor for non-payment of rent. He stopped at a house in Bern, a mob broke into the house about 12 o'clock at night, roused him from his bed, demanded his papers with threats, and searched his person and clothes, and not obtaining their object of search they went off, and returned next morning with a greater force and on further search discovered his papers; then took him into the woods, some disguised as Indians thrust him down, abused him outrageously, tarred and feathered him, and threatened his life if he should have the temerity to engage in such business again. These persons who appeared as “Indians” could not be identified, but the defendants were recognized as being amongst the crowd, and did not attempt to prevent the outrage, but taunted and ridiculed the plaintiff after it was done, and expressed their satisfaction. There was, from the nature of the case, a good deal of difficulty in empanelling a jury—one was at last obtained, consisting of about one half from the country towns and the residue from the city. The cause was summed up and argued with talent and ability, by George W. Peckham, Esq., for the defendants, and by Michael Sandford, Esq., for the plaintiff. The jury returned a verdict of ten thousand dollars, damages and costs. —Albany Atlas.

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAW OF WILD CHERRY.—This celebrated remedy is a compound balsamic preparation of the Wild Cherry Bark and Moss of Iceland, combined by a new chemical process with the Extract of Pine. So salutary have been its effects in all cases when administered for COUGHS, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, or any disease of the lungs, that many of the most distinguished physicians have approved and recommended it, and openly acknowledged it the most valuable medicine ever discovered. It is truly a valuable medicine and is effecting an immense amount of good in the relief of suffering humanity.

DIED.—In this city, on the 15th ult., Asa Works, sen., aged 83 years, after a lingering sickness of about six months.

Asa Works was a noted revolutionary soldier; he enlisted at the age of eleven years, under General George Washington—was in two battles, the battle of Bennington, Vermont, and the battle of Monmouth, New Jersey, the latter of which he received a wound in his left arm, between the shoulder and elbow—underwent a great deal of hardship, privation, and hunger, in his younger days, in helping to gain the independence of our once boasted America—but alas! how changed are things for a few years past. In the year 1838, he emigrated to the sovereign state of Missouri, and settled at Far West, in Caldwell county, at which place he was called to witness the violation of that liberty he once fought to gain—he went through, with the people called Lat'o D'y Saints, or Mormons, all the persecutions, privations, and hardship inflicted upon them in 1838 and 1839,—and since that time, until his death, has lived as an exile, in the state of Illinois.

GLEANNINGS.

Sleeping Partners.—A bachelor at Green Bay, advertising in the Republican that sixteen or twenty New York or New England damsels of a suitable age, could enter into agreeable co-partnership, by migrating to that part of Wisconsin—maids being scarce and bachelors plenty. Eastern papers requested to copy.

The oldest meeting house, says the Salem Observer now standing in New England, and probably in the United States, is the Rev. Mr. Richmond's in Hingham, being erected in 1680—161 years ago.

Set 'em up.—Four hundred ladies of Concord, N. H., have petitioned the legislature to abolish all the ten-pin alleys in that town. They take their husbands from them, and carry off their beaux when they ought to be courting.

If on any occasion your wife should exclaim to you 'Now tumble over the cradle and break your neck, do!' don't you do it.

American Saws are sold in Sheffield, England, under the noses of the manufacturers of that country. The Sheffield Mercury, speaking of the fact, says:

'But there have been not a few observers shrewd and interested enough to notice particularly, that saws of all sorts, from the largest circular to the smallest web, are especially mentioned among the leading articles of manufacture, thus corroborating the correctness of the statements we have often incidentally made as to the great and successful efforts that are made to rival us in this important class of articles by the manufacturers in the United States.'

The state of New York has appropriated the money, which she has at last concluded to accept from the General Government as her portion of the surplus land fund, to the support of common schools.

Increase of Business.—The receipts on the Western (Mass.) railroad, during the week ending on the 15th inst., were $10,802—an increase over the receipt during the corresponding period last year of $2,670.

Melancholy.—We see it stated in the Columbia (S. C.) that the Rev. Ferdinand Jacobs, his wife and child and nurse, all died on the night of the 21st ult. of pneumonia, at Yorkville in that State. Mr. Jacobs was pastor of the Presbyterian church and principal of the academy of that village.

The Normandie.—The ship Normandie, which sailed from New York on the 10th December, for Hull, England, the day previous to the severe gale, had not arrived at her destination when the Hibernia left Liverpool on the 4th inst. It will be recollected that fears were entertained for her safety soon after she sailed from New York, in consequence of pieces of wreck and bales of cotton with marks such as were known to be on bales shipped on board of her, having been picked up at sea. The conclusion is that she was lost, and that all her crew perished.

Pardon.—The New Albany Gazette says Gov. Whitcomb has pardoned Mr. Weinzoepflein, the Catholic priest, recently sent to the Indiana penitentiary for the commission of a rape, and that he immediately repaired to Evansville.

The New Jersey State Prison.—A singular state of affairs prevails at the New Jersey State Prison. The late Keeper, Mr. Yard, refuses to give up possession to Mr. Gaddis, the new incumbent until (if our impression is correct) his accounts are straightened up. Mr. Gaddis, members of the legislature, and others have tried to get in without avail. The intrepid Yard has armed up the Deputies, barricaded the premises, and defies the posse.

Counterfeiting.—Five dollar counterfeit notes on the bank of Cumberland, Portland, Maine, are in circulation in New Hampshire.

NEWS FROM SANTA FE.

The Independence Exposition, of the 1st, notices the arrival there of several gentlemen from Santa Fe, after a safe but arduous journey across the plains, via Bent's fort. They left New Mexico early in January. The news they bring is interesting to the mercantile community. Up to the date of their departure, every thing was quiet in New Mexico, the civil and military commandant of that province, General Mariano Martinez, holding aloof from any participation in the revolution, no doubt waiting to declare for whichever party (Santa Anna or the Congress) might obtain the upper hand.

Don Manuel Armijo was superseded in his governorship in the winter of 1843-4, by General Martinez, a protégé of Santa Anna. Armijo, the former commandant of the Province, remains quietly in his retirement at Albuquerque.

The only internal disturbance feared in New Mexico, was the Yute Indians, in revenge for the massacre of their head men at Santa Fe in August last. The whole province was kept in constant alarm by their depredations, and they threatened an attack on Santa Fe itself. They have taken the fort of Antoine Robidoux, on the Rio Grande, and killed the traders and hands found in it; it is said, that Antoine Robidoux escaped to his fort on the Compadre.

Mr. Albert Speyre, who took out twenty-five wagons from this place in September last suffered from severe weather in November, between the Arkansas and the Cimarron, during the continuance of which, he lost one hundred and fifty of his mules. He sent on to Santa Fe and obtained a fresh lot of animals, and finally arrived in Santa Fe the latter end of December. We are told that Mr. Speyre bought up the goods of several of the American traders who went out in August last to Santa Fe, and continued his journey to Chihuahua.

Messrs. Connelly, Glasgow and Alguia, lost upwards of one hundred and forty head of stock in the storm before mentioned, and were also under the necessity of sending on for animals to Santa Fe. They proceeded on their journey to Chihuahua in company with Speyre.

Col. Owens also left Santa Fe with the above named gentlemen, after having, it is said, sold his remaining goods to Speyre.

There have been disturbances in the Paso del Norte and Chihuahua, but nothing definite is known with regard to the result.

It is said there will be a number of Spanish merchants here this summer, for the purpose of buying goods.

Another company of Americans may be looked for in two or three weeks, when we shall no doubt have further intelligence of interest.

Santa Fe was extremely gay. The foreigners, as usual, were well treated by the Mexicans.

Don Manuel Sienra, the husband of the famous Senora Tullis, is dead.

There was much sickness among the companies that went out last summer. Two deaths occurred among the Americans in Santa Fe. James Peely's residence not known, who went out with Weber, and George Keeler, of Jackson county, who went out with Dr. Connelly. All the Americans in Santa Fe were well.

We have nothing of interest from Fort William. Charles Bent was at Santa Fe, S. St. Vrain was at the fort. They had had a very open winter, and an active trade with the Indians. A trapping and trading company had gone out on the Rio Gila, a tract of country not much frequented by our trappers.

THE WAY THE LADIES SUCCEED.

Mr. Gough, the eloquent temperance lecturer, recently related the following laughable story of the way the ladies of a certain town routed a rum-seller.

There was but one in town, and if it had been put to vote there would have been a majority of six to one for the removal of the groggery. The male portion had tried a little moral suasion, that is, they had said nothing to him on the subject, but as he was getting very rich, bowed lower to him than to others that were not so well off, and they had tried some legal suasion, in the shape of a couple of fines of $20 each, which he paid very willingly for the benefits he derived from his traffic. At last the women took the matter in hand, and assembled to the number of about one hundred and fifty. They divided themselves into twelve committees of twelve each. The first day a committee visited him in a body, and each of the twelve gave him, in turn, a temperance lecture. He was rather taken aback at this, but thinking he could stand it as long as they could, he was apparently unconverted. The second day he was visited by a similar committee, who gave him twelve more lectures. He stood this too, wondering what was to come next. The next day a third committee made its appearance and were commencing their arguments, when he interrupted them by asking how many there were to come yet. In reply he was told that twelve committees had been formed, of twelve women in each; and when he had been visited by the twelfth committee in turn the first committee would make a second visit, and so on in regular succession. 'Well,' said the poor rum-seller, 'you needn't go any further; I'll give up.' And give up he did; and from that day the rum traffic was put an end to in that town.

Mr. Gough said he had been telling this story at a temperance meeting, one evening, when a man said to him at the close, 'what a dreadful predicament that poor rum-seller must have been in, with one hundred and fifty women lecturing him. I know something about women's tongues, for I've been married five years.'

The Schoolmaster.—There is no office higher than that of a teacher of youth, for there is nothing on earth so precious as the mind, soul and character of a child. No office should be regarded with greater respect.

The first nine in the community should be encouraged to assume it. Parents should do all but impoverish themselves to induce such to become the guardians and guides of their children. To this good all their show and luxury should be sacrificed. Here they should be lavish, whilst they straighten themselves in everything else. They should wear the cheapest clothes, live on the plainest food, if they can in no other way secure the best instruction. They should have no anxiety to accumulate property for their children, provided they can place them under influences which will awaken their faculties, inspire them with pure and high principles, and fit them to bear a manly, useful and honorable part in the world.

Indian Fight.—The Van Buren (Ark.) Intelligence of the 22d ult., gives some particulars of a fight between a party of the Pawnee Maha Indians and a portion of the Creeks located on Little river. The battle took place about ten days previous. It was commenced by the Pawnees, but they were repulsed, suffering the loss of six of their warriors. None of the Creeks were killed.

The Pawnees returned to their homes upon the prairies for reinforcement, with which they are said to have sworn revenge. The Creeks were dancing around the scalp, greatly excited. Those who were in exposed quarters, were returning to the denser settlements. The battle took place in the country apportioned to the Seminoles, by a late treaty, to which they are now removing. If they should be attacked, the Pawnees will find them still more fatal customers.

Dissensions among the Quakers.—A serious division has arisen in the society of Friends in Rhode Island. The cause of dissension goes back to the visit of Joseph John Gurney, whose doctrines are objected to by a portion of the society, who are styled Wilburites, from John Wilburn, a preacher in the southern part of the state. Each party claims to be the genuine followers of George Fox.

Fell in.—The floor of the Catholic Church at Woonsocket, R. I., fell in, on Sunday afternoon last, and introduced the whole congregation to the cellar, but without doing any body harm.

Worthy of Attention.—Advice to persons about to marry—don't.

CONSUMPTION OF THE LUNGS.
Coughs and Colds, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pains or Soreness of the Chest, Difficulty of Breathing, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Croup, &c.

AMONG all the famous medicines for Consumption, none seems to be meeting with greater success, or gaining a higher reputation than that most wonderful article, Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry! That it stands at the head of all other remedies is now universally conceded. It has cured thousands upon thousands—of all classes—in cases of the most dangerously Consumptive character—and physicians of the greatest eminence throughout our whole country unhesitatingly recommend it as the most powerful curative of Pulmonary diseases, in the whole range of Pharmacy. Thousands of consumptive patients have already tested its exalted virtues, and confessed its surpassing, excellent and amazing power. The remarkable success of this Balsam is no doubt owing in a great measure to the peculiarly agreeable and powerful nature of its ingredients. It is a fine Hortal Medicine, composed chiefly of Wild Cherry Bark and the genuine Iceland Moss—the latter imported expressly for this purpose—the rare medicinal virtues of which are also combined, by a new chemical process with the Extract of Tar—thus rendering the whole Compound the most certain and efficacious remedy ever discovered.

A CASE OF ASTHMA.

The following is from a distinguished Lawyer of the city of New York, who had been afflicted with the Asthma for upwards of 'Twenty Years,' and who, after reading such cases can doubt the efficacy of this medicine!

New York, January 25, 1843.
I have been afflicted with asthmatic asthma for 24 years—sometimes so severely as to be confined to my room for weeks; and although attended by various medical advisers, of the highest reputation and skill in the country, the relief was but partial and temporary—twice the disease proved nearly fatal to my life.

Some few weeks ago I commenced taking Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, which gave me instant relief, and a single bottle produced in a few days what I believe to be a radical and perfect cure.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS

OF JAMES K. POLK;

Delivered the fourth of March, 1845.

FELLOW-CITIZENS:—

Without solicitation on my part,

I have been chosen by the free and voluntary suffrages of my countrymen to the most honorable and most impossible office on earth. I am deeply impressed with gratitude for the confidence reposed in me. Honored with this distinguished consideration at an earlier period of life than any of my predecessors, I cannot disguise the dilidence with which I am about to enter on the discharge of my official duties.

If the more aged and experienced men who have filled the office of President of the United States, even in the infancy of the Republic, distrusted their ability to discharge the duties of that exalted station, what ought not to be the apprehensions of one so much younger and less endowed, now that our domain extends from ocean to occean, that our people have so greatly increased in numbers, and at a time when so great diversity of opinion prevals in regard to the principles and policy which should characterize the administration of our government?—

Well may the boldest fear and the wisest tremble, when incurring responsibilities on which may depend our country's peace and prosperity, and in some degree, the hopes and happiness of the whole human family.

In assuming responsibilities so vast,

I fervently invoke the aid of that Almighty Ruler of the Universe, in whose hands are the destinies of nations and of men, to guide this Heaven-favored land against the mischiefs which, without his guidance, might arise from an unwise public policy. With a firm reliance upon the wisdom of Omnipotence to sustain and direct me in the path of duty which I am appointed to pursue, I stand in the presence of this assembled multitude of my countrymen, to take upon myself the solemn obligation to the best of my ability to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.

A concise enumeration of the principles which will guide me in the administrative policy of the government is not only in accordance with the examples set me by my predecessors, but is eminently befitting the occasion.

The constitution itself, plainly written as it is, the safeguard of our fed-erative compact, the offspring of concession and compromise, binding together in the bonds of peace and union this great and increasing family of free and independent States, will be the chart

by which I shall be directed.

It will be my first care to administer the government in the true spirit of that instrument, and to assume no powers not expressly granted, or clearly implied in its terms. The government of the United States is one of delegated and limited powers; and it is by a strict adherence to the clearly granted powers, and by abstaining from the exercise of doubtful or unauthorized implied powers, that we have the only sure guaranty against the recurrence of those unfortunate collisions between the Federal and State authorities, which have occasionally so much disturbed the harmony of our system, and even threatened the perpetuity of our glorious Union.

"To the States respectively, or to the people," have been reserved the powers not delegated to the U.S. by the constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States." Each State is a complete sovereignty within the sphere of its reserved powers. The government of the Union, acting within the sphere of its delegated authority, is also a complete sovereignty. While the general government should abstain from the exercise of authority not clearly delegated to it, the States should be equally careful that, in the maintenance of their rights, they do not overstep the limits of powers reserved to them. One of the most distinguished of my predecessors attached deserved importance to "the support of the State governments in all their rights as the most competent administration for our domestic concerns, and the surest bulwark against anti-republican tendencies; and to the preservation of the general government in its whole constitutional vigor, as the sheet-anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad."

To the government of the United States, has been intrusted the exclusive management of our foreign affairs.

Beyond that, it wields a few general enumerated powers. It does not force reform on the States. It leaves individuals, over whom it casts its protecting influence, entirely free to improve their own condition by the legitimate exercise of all their mental and physical powers. It is a common protector of each and all the States; of every man who lives upon our soil, whether of native or foreign birth; of every religious sect, in their worship of the Almighty, according to the dictates of their own conscience; of every shade of opinion, and the most free inquiry;

of every art, trade, and occupation,

consistent with the laws of the States.

And we rejoice in the general happiness, prosperity, and advancement of our country, which have been the offspring of freedom, and not of power.

This most admirable and wisest system of well regulated self-government among men, ever devised by human minds, has been tested by its successful operation for more than half a century; and, if preserved from the usurpations of the federal government on the one hand, and the exercise by the States of powers not reserved to them on the other, will, I fervently hope and believe, endure for ages to come and dispense the blessings of civil and religious liberty to distant generations.

To effect objects so dear to every patriot, I shall devote myself with anxious solicitude. It will be my desire to guard against that mist, fruitful source of danger to the harmonious action of our system; which consists in substituting the mere indiscrimination of the executive, or of majorities in the legislative department of the government, for powers which have been withheld from the federal government by the constitution. By the theory of our government, majorities rule; but this right is not an arbitrary or unlimited one. It is a right to be exercised in subordination to the constitution, and in conformity to it.

The great object of the constitution was to restrain majorities from oppres-sing minorities, or encroaching upon their just rights. Minorities have a right to appeal to the constitution, as a shield against such oppression.

That the blessings of liberty which our constitution secures, may be enjoyed alike by minorities and majorities, the executive has been wisely invested with a qualified veto upon the acts of the legislature. It is a negative power and is conservative in its character. It arrests for the time any impetuous, or unconstitutional legislation; invites reconsideration and transfers questions at issue between the legislative and executive departments to the tribunal of the people. Like all other powers, it is subject to be abused. When judiciously and properly exercised, the constitution itself may be saved from infraction, and the rights of all preserved and protected.

The inestimable value of our federal

Union is felt and acknowledged by all. By this system of united and confederated States, our people are permitted collectively and individually to seek their own happiness in their own way; and the consequences have been most auspicious. Since the Union was formed, the number of states has increased from thirteen to twenty-eight; two of these have taken their position as members of the confederacy within the last week. Our population has increased from three million to twenty millions. New communities and states are seeking protection under itsegis, and multitudes from the old world are flocking to our shores to participate in its blessings. Beneath its benign sway, peace and prosperity prevail. Freed from the burdens and miseries of war, our trade and intercourse have extended throughout the world. Mind no longer tasked in devising means to accomplish or resist schemes of ambition, usurpation, or conquest, is devoting itself to man's true interests, in developing his faculties and powers, and the capacity of nature to minister to his enjoyments.

Genius is free to announce its inventions and discoveries; and the hand is free to accomplish whatever the head conceives, not incompatible with the rights of a fellow-being. All distinctions of birth or rank have been abolished. All citizens, whether native or adopted, are placed upon terms of precise equality; and are entitled to equal rights and equal protection.

No union exists between church and state; a perfect freedom of opinion is guaranteed to all sects and creeds.

These are some of the blessings secured to our happy land by our federal Union. To perpetuate them, it is our sacred duty to preserve it. Who shall assign limits to the achievements of free minds and free hands, under the protection of this glorious Union?

No treason to mankind, since the organization of society, would be equal in atrocity to that of him who would lift his hand to destroy it. He would overthrow the noblest structure of human wisdom, which protects himself and his fellow man. He would stop the progress of free government, and involve his country either in anarchy or despotism. He would extinguish the fire of liberty, which warms and animates the hearts of happy millions, and invites all the nations of the earth to imitate our example. If he say that error and wrong are committed in the administration of the find a ready market and remunerating prices in foreign countries.

In taking care that the laws be faithfully executed, a strict performance of duty will be exacted from all public officers. From those officers, especially, who are charged with the collection and disbursement of the public revenue, will prompt and rigid accountability be required. Any culpable failure or delay on their part to account for the money intrusted to them, at the time in the manner required by law, will in every instance, terminate the official connection of such defaulting officer with the government.

Confidently relying upon the aid and assistance of the co-ordinate departments of the government in conducting our public affairs, I enter upon the discharge of the high duties which have been assigned me by the people, again humbly supplicating that Divine Being, who has watched over and protected our beloved country from its infancy to the present hour, to continue his gracious benedictions upon us, that we may continue to be a prosperous and happy people.

Although, in our country, the chief magistracy must almost of necessity be chosen by a party, and stand pledged to its principles and measures, yet, in his official action, he should not be the President of a party only, but of the whole people of the United States. While he executes the laws with an impartial hand, shrinks from no proper responsibility, and faithfully carries out in the executive department of the government, the principles and policy of those who have chosen him, he should not be unmindful that our fellow citizens who have differed with him in opinion, are entitled to the full and free exercise of their opinions and judgments, and that the rights of all are entitled to respect and regard.

FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE OF THE ATLAS.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Honolulu, Sept. 14th, 1841.

Messrs. Editors: The good people of our town were astonished, on the 10th August last, by the reappearance of Lord George Paulet, in H. B. M's. frigate, Carysfort. This time, however, he came in peaceful guise, and, almost as soon as he anchored, saluted the Hawaiian flag with 21 guns, which were promptly returned. The old Admiral must have sent him here to do penance for his sins, and he did it badly enough—for his reception was as distant and cold as could be desired by his warmest enemies. Mr. Hooper, however, our consul, dined with him, though he had, on a former occasion, been turned out of the ship. The Carysfort had been at Tahiti, and with the permission of the French, took the Queen Pomare to Raiatea, with eighteen of her women. On the way, these women were ravished by the officers of the ship, and a scene of prostitution, unrivalled by the vilest stewards of London, was kept up for the remainder of the voyage. The Queen, being near her accouchement, was spared. The particulars of this disgraceful affair were given me by persons who witnessed the whole. Lord George has left behind him, at these islands, a name for such deeds, which will not soon be forgotten—indeed, one of his last public acts was to annul the law repressing prostitution; a fellow feeling, &c. Upon his arrival at Raiatea, the chiefs of this island, Bolebola and Huahine, sent him a letter, requesting him to take possession in the name of Great Britain, and to protect them against the French. But Lord George had already sufficient experience, in conquering South Sea islands, and he prudently declined. While here, he was waited upon by the remnants of his faction, who had almost dwindled into nothingness, and were very glad to have a live lord among them once more. He called upon Governor Kekuanoua, and sent him his card. The old Governor, who had experienced in exile the result from him when he was in power, looked at the card for a moment, and then cast it indignantly from him. As for his Majesty, and the members of the Government, and the respectable portion of society, they, rightly appreciating his private as well as his public character, would have nothing to do with him, which greatly vexed my lord. However, he behaved, personally, tolerably well—kept his men on board—and, on occasion of the Queen's birthday, toasted the sovereign in whose waters he lay. Shortly before leaving, he created a stir, one midnight, by blowing away whole broadsides, divisions and guns, in great rapidity, with all the heat and ardor of a real fight. The whole town were startled from their slumbers, and rushed to the house-tops, to see what was to pay; and a gay display they made of it, in their night robes, as every flash lighted up the scene. The ship being close to the houses, the annoyance was very great, particularly to his Majesty, who slept, as it were, right under the guns. The ladies and sick were much alarmed, and the whole town excited. Indeed, many feared it was a bona fide attack upon the fort—but it soon died away, and Lord George had the additional satisfaction, for the sake of a wild freak, of annoying and frightening 10,000 summing people. Perhaps he wanted to show them with what gun he would have lifted upon the town, had he had a chance, during his first glorious achievement.

Some of his officers, to be even with him, wrenched a knocker from the door of Rev. Mr. Armstrong's house, and took it to the sign of the seamen's chapel, pulled it to the trees and injured the grounds of Dr. Cooke, a countryman of theirs, who had recently taken the oath of allegiance to his Majesty, and performed their similar misdeeds. We were all glad to see the ship leave the harbor, and by this time you must have heard enough of her, yourselves; but Lord George has become a historic name, and such incidents go far to show his real character. He sailed, on the 4th of this month, for Byron's bay, where he intended giving his men the liberty of the shore, and we may expect to hear of queer scenes.—The U. S. frigate Savannah, bearing the broad pennant of Commodore Armstrong, arrived at Hilo, August 30. We are expecting her here, daily. She is said to be a fine vessel. Yours, OAHU.

Extraordinary Discovery of an Ancient Printing Press in India.—When Warren Hastings was Governor General of India, he observed that in the district of Benares, a little below the surface of the earth, was to be found a stratum of a kind of fibrous wooden substance, of various thicknesses in horizontal layers. Major Roebuck, informed of this, went out to a spot where an excavation had been made, displaying this singular phenomenon. In digging somewhat deeper for further research, they laid open a vault, which on examination proved to be of some size, and to their astonishment, they found a kind of printing press, set up in the vault, and on it movable types, placed as if ready for printing. Every enquiry was set on foot to ascertain the probable period at which such an instrument could have been placed there, for it was evidently not of modern origin, and from all the Major could collect, it appeared probable that the place had remained in the state in which it was found for at least 1,000 years. We believe, the worthy Major on his return to England presented one of the learned associations with a memoir containing many curious speculations on the subject. Paper we know to have been manufactured in the east, many centuries before we had any knowledge of it; and we have many reasons to think that the Chinese have been acquainted with the mode of printing their new employ, many centuries before Faust invented it in Europe. But it certainly does credit to the inventive genius of the Romans, to know that they approached so near as to engrave in a style not to be equalled in the present age, or gems and stones, and of course the taking of impressions from them, that they should still have remained ignorant of the art which has bestowed so many blessings on mankind.

From the Marshall (Michigan) Erpounder.

THE BLACK TONGUE.

Messrs. Editors:—I understand that the "Black Tongue" has commenced its ravages in the northern part of this state. The disease has taken off thousands in the eastern states, within two or three years past, and it behoves us to use every precaution against its spread here.

Where this pestilence has prevailed, the potatoes have generally been diseased. It may be that many persons have been poisoned by eating potatoes improperly cooked. To prevent such an evil, the following method should be adopted in cooking the potatoes.

The skin should be taken off entirely, before the potato is put into the kettle for boiling. When the potatoes are partly cooked, the water should be poured off, and fresh boiling water poured on them, and the boiling continued until they are soft enough to be penetrated with a fork. A little salt may be thrown into the kettle when the water is changed. When the potatoes are cooked, pour off the water and put the kettle over the fire until the water is evaporated from the potatoes, and the danger of being poisoned will cease.

Potatoes exposed to the air extract oxygen from it, which combines with the juice lying next to the outer skin; and when the combination takes place, a most inveterate poison is produced. By taking off the skin and changing the water, as above suggested, the poison will soon be got rid of. The salt to be added will tend to neutralize the poison.

J. LAMB.

Most Extraordinary Instance of Fanaticism.—One of the most singular and extraordinary instances of fanaticism on record, recently occurred in Ship street. A man named Mulloy, whose family and connections are exceedingly respectable, devoted for some years the greater part of his time to reading the scriptures, and interpreting their meaning, as his own fancy dictated, until he would himself get up to a pitch of enthusiasm which ended in a most terrible manner. He was particularly struck with the 29th and 30th verses of the 5th chapter of St. Matthew, and whether in the house or in the street, at his employment or otherwise, repeated over and over again, "And if thy right eye offend thee, pull it out, and cast it from thee, for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell." In the evening he shut himself up in a room, and actually fulfilled the counsel given in these passages to the very letter, by plucking out his right eye with a knife, and casting it from him, and afterwards cutting off his right hand!! Shortly after the commission of the act, he was found extended on the floor, from the loss of blood in the most dreadful agony; but to the many inquiries made as to what could induce him to inflict such frightful injuries upon himself, he replied, that he only obeyed the command given in the Bible—the word of God—and had earned so doing an everlasting crown of glory. He also quoted various texts of Scripture to show that he was bound to fulfil the command of God, even as Abraham did when he brought forth his son Isaac to offer up as a sacrifice. The unfortunate man was immediately removed to the Meath Hospital, in a very precarious state.—(Dublin (Ireland) Freeman's Journal.)

Donation Visit of the Right Stamp.—We find in the Bangor Mercury, the following account of a donation visit which came off at Frankfurt:—

"Quite a number of the good people of that town, actuated by a right spirit, were disposed to make a charitable visit to an aged gentleman of the name of Randall, who had the misfortune to freeze his foot some weeks since; and this they did without the advice or co-operation of those who had recently been engaged in the recent donation visit to the fat pastors of that place. By this visit there were added to the stores of the aged and unfortunately gentleman, one barrel of flour, a barrel of pork, a barrel of apples, three quintals of fish, ten pounds of coffee, three pounds of tea, three cords of wood, two pairs of pantaloons, two vests, and a coat, two dresses for his wife and daughter, and one dollar and a half in money."

Great Law Suit.—A suit has been terminated by a decision of one of the Pennsylvania Courts, by which a property valued at six millions of dollars is recovered by the heirs of James Patrick. The property had been originally confiscated, it was said, and each proprietor conceived his title therefore a good one. It renders hundreds of title deeds worthless as so much brown paper. Messrs. George M. Dallas, David Paul Brown and Wm. Hirst, Esqs., Attorneys for the heirs are to receive, it is said, one fifth of the whole value of the property recovered for their legal advice. The claim covers the Moravian church at the corner of Race and Broad streets, Philadelphia, and all the property, with but few exceptions, on the south side of Race street down to the Delaware, from the north-east corner of Second and Race streets half way down to Front street. The "Camel" Tavern in 2d street, and lumber yard adjoining extending from 2d to 3d streets, the south-east corner of Front and Race, including Watson's bakery, and thence to the Delaware. Ridgeway's Row in Coates street, 191 acres also in the heart of Kensington, and 2000 acres of valuable land in Bucks county.

UNITED STATES AND NEW GRENADA.

The following is an abstract of the articles of the Postal Convention, concluded and signed at Bogota, March 6th, 1844, for the purpose of drawing more closely the relations existing between the two countries, and facilitating the prompt and regular transportation of the correspondence of the United States across the Isthmus of Panama.

Art. 1. United States packets of war are to convey to Chagress or Porto Bello mails destined to cross the Isthmus of Panama; the Postmaster at either place to forward it to Panama at the rate of thirty dollars for each trip, if weighing not more than one hundred pounds; and each additional hundred pounds for twelve dollars.

There are three things with which a man should always keep on good terms—his wife, (if he has any,) his stomach, and his conscience.

THE NEIGHBOR. WEDNESDAY, MARCH 20, 1845.

The Temple is rising again. This is the sort; the best city; the best river; and the best people; and the best Temple, will merit the best God.

More Charters repealed!—The Legislature of Indiana have divorced twenty five couples, during their recent session. The only question is, whether, constitutionally, they were public or private contracts. Go it Jerry.

The weather during the past week, was perfectly Congressional.—Cool, windy and stormy.

By their works ye may know them, several new cellars, and houses are pleading the cause of industry in Nauvoo. Rather a charter of perpetual succession. By the bye, the Mississippi runs down stream yet, and the houses, people, sun, moon, and seven stars, appear daily as beautiful as ever: The "ink horn" below to the contrary notwithstanding.

PARTY-CRAFT.

The great American Union, is philosophically divided into an egotistical trinity, consisting of office-craft, priest-craft, and punch-craft. The office-craft, is the father or lord of the land, and embraces all the "little brief authority" from a path master, to the President of the United States; cozening the people under the various appellations of Republicanism and Federalist; Democrat and Whig; anti-mason and abolitionist, &c. artfully using the cunning of the serpent to the woman, "ye shall not surely die"—they are the government.

The priest-craft is the head of mercies, or church militant; holding the destinies of the inner man, and is systematically divided into creeds, and manifestoes, sufficiently diversified to suit the consciences, circumstances, and calculations of all men, in all conditions, rich and poor; proud and humble; bond and free; black and white; at home and abroad; together with letters patent to secure the right of each proprietor during the time therein mentioned, whereby there are faiths many; creeds many; religions many; "Lords many;" Gods many; divisions many, and fat livings many:—they are the christianity.

The punch-craft is the great populace, encasing the spirit that goes to war, that blows off the clouds of anger; and gives our country a glimpse at the sun of peace. It embodies Atheists, Deists, wine bibbers, brandy drinkers; gin swiggers, rum swallows; whiskey toppers, beer guzzlers, in common with the sipping phalanx that loves punch; every thing and nothing; the wicked; the wise, doctors, lawyers and loafers: they are the world.

These three combinations form one great—what shall we call it? why taking all the terrible outbreaks of nullification, riots, bloodsheds, and out-lawries which have characterized the Government as "Father;" the debauchery, "spiritual wickedness in high places," and levity of the "son," as clergyman & guideboard to heaven; and the awful intemperance, vulgarity, profanity and prostitution of punch as "spirit"—mob; yes these three are one great mob, as a majority, and oppresses minorities with impunity. And the great men of other nations are pointing the finger of scorn, and wagging their heads—ah hah! ah hah! "their union is disunion; and freedom bondage; there is no power in liberty."

Easter Sunday—passed without any thing serious to effect on the harmony of all common things, though there might have been some one or two in the whole city, that thought Millerism had again come out at the little end of the horn. As this day is celebrated by many because Christ rose from the dead about 1812 years ago, men might honor God by hallowing it.

State of Society in Montebello.—Two weeks ago a presbyterian after having preached seven times in Montebello, said, that he would use a moment, in order to give some of the sinners a chance to be prayed for and converted. After waiting some time, and none repenting, he exclaimed: "Is it possible that not one sinner is converted; though the angels have been waiting to carry the news to God?" The question is, how did he know, without revelation, the angels were there, and what did they come for? We have never read of one's failing to do his errand before.

The New York Evangelist, a Presbyterian paper, very gravely says: "the spirit of Christ is Christ's spirit." Now as George says, this is sentimental.

On Wednesday last, blustering as it was, Mr. West, went into Mr. Cutting's and said, it is Cutting cold! Yes, replies Mr. Cutting, the wind is in the West.

A corpulent Alderman, once said to a Judge, (on account of his leanness,) the artist will have to turn you sideways, to get your daguerreotype. Well says the Judge, limestone are large and plenty; but precious stones, are scarce and small, but to answer: you may daguerreotype a cloud when you can't take a glimpse of lightning.

Law is like red hot iron; it looks pretty, but don't touch it, it will burn you.

The National Theatre, at Washington, was burnt, on the 5th inst. Shakspeare says, "all the world's a stage, and the men and women merely players."—And when they ran from this burning theatre, they fulfilled Shakspeare, and came very near singing their own locks with the blaze of their own glory.

A sectarian recently knocked his wife down with a bible, exclaiming "the word of God is powerful, even to prostrating vessels of dishonor to the ground; that they may lick the dirt and cry uncleanness." Wasn't lie a gracious priest?

Parties in the United States, may now be ranked into 31. The ruling long tailed. (Democratic.) The bob-tailed. (Native.) The no-tailed. (Whig.) And the half black and white; (Abolition.)

Examination of a Law Student.—(According to Suckerology, &c.)

Q. What is a real action?

A. To knock down your opponent and then get lick'd.

Q. What are a bill and answer?

A. Merchants' accounts paid at the end of an execution.

Q. How do you file a bill?

A. For cockfighting, I file with a fine blacksmith's file; but for other purposes I let them do their own filing.

Q. How would you dissolve an injunction?

A. Would dissolve an injunction by eating hearty and taking a half box of Lee's Pills.

Q. What are ante nuptial articles?

A. Children before marriage.

Q. What is grand larceny?

A. Grand larceny is an old man marrying a young gal.

Q. What constitutes a suit in common cases?

A. Buckskin and Kentucky jeans.

Q. What is the use of witnesses?

A. To find the section corners.

Q. What is the general benefit of law?

A. To grind for toll.

Noble.—To write with ease; to do to please; to live respected; and die regretted, are what cost life. Who bids higher?

The Book of Mormon contains this sentence: And Aaron said, that a Seer is a Revelator and Prophet also.

There is a dandy in St. Louis, who contains so much brass, that a company of smart women, have entered into negotiations to buy him up to braze bells with.

Anti-Monarchist broke out in Mobile.—We learn from the Mobile Advertiser, that quite an amount of base coin in the form of Mexican dollars, has recently been discovered in that city. The imitation is so complete as almost to defy detection. The counterfeiters are rather light in weight and are rather brighter in color and of a smoother surface than the true ones. All of those that have yet been discovered, bear the dates of 1829 and 1836.

Send the returns to Warsaw, where "birds of a feather; may chirp together."

Suckerology.—It is said (says the Organ) that one of the representatives in the Legislature of Ohio, recently took off his coat, laid it on his desk, and swore he would lick the first three men who voted for the engrossment of a bill to amend the charter of Cincinnati.

This is noble.—Misery and meanness is as catching as the itch, and when the Vampires of the United States go in for an "unconditional repeal of charters," there will be—

"Such a pullin' off coats; Such a lickin' of men!" &c.

Professor Bush, of New York, has ruined a nation, by his philosophy that our bodies change at least, all the materials, once in seven years.—All the Irish in that quarter, who have been in America that length of time, are declaring upon their souls, that they, please your honors, are perfectly Native Americans;—and the Dutch have caught the disorder the natural way. Confusion is completely admissable at this Irish sham-rack.

Spotted Pigs.—From ten to fifteen stages a day were arriving at Washington at our latest dates, half loaded with office-seekers. A wag observed that he had never seen so many hungry spotted pigs squealing round the old saw form seat, since they lugged old Tip to death. Polk will have to eat safe and drink aquaforta to keep up his blood.

It is rumored that Hampton up the river has been created into Paradise; and that a Jew, a poet, is writing "Paradise Lost," on account of the recent resolve for Kurland.

THE CABINET.

Hon. James Buchanan, Secretary of State.

Hon. Robert J. Walker, Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. Wm. L. Marcy, Secretary of War.

Hon. George Bancroft, Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. John Y. Mason, Attorney General.

Hon. Cave Johnson, Postmaster General.

The Globe contains the above officially. Only one can be objected to; that is Marcy, tainted with Van Buren's "whoring touch." Vox Matti, Vox Diaboli! We presume the whole as a body, like England, will expect every man to do his duty.

THE THREE PER CENT. SCHOOL FUND SEIZED UPON BY CONGRESS.

It appears by the following letter from Senator Breese, that the United States has decided to retain the school fund due this state, to pay interest on certain bonds which are held by the Government. This decision is evidently a great outrage; and is in direct violation of the compact with this state. The United States purchased Illinois bonds as an investment for the Cherokee Indians; and for the Smithsonian Fund. The interest on them has been unpaid since Jan. 1, 1843; and the Government now claim to seize upon the school fund due and coming to this state to pay this interest. This interest is a debt due by the state. The money to be retained by the United States to pay it, is a debt due from them, not to the treasury of the state; but to the cause of education in this state by virtue of the following laws and compacts.

The ordinance of 1787, declares "that schools and the means of education shall be forever encouraged in the north western territory."

The act of Congress of the 18th of April, 1818, for the purpose of carrying out this declaration, provides, "that five per cent. of the net proceeds of the lands lying within the state; and which will be sold by Congress after the first day of January, 1819, after deducting all expenses incident to the same, shall be reserved for the following purposes: viz: two fifths to be disbursed under the direction of Congress in making roads leading to the state; the residue to be appropriated by the Legislature of the state for the encouragement of learning; of which one-sixth part shall be exclusively bestowed on a college or university." This provision was offered to this state as one of the articles of compact, by which the convention was to relinquish the right of taxing the public domain; and abandon the right of taxing the lands sold by the Government for five years after the day of sale; and was acceded to, and ratified by the convention in their ordinance appended to the state constitution.

But here is the letter, and the resolution of the two Houses of Congress:

"Senate Chamber, March 1, 1845.

Gov. FORD:—Dear Sir, I deem it proper to inform you that the accompanying joint resolution, has just passed the Senate, and is in force as soon as it receives the signature of the President. I understand it received no opposition in the House where it originated. When it came up for consideration here, I opposed it, aided by some of the Senators from the new states; but without effect. It is a gross and palpable violation of the compact with our state, by which the three per cent. fund is expressly appropriated for purposes of education, and by the law is to be used for no other purpose. I still think it is such a violation, and call your attention to it.

Yours respectfully, SIDNEY BREESE."

"Twenty-eighth Congress, second session.

Resolved, By the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled: That whenever any states shall have been or may be in default for the payment of interest or principal on investments in its stocks or bonds held by the United States in trust, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the treasury to retain the whole or so much thereof as may be necessary, or of the percentage to which such states may be entitled of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands within its limits, and apply the same to the payment of said interest or principal, or to be the reimbursement of any sums of money expended by the United States for that purpose."

Should the United States Government proceed to carry out the above resolution, which is a palpable violation of the solemn compact between that Government and the state of Illinois, the occasion will warrant the adoption of retaliatory measures, on the part of Illinois. A sovereign state of this Union is not to be run over rough-shod by the United States Government, with impunity; and we look with confidence to the Governor of this state to adopt such measures of redress as lie within his constitutional power. If nothing else can be done, the state can tax every acre of land owned by the United States within the limits of Illinois. She only surrendered this power of taxation, upon the express condition, that the school fund should be annually paid over to our people. The United States, having now violated her part of this compact, of course the state of Illinois is released from her part of the compact. The occasion would almost warrant the calling of a special session of the Legislature, for the purpose of taxing the lands of the United States. What the Governor designs to do, in this emergency, we have not yet learned.—Springfield Register.

"A sovereign state is not to be run over rough-shod by the United States Government, with impunity;" truly! who run rough-shod over Nauvoo? An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth. There is a God in Israel, who renders measure for measure.

COMMUNICATIONS.

St. Croix Falls, W. T., Feb. 10, 1845.
Mr. Editor:
I have long had a desire to send you a little information, or a few items concerning this part of the country, for the benefit of the saints at Nauvoo and other places; provided you shall deem them worthy of a place in your paper.

As I have nothing but the good of the saints in view, and have an anxious desire that the glory of God may pervade their breasts more than the glory of the world, you will pardon me for sending a few lines from the Upper Mississippi.

St. Croix is about 600 miles above Galena, and about 40 miles from St. Peters. It has a fine climate, and excellent water; rich soil, and good timber, and altogether is a beautiful country, with some copper ore.

The St. Croix mills are owned by a man from the State of Maine, whose name is James Perrignon. The pinery is still higher up. This establishment employs about one hundred hands the year round; but the fact is, profanity, vulgarity and drunkenness are the "ruling passions" on the score of vice, though there are some murders. This place is a kind of dividing line between the Sioux and Chippeway Indians.

The land has been purchased by the United States, but will not be in market for many years; thus affording poor settlers a great advantage for land.

This pinery too, would be glad to employ good sober men with families. Female labor is scarce and high. And such people could cultivate the country to some purpose.

Money is not always at hand here, but credit and lumber are, where men are industrious. I have given you these particulars for the benefit of the poor saints.

Respectfully yours, &c.
For the Neighbor.

WAR! WAR!!

Since the war between France and Africa has closed; it is thought to be the most proper and important step for the citizens of Nauvoo to take, to prevent a recurrence of the same tragedy, to go immediately to Carthage and pay over all the tax that is now due on their lots, lest they be sold for taxes. Let no one who owns lands in the city, rest contented till he knows his lands are clear, and he has the tax receipts to read himself. If you have trusted your business to others, it may be done and it may not be done; the latter more likely than the former: but if you do it yourselves, then you will know. See to it, and see that your lots are not already sold. If they are, redeem them speedily lest you be too late. Let it all be done by the first of May or sooner.

ORSON HYDE.

The Independence arrived this morning from New Orleans and gives the following news, which Mr. Burnham calls "Drift along Shore."

A caravan of well bred and highly educated animals from the Crescent city, have lately been exhibited for a few nights in Baton Rouge. "On leaving for the interior, a mile or two out of town, his majesty the Elephant, became highly displeased with his keeper from some cause unknown, and raising his muscular proboscis, with one blow struck him dead; and with another knocked a wagon into splinters. Passing by the female elephant, he gave her a clout or blizzard which her ladyship will long remember, but not as a mark of conjugal affection.

The United States' troops having been called on, they commenced as Jonathan says, "shooting bullets at him," but his majesty shook them from his brawny side, as the Lion shakes the "glittering dew drops from his mane." A reconciliation took place, and his majesty has returned "to strut his hour upon the stage," although a sadder, yet it is to be hoped, a better player.

The Steamboat Belle of the West on her way from New Orleans to Pittsburgh, touched a short time at Memphis. As the boat left the wharf, it was discovered that two persons from shore were on board, having neglected to leave before the boat started. The yawl was lowered and the persons imprudently got in during its descent, when unfortunately they were thrown into the water and were drowned.

A Court Non-suited.—The Circuit Court at Rochester, assembled for the term, a short time since, the jury had been sworn, and all the preparation for proceeding with the business completed, when the District Attorney discovered that the green bag having all the indictments, had been surreptitiously taken from his possession.

A fit of the ague is neither more nor less than personal earthquake.

We learn from the Expositor, says the West on Journal of the 8th, that seven gentlemen have arrived at that place from Santa Fe via Bent's Fort. They left early in January, and bring news that the commandant, Gen. Mariano Martinez, took no part either for or against Santa Anna—Armiro, the former Governor was at Albuquerque. An attack was feared from the Yute Indians, the whole province was kept in alarm by their depredations, and it was even feared they would attack Santa Fe. The Fort of Antonio Robidoux was taken and all found in it massacred, Antonio himself escaping to his Fort on the Compadra.

The Warren Murders.—The decision of the Supreme Court of New Jersey, was pronounced on Friday, the 7th, in the case of Peter W. Parke, by Chief Justice Hornblower, and in the case of Joseph Carter by Justice Nevins. The Court refused to grant the motion for new trials in both cases. The prisoners will probably be sentenced to be executed at the present term of the court. They were convicted, it will be remembered, for being concerned in the murder of the Cabinet family.

Mission to China.—The Missionary Herald, for March, contains intelligence from different missions in China. Mr. Abel, who is stationed at Ansoy, gives some interesting extracts from his journal respecting an Imperial commissioner who was at that place on some secret errand. As he desired instruction in geography and history, Mr. Abel had frequent interviews with him, often concluding the afternoon's visit with a tea-tete dinner. He found the commissioner exceedingly communicative and friendly, and anxious to obtain general ideas of various countries, their size, political importance and commercial relations, especially with his own country, carefully tracing the lines of latitude and longitude, and thus fixing the exact position of places in his mind. England, America and France were special subjects of investigation.

Baptist Mission in China.—We learn from the Baptist Advocate of last week, that Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Devay arrived safe at Hong Kong, October 23. The Doctor accompanied by the Rev. Mr. Shuek, was received with the greatest kindness by the civil and military officers of Kowloon, and the mandarin immediately placed at his disposal a commodious temple, situated in a beautiful grove near the town, which is to be used hereafter as a dispensary, and a Christian church. The school is flourishing. A deficiency in school books is noted.

Michigan Centre Railroad.—This road will be in full blast to Kalamazoo the ensuing summer, and a bill is now depending in the Michigan Legislature appropriating 14,000 acres of state lands to complete the road to St. Joseph, its western terminus. There is no more important work in the Union, none which should be prosecuted with greater vigor. When the link is completed, the journey can be made from Boston to Chicago in 85 hours, as follows:
From Boston to Albany 12 hours.
" Albany to Buffalo 24 "
" Buffalo to Detroit 30 "
" Detroit to St. Joseph 10 "
" St. Joseph to Chicago 6 "

A most dangerous counterfeit of sovereign has been detected in New York. It bears the head of George IV., and the date 1824. It is of the full legal weight 123.3 grains. It has the proper color and texture, not only at the surface but in the interior, as exhibited on cutting. There is but one test, short of actual assay, by which it can be distinguished from the genuine piece, and it is the trial by specific gravity. A genuine sovereign would show a specific gravity varying from 17.50 to 17.90. The piece in question gives but 16.22.

Marriage of a Turk to a French Lady.—The last Courier des Etats Unis says, that the celebrated C. I. Jousot, a well known Turk, is engaged to be married to a cousin of the former French Minister at Constantinople. He is first to become a Christian—according to agreement.

Another.—Walker's improvement upon the piano, is said to be the most extraordinary of the age, and far superior to Coleman's.

Solar Spots.—A dark spot of uncommon magnitude is now visible on the disc of the sun. It is more than ten thousand miles in diameter, and its area is greater than that of the Pacific ocean. The spot was first observed on the 13th inst., near the eastern limb of the sun, and a little above his equatorial diameter.

It is now advanced nearly to the centre of the disc; and will occupy seven or eight days more in passing across to the western limb, where it will disappear. It cannot be seen without difficulty by the naked eye, but it is shown distinctly with a telescope eight or ten inches in length.

The trial of Henry Daniel for the murder of Clifton R. Thompson, at Mount Sterling, Ky., has been continued and fixed for the third Monday in June. The accused, says the Lexington Observer, did not apply for bail.

The county jail at Terre Haute, Indiana, was burned down recently. None of the prisoners escaped.

FROM HAYTI.

The brig Republic, Captain Smith, arrived yesterday from Port Republican, whence she sailed on the 21st ult.—We have received the "Feuille de Commerce," "Figaro," and "Le Manifeste," to the latest dates.

It appears that Hayti cannot remain quiet. With elements enough to become a comparatively wealthy Republic, she is rapidly going to ruin. Another revolution was on the eve of breaking out when the Republic sailed.

It was expected that the Ex-President Riviera would return from Jamaica in order to regain the power he once possessed. Preparations were making to receive him with open arms by his friends, and on bayonets by those opposed to him. If taken he will of course be shot.

Hayti is becoming, like Peru and Mexico, ripe for a revolution every other day. It is a sort of dejeuner a la bayonette with them. It is natural, however, for the Haytians thus to copy the actions of their neighbors, for the backs have ever been remarkable for their imitiveness.

[N. Y. Herald.]

Mob Law.—Mr. Disney, we learn, has introduced a bill into the Senate, in relation to mobs, which is likely to pass. The bill provides that towns and cities shall be responsible for the damages done by mobs within their limits. This is the true principle, and the only measure we can think of likely to have a preventive effect against mobs. If Mr. Disney succeeds, he will deserve credit for the measure. [Cin. Chron.]

Agricultural.

PROFITABLE APPLE TREE.—Mr. Seth Cooley, of South Hartford, in New York, has an apple tree in that town, from which he gathered last year, forty bushels of greening apples, of a superior quality, worth from forty to fifty cents a bushel on the premises. The tree was situated in rather a north-western exposure, soil a loose deep gravel, well manured. There is many a two acre lot that yields less profit than this three square rods occupied by this tree.

Coal pit dust (charcoal) has proved beneficial to fruit trees, by placing a few shovels full about the roots of each tree; it keeps away the grass, prevents the borer from entering the bark, and withal makes an excellent manure.

CORN STALK SUGAR.—Mr. John Beal, of New Harmony, Indiana, made three hundred and ninety-five pounds of good sugar, from corn stalks which grew on three quarters of an acre, which is at the rate of five hundred pounds per acre.

THE PEACH ORCHARD.—An experienced horticulturist, in the Albany Cultivator, says that peach orchards have been known to flourish best and to produce the best fruit, by being kept as sheep and hog pastures. The animals were removed when the fruit was about ripening. By this process, the trees were kept in a perfectly vigorous state, requiring no pruning but what was performed by the animals.

TO MAKE VINES GROW.—Collect the manure of fowls and place a small quantity in the bill. There is nothing like it for this purpose.

APARAGUAY.—It is now time to clear the beds of litter, to loosen the soil, and to sow over them salt or brine. Fish brine is the best. Aparaguay is a marine plant.

TRANSPLANTING.—All fruit trees, most kinds of shade trees, shrubs, hardy roses, hardy azaleas, pinkies, lilacs, peonies, &c. may be raised, divided, and transplanted now, unless your soil is very wet. All hardy plants may be safely transplanted just as soon as the ground is dry enough to crumble freely—and not till then. In planting out shrubs, remember that they will grow; if you put them near together for the sake of present effect, in a year or two they will be crowded. They should be set at ample distances and fill up the spaces with lilacs, peonies, phlox, gladioli, and herbaceous plants, which are easily removed.

MRS. CAUDLE'S CURTAIN LECTURE.

"You ought to be very rich, Mr. Caudle. I wonder who'd lend you five pounds? But so it is: a wife may work and may slave! Ha, dear! the many things that might have been done with five pounds! As if people picked up money in the street! But you always were a fool, Mr. Caudle! I've wanted a black-satin gown these three years, and that five pounds would have pretty well bought it. But it's no matter how I go, not at all. Everybody says I don't dress as becomes your wife—and I don't; but what? that to you, Mr. Caudle? Nothing. Oh, not you can have fine feelings for everybody but those belonging to you. I wish people knew you as I do—that's all. You like to be called liberal—and your poor family pays for it."

"All the girls want bonnets, and when they're to get them I can't tell. Half five pounds would have bought 'em—but now they must go without. Of course they belong to you; anybody but your own flesh and blood, Mr. Caudle."

"The man called for the water-rate, to-day: but I should like to know how people are to pay taxes, who throw away five pounds to every fellow that asks them."

"Perhaps you don't know that Jack, this morning, knocked his shuttle-cock through his bedroom window. I was going to send for the glazier to mend it, but after you lent that five pounds I was sure we couldn't afford it. Oh, no! the window must go as it is; and pretty weather for a dear child to sleep with a broken window. He's got a cold already on his lungs, and I shouldn't at all wonder if that broken window settled him—if the dear boy dies, his death will be upon his father's head; for I'm sure we can't now pay to mend windows. We might though, and do a good many more things, if people didn't throw away their five pounds."

"Next Tuesday the fire insurance is due. I should like to know how it's to be paid! Why it can't be paid at all. That five pounds would have just done it—and now, insurance is out of the question. And there never were so many fires as there are now. I shall never close my eyes all night—but what's that to you, so people can call you liberal Mr. Caudle? Your wife and children may all be burnt alive in their beds—as all of us to a certainty shall be, for the insurance must drop. And after we've insured for so many years! But how, I should like to know, are people to insure who make ducks and drakes of their five pounds?"

"I did think we might go to Margate this summer. There's poor little Caroline, I'm sure she wants the sea. But no, dear creature! she must stop at home—all of us must stop at home—she'll go into a consumption, there's no doubt of that; yes—sweet little angel!—I've made up my mind to lose her, now. The child might have been saved; but people can't save their children and throw away their five pounds, too."

"I wonder where poor little Cherub is? While you were lending that five pounds, the dog ran out of the shop. You know, I never let it go into the street, for fear it should be bit by some mad dog, and come home and bite all the children. It wouldn't now at all astonish me if the animal was to come back with the hydrophobia and give it to all the family. However, what's your family to you, so you can play the liberal creature with five pounds?"

"Do you hear that shutter, how it's banging to and fro? Yes, I know what it wants as well as you, it wants a new fastening. I was going to send for the blacksmith to-day. But now it's out of the question: now it must bang of nights, since you've thrown away five pounds."

"Well, things are come to a pretty pass! This is the first night that I've made my supper off roast beef without pickles. But who is to afford pickles when folks are always lending five pounds?"

"Ha! there's the soot falling down the chimney. If I hate, the smell of anything it's the smell of soot. And you know it; but what are my feelings to you? Sweep the chimney! Yes it's all very fine to say, sweep the chimney—but how are chimneys to be swept—how are they to be paid for by people who don't take care of their five pounds?"

"Do you hear the mice running about the room? I hear them. If they were only to drag you out of bed, it would be no matter. Set a trap for them! Yes, it's easy enough to say—set a trap for 'em. But how are people to afford cheese, when every day they lose five pounds?"

"Hark! I'm sure there's a noise down stairs. It wouldn't at all surprise me if there were thieves in the house. Well, it may be the cat; but thieves are pretty sure to come in some night. There's a wretched fastening to the back-door; but these are not times to afford bolts and bars, when fools won't take care of their five pounds."

"Mary Anne ought to have gone to the dentist's to-morrow. She wants three teeth taken out. Now, it can't be done. Three teeth that quite disfigure the child's mouth. But there they must stop, and spoil the sweetest face that was ever made. Otherwise, she'd have been a wife for a lord. Now when she grows up, who'll have her? Nobody. We shall die, and leave her alone and unprotected in the world. But what do you care for that? Nothing; so you can squander away five pounds."

"And now, see Mr. Caudle, what a misery you've brought upon your wretched family! I can't have a satin gown—the girls can't have new bonnets—the water-rate must stand over—Jack must get his death through a broken window—our fire insurance can't be paid, so we shall all fall victims to the devouring element—we can't go to Margate, and Caroline will go to an early grave—the dog will come home and bite us all mad—that shutter will go banging forever—the soot will always fall—the mice never let us have a wink of sleep—thieves be always breaking in the house—and our dear Mary Anne be for ever left an unprotected maid—and all, all Mr. Caudle, because you will go on lending five pounds!"—[Lon. Punch.]

THE WASHINGTON FAMILY.

The following letter, translated from the German, contains some interesting particulars respecting a branch of the Washington family. The letter from General Washington, to which the writer alludes, may be seen in Sparks's Washington, vol. xi, p. 393; and other particulars concerning the family in vol. i, p. 554. James Washington is there mentioned as having been a merchant in Rotterdam.

Munich, February 21, 1844.

Honored Sir:—It was not till the 17th of this month, that I received your favor of December 13th; I could not, therefore answer it earlier. In compliance with your wish, I will, with pleasure, communicate to you facts relating to my family. The branch from which I am descended has undoubtedly the same ancestor as that from which the American race descended, which is proved also by the same coat of arms.

The family of Washington is descended from a good old English family, which in early times, owned considerable possessions in the counties of York and Northampton, and in other places. It became connected, by marriage, with the family of Shirley, Earl Ferrers. Sir Lawrence Washington married Elizabeth, daughter of the second Earl Ferrers. It was also connected with that of Villiers, Duke of Buckingham. A branch of the family, from unknown causes—for they were wealthy—emigrated about the year 1650 to America; and the well known (one may say with truth the universally famous) General and President George Washington was descended from it.

My great grandfather, James Washington, was so deeply implicated in the unfortunate affair of the Duke of Monmouth, in the time of Charles II.—1683 and 1684—that he was obliged to fly from England; and after losing by shipwreck, on the coast of Portugal, every thing of his personal property that he had been able to carry away from England, he came to Holland. While there he was frequently demanded on the part of England by its ambassador, and his delivery insisted upon; but the States General did not consent, and thus he became the founder of that branch which then began to flourish in Holland, and is still in existence, in the persons of two individuals, cousins, lieutenants in the army and navy.

I possess an autograph letter of the great man, George Washington, from Mount Vernon, January 20, 1793, in which, among other things, it is said:—"There can be but little doubt, sir, of our descending from the same stock, as the branches of it proceeded from the same country; at what time your ancestor left England is not mentioned; mine came to America nearly one hundred and fifty years ago."

At the age of sixteen I received, in 1791, a commission in the Dutch service, but was unwilling to serve the Batavian Republic founded in 1795; and being a faithful follower of the house of Orange, I emigrated. At the formation of the Dutch brigade of the Prince of Orange in the English service in 1793, I was appointed lieutenant in that brigade, until the peace of Amiens, in 1802. A few months later I had the good fortune to enter the Bavarian service. Since then nearly forty-two years have passed, of which I have been attached to no less than thirty-seven years to the most high person of the King, partly as marshal of the Court, and partly as aid-de-camp.

I have also planted a stock in Bavaria, which, if God will, is some time to bear good fruit to the King and country. I have three sons—the eldest, Ludwig, sixteen years old, is a page of his Majesty the King; the second, Max, fourteen years old, is pupil in the Royal Corps of Cadets; and third, Karl, ten years old, frequents the public school. By my two marriages with daughters of families of the highest nobility in the land, my children are placed in agreeable circumstances, even when I shall be no more; and in this manner this branch of the family in this new country may flourish. God give his blessing to it!

It would lead me too far to enter into details of my biography; for being in carrier years frequently exposed to the storm of fate, brought on chiefly by revolutions, and at a later period placed in important offices and other relations, I could not do it without being very long; and since this letter has already attained a considerable extent, that which has been said will, I hope satisfy you. I will only add in order that you may become altogether acquainted with my situation here, that I will subjoin to the signature of my name what is otherwise not usual; but in this case I think I may make an exception, because it forms in a manner a part of my biography.

Thanking you for the literary production transmitted to me, which possesses, by the preface of the renowned Professor Hedman, an enhanced value, I remain, with sentiments of perfect esteem, your devoted.

BARON VON WASHINGTON, Royal Bavarian Chamberlain, Lieutenant General and Aid-de-camp to His Majesty the King, Commander of the Order of Civil Merit of the Bavarian Crown, of the Greek Order of the Star, of the British Military Order of the Bath, Knight of the Royal French Order of the Legion of Honor, and Lord of Neitzing.

To Dr. J. K. Fluzel, Consul of the United States of North America in Leipzig.

The Irish and Phoenicians.—At a meeting of the Syro-Egyptian Society, in the 21st ultimo, Mr. Sirk Buckingham, by way of settling the question as to the descent of the Irish from the Phoenicians, mentioned a fact which had come within his knowledge, of a gentleman from Exeter, who, by means of the language of the mountaineers of Atlas, with which he was intimately acquainted, kept up a conversation with two Irishmen in their native idiom. He also knew of a Dublin lady, who by means of the Irish language conversed freely with the mountaineers of Atlas in their native idiom: these mountaineers being the descendants of Carthaginians who had taken refuge in recent times in the Atlas range, and preserved the dialect of their Phoenician forefathers.

Another Invention.—Col. Reed, of Boston, has hit upon an invention which (if successful) is likely to be a formidable competitor to Mr. Morse's Magnetic Telegraph. Its purpose is to transmit letters or packages any distance with the rapidity of lightning. The "Boston Post" says:—

The process by which this is accomplished is very simple consisting merely of an air-chest, which is charged with air, the letter or package is placed in the feeder, and it is immediately discharged through the pipe, with the greatest velocity and safety. Col. Reed, the inventor, is of opinion that an outlay of $60,000 would insure the transmission of letters and packages between Boston and New York with perfect safety in the space of half an hour.

Importance of the Telegraph.—A broker of this city received yesterday in order for $10,000 of New York funds. After making enquiry, he found he could not obtain the amount here, he therefore immediately went to the Telegraph office and had a message transmitted to Washington, to his correspondent, asking if the required sum could be obtained there. In half an hour he received an answer in the affirmative, and that the amount would be sent on in the evening to his order. This conclusively shows how vastly important this mode of intelligence is to men of business, for had he had to wait for the slow communication by the railroad, he might have lost the commission on the order.

Truth, is as a mirror, ever reflecting the objects which present themselves, in their true light and character.

MR. HUGH PATRICK, Dentist, begs to announce to the ladies and gentlemen of this city, his removal to that part of the post office lately occupied by Mr. S. Rigdon, and returns his sincere thanks to his numerous friends in this city and surrounding country, for the extensive patronage he has received since he arrived here, and in doing so, he would assure them the same unremitting attention, which has hitherto gained for him the approbation of those by whom he has been favored, it shall be his constant object to cultivate.

CONSUMPTION OF THE LUNGS, Coughs and Colds, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pains or Soreness of the Chest, Difficulty of Breathing, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Croup, &c.

AMONG all the famous medicines for Consumption, none seems to be meeting with greater success, or gaining a higher reputation than that most wonderful article, Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry! That it stands at the head of all other remedies is now universally conceded. It has cured thousands upon thousands—of all classes—in cases of the most dangerously Consumptive character—and physicians of the greatest eminence throughout our whole country, unhesitatingly recommend it as the most powerful curative of Pulmonary diseases, in the whole range of Pharmacy. Thousands of consumptive patients have already tested its exalted virtues, and confessed its surpassing, excellent and amazing power. The remarkable success of this Balsam is no doubt owing in a great measure to the peculiarly agreeable and powerful nature of its ingredients. It is a fine Herbal Medicine, composed chiefly of Wild Cherry Bark and the genuine Iceland Moss—the latter imported expressly for this purpose—the rare medicinal virtues of which are also combined, by a new chemical process with the Extract of Tar—thus rendering the whole Compound the most certain and efficacious remedy ever discovered.

A CASE OF ASTHMA. The following is from a distinguished Lawyer of the city of New York, who had been afflicted with the Asthma for upwards of Twenty Years; and who, after reading such cases can doubt the efficacy of this medicine! New York, January 23, 1843.

I have been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for 24 years—sometimes so severely as to be confined to my room for weeks; and although attended by various medical advisers, of the highest reputation and skill in the country, the relief was but partial and temporary—twice the disease proved nearly fatal to my life.

Some few weeks ago I commenced taking Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, which gave me instant relief, and a single bottle produced in a few days what I believe to be a radical and perfect cure.

MEDICATED LOZENGES.

THESE celebrated Lozenges are now offered to the citizens of Nauvoo and the West, as the best preparations (for the cure of the various diseases for which they are recommended) ever offered to the public. The proprietor, Dr. Sherman, is a regular graduate of Medicine, a member of the Medical Society of the city and county of New York, and these Lozenges are prepared from medical prescriptions which have been approved by the most celebrated physicians in that city; in addition to which they are prepared in so pleasant a manner that children can take them with avidity and cry for more. They consist of:

COUGH LOZENGES.

Which are the safest and most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Asthma, &c., ever offered to the public. They operate by promoting expectoration, allaying the irritation of coughing, and removing the cause of the disease.

WORM LOZENGES.

The only infallible Worm medicine ever discovered. In over 400,000 cases they have never been known to fail. Many diseases arise from worms and occasion long and intense suffering and even death without their ever being suspected; grown persons are very often afflicted with them, and are doctored for various complaints, without any benefit, when one dose of these Lozenges would speedily cure them.

CATHARTIC LOZENGES.

For Nervous or Sick Head Ache, Palpitations of the Heart, lassitude and nervous affections generally. Persons traveling or attending large parties, will find the Lozenges really reviving, and imparting the buoyancy of youth—used after dispensation, they will restore the tone of the system generally, and remove all the unpleasant symptoms arising from too free living.

FEVER AND AGUE LOZENGES.

These Lozenges have been tested by a celebrated physician in a practice of twenty years, and have never been known to fail in removing the distressing disease. In addition to which, if the directions be followed, the disease will not return.

A cure in all cases guaranteed or the money refunded.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2, 1845.

THE GATHERING.

We are happy to state, that the gathering has commenced this season under as favorable auspices, as the most sanguine could have expected. During the past week, emigrants have arrived by both land and water; among which were a part of 128 souls by ship from England. The remainder, having stopped at St. Louis to rest, are expected soon. Some of them, to be sure, are saints that went out fast full, to labor for a livelihood, or to preach the gospel, but the "more part" are new emigrants, gathering together to serve the Lord according to the dictates of their own consciences, and the provisions of the constitution.

It is a noble affair, that Mormonism commenced in a free country: it gives a fair chance to try the virtue, honor, and patriotism of rulers and men, as well as the purity and charity of all Christendom. The true saint lives to live again. As the poet said,

"Conquers die many times, the brave but once."

On the 24th of March, last week, we were shown a new potato, the growth of the present winter; something larger than a hen's egg. This is the sort, and Nauvoo is the place. We might have fresh vegetables all winter, especially if the weather was as favorable as the past one has been, for such experiments. Who goes in for great things, and good things? The Mormons.

THREE DAYS' CONCERT.

There will be three days' concert, (April 7th, 8th, and 9th,) at the Music Hall. Our musicians and "sweet singers" will give a specimen of "rich licks," and expect a "little rhino" in return. For further particulars see hand bill, and for reality step in and snatch a taste beyond the reach of art.

First puny war in Iowa.—Last week there were strong symptoms of war on the "half breed tract", a little above Keokuck. H. T. Reid Esq., had some rails split on a claim of his, as he supposed, but which happened to be upon the claim of a Mr. Wright. Mr. Reid took the rails into his possession, and Mr. Wright took them back again, whereupon a writ of Replevin gave the Sheriff authority to re-take &c. but the bone and sinew of them diggings," politely stayed proceedings by a sort of information beyond the control of the sheriff. In this dilemma the posse comitatus, to the amount of about 250 men came down from Fort Madison, on the steamer New Purchase, puffing for war, and landed at Montrose, on Tuesday evening. Early on Wednesday, the troops took up the line of march for the seat of war, when lo! they found no common enemy to fight—a convention were deliberating on the best method of preserving meat without saltpetre and sulphur; the sheriff seized the rails and all parties agreed to await the "law's slow delay." Thus ends the first puny war among the "half breeds."

Life and music.—About fifty couple, old and young, grave and gay, &c., gave "mine host," the "keeper of the Mansion" a call on Friday last, and took supper.

The Band and some of the "sweet singers" of Nauvoo, together with a comic speaker or two, delighted the guests to a charm; and what was more ennobling still, tem-

CONSUMPTION OF THE LUNGS, Coughs and Colds, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pains or Soreness of the Chest, Difficulty of Breathing, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Croup, &c.

A MONG all the famous medicines for Consumption, none seems to be meeting with greater success, or gaining a higher reputation than that most wonderful article, Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry! That it stands at the head of all other remedies is now universally conceded. It has cured thousands upon thousands—in cases of the most dangerously Consumptive character—and physicians of the greatest eminence throughout our whole country unhesitatingly recommend it as the most powerful curative of Pulmonary diseases, in the whole range of Pharmacy. Thousands of consumptive patients have already tested its exalted virtues, and confessed its surpassing, excellent and amazing power. This remarkable success of this Balsam is no doubt owing in a great measure to the peculiarly agreeable and powerful nature of its ingredients. It is a fine Herbal Medicine, composed chiefly of Wild Cherry Bark and the genuine Iceland Moss—the latter imported expressly for this purpose—the rare medicinal virtues of which are also combined, by a new chemical process with the Extract of Tar—thus rendering the whole Compound the most certain and efficacious remedy ever discovered.

A CASE OF ASTHMA.

The following is from a distinguished Lawyer of the city of New York, who had been afflicted with the Asthma for upwards of Twenty Years; and who, after reading such cases can doubt the efficacy of this medicine!

New York, January 23, 1843.

I have been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for 24 years—sometimes so severely as to be confined to my room for weeks; and although attended by various medical advisors, of the highest reputation and skill in the country, the relief was but partial and temporary—twice the disease proved nearly fatal to my life. Some few weeks ago I commenced taking Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, which gave me instant relief, and a single bottle produced in a few days what I believe to be a radical and perfect cure.

FROM OREGON.

We are indebted to our townsman, P. Voris, Esq., for the following interesting letter from Oregon:

Fadalin Plains, July 7th, 1844.

Dear Sir: I avail myself of the opportunity offered me by a brig which leaves for the Sandwich Islands, to drop you a few lines.

The "great emigrating company," which crossed the continent last summer, (of which company I formed one,) is here safe, and with very few exceptions, highly pleased with the country and prospects. The winter season being the proper time for plowing and seeding, they have generally availed themselves of that opportunity, many of them having sowed over 40 or 60 acres in wheat. The ground is plowed with the common Carey plow, with from one to two yokes of cattle, or two horses, the sward being something like that of blue grass; being thus turned over at any season of the year, the soil completely rotten, then after that process, a tolerable crop is taken from the ground the next year. The ground is light and easily broken, with one pair of horses, producing a tremendous crop of wheat, or indeed that of any other vegetable except Indian corn. Of the latter, a tolerable crop may be raised, though not equal to that grain in the United States.

The harvest is just at hand, and such crops of wheat, barley, oats, peas, and potatoes, are seldom if ever, to be seen in the United States, that of wheat in particular—the stalks being in some instances as high as my head, and the grains generally much larger—I would not much exaggerate to say that they are as large again as those grown east of the mountains. The soil is good, and the climate most superior, being mild all the year round, and very healthy—more so than any country I have lived in for the same length of time. Produce bears an excellent price—wheat, 10 cts.; beef, 6 cts. per pound; potatoes 50 cts., and wheat $1. per bushel.—These articles are purchased at the above prices with the great avidity by the merchants for shipment, generally to the Sandwich Islands and Russian settlements on this continent, and are paid for mostly in store goods and groceries—the latter of which is the product of these Islands, particularly sugar and coffee, of which abundant supplies are furnished.

Wages for laborers are high—common hands are getting from one to two dollars per day, and mechanics from two to four dollars per day. It is with difficulty that men can be procured at these prices, they can do so much better on farms of their own.

The plains are a perpetual meadow, furnishing two complete new crops in the year—spring and fall—the latter remaining green throughout the winter. Beef is killed from the grass at any season of the year. If you have any enterprise left, or if your neighbors have any, here is the place for them.

Dr. McLaughlin has just commenced a canal around the Willamette Falls, which he expects to complete in two years, at a cost of thirty thousand dollars. Our Legislature (in the lower House of which I have the honor to be Speaker) which has just finished its session, has granted the Doctor a charter for twenty years; he entering into an arrangement to complete the canal for boats of 13 feet in width to pass in safety; and the whole to be completed in two years, as above stated. He has a number of hands now engaged in its construction and no doubts are entertained of his ability to complete it. He is constructing a large flouring mill with four run of burrs, which will be ready for business this fall. He has already two saw mills in operation at the falls. Every thing is flourishing in this country.

Yours respectfully,

M. M. CARVER.

A NEW PROJECT.

A Plan for Taking the Yeas and Nays in Deliberate Bodies.

Dr. Duncan, has in Congress, made a motion calling upon Professor Morse for information whether some plan for saving the time of the House consumed in calling the yeas and nays could not be invented. A gentleman of this city has furnished us with such a plan, which was conceived by him last December, and which he has already taken the necessary steps to have patented.

This plan for taking the yeas and nays, in all deliberative bodies in the United States, for which C. Glen Peckles has a patent, covers varied forms. The plan he proposes to adopt at present is as follows:—Two pulleys or keys are placed within the desk of each member; a board or slab is placed on the clerk's desk, on which is printed the name of each member of the house; slips or slides are placed in this slab, running parallel to and in correspondence with each name. Communication is had by means of wires, or other material, between the keys in desk and slides in board. When a vote of "yeas" is called, the members simultaneously touch their key marked "yeas," which throws the slide out on the board, so that it projects beyond his name and the edge of the board; and in like manner for the nays. By that arrangement, the clerk can count the vote, announce the result, and place the aggregate vote on the board, all within a space of one minute.

A slip of paper, containing the names of every member, to correspond with the names and slides on the board, is so adjusted, that when the slides are thrown out, (which are so pointed as to receive ink,) an impression is made opposite to each name; and thus is the vote recorded for the use of the clerk or printer. The slides are so arranged that they can then be returned, all at once, to their places, by the clerk pulling a wire or slide.

This plan may also be used instead of a division of the House, by determining the vote much more expeditiously, also recording it.

Any one who has seen the tedious process of taking the votes by yeas and nays, must be aware of the amount of time it consumes, and that a process by which the whole business can be done in one minute, would save quite a considerable sum of money during a session. We have not the exact data to make an estimate of the saving, but assuming that the vote is taken once every day during a session of four months, and that it consumes each time one half hour, a reasonable allowance, and we will find that the cost, during the 120 days, will be $30,000, a sum which this new plan proposes to save the government.

NEW INVENTIONS.

Anastatic Printing.—This is a very ingenious method of reproducing printed copies of letter-press or line engravings, wood-cuts, lithographs, &c., of which we find no room to take notice hitherto. The London Literary Gazette declares it very simple, and proceeds to describe it as follows:

In an exceedingly short time a facsimile of any printed page, portrait, picture, or drawing, can be procured; and then impressions at the rate possibly of four or five thousand an hour, and twenty thousand or more without deterioration. The operation, and a singular one it is, is to transfer the impression of type or any print to the surface of a polished plate of zinc; and then to bring it out in slight relief to receive the ink, and so to work from it as from the stone of the lithographic press. We saw an engraving with letter-press so transferred and reproduced. The original was placed, face down, on bibulous paper, to imbibe any excess of moisture, and the back of it sponged over with dilute nitric acid. In a few minutes the paper was saturated, and the engraving and printing loosened as it were from its base, or so freshened that possibly it might be smudged; but, at all events, it may be and was under considerable mechanical pressure, transferred to a polished plate of zinc, every line and touch. Not at first distinctly visible, but sponged with gum water, they (i. e. the engraving and printed matter at the foot of it) soon appeared, and in relief sufficient to take the ink and to give off fac-simile impressions. Such, then, is the simple process of an invention, the effects of which will materially bear on the art and artists. Anastatic printing, will obviate the necessity of stereotyping, unless casting type is a cheaper method, which we should much doubt, of producing successive editions than that of the new mode. It will also enable printers to work with a smaller stock of type, to distribute sooner, keeping proofs only for any further or extra demand. Wood-engravers, perhaps, will be most injured by Anastatic printing; for by it the artist's original drawing may be at once, without any carved block, transferred to the pages of a work. This result, however, in all its bearings, seems to tend to cheap production, and to a wide extension of literature and art; and nearly faded prints be renewed and perpetuated. Fears are entertained that forgeries and piracies will become more easy, and therefore that they will increase; but now water-marks in paper and copyright are the chief securities, and these the new and wonderful invention termed Anastatic Printing will not effect.

MUTINY AND MURDER.

A Desperate Conflict at Sea.—The N. Bedford Mercury gives a minute account of a mutiny which occurred on board the whaling ship Sharon, in November, 1842, and of the manner in which the ship was taken from the mutineers by a single person, Mr. Clough, the third mate. Some natives of Ascension Island, who had been shipped as part of the crew, mutinied, while the mate and others were in the boats taking whales, killed the captain and took possession of the ship. One of the natives, entirely naked, leaped upon the taffrail, and brandished a spear, he dared the crew to come on board. An armed native stood guard at each side, and hammers, belaying pins, and other missiles, had been collected for their use, and were hurled furiously at the boat. A Mr. Clough, who was in the boat, was the only one who dared attempt to board the ship. He accordingly, after dark, was taken by the boat ahead of the ship, at some distance, to avoid exciting suspicion, and taking a knife in his teeth to defend himself from sharks, which had been attracted by the whale, swam to the ship, after a hard struggle of an hour and a half, during which time two sharks kept him company, but did not offer to molest him. Having reached the ship he divided under, seized the rudder at the heel, and climbed to the starboard cabin window, through which he made his entry. Lying aside his clothing, and ascertaining that no suspicion existed of his being on board, he groped about for arms, and found two cutlasses and two muskets, which he loaded. A desperate struggle with the natives ensued, in which Clough killed two of them, and gained the command of the ship. The men in the boat then came on board.

The owners of the Sharon have given Mr. Clough the command of a fine ship, which, if the narrative be true, he well deserved.

Make a slow answer to a hasty question.

THE NEIGHBOR.

MONDAY, APRIL 7, 1845.

As most of our hands wish to attend the conference during its continuance, we have concluded to issue our paper this week on Monday, and as many of our subscribers are in from the country, it will no doubt be perfectly satisfactory.

Sunday April 6.—The Conference opened at the stand this morning with singing and prayer. There was preaching in the forenoon by Elder B. Young, mostly upon the subject of baptism for the dead: In the afternoon by Elder Page on several subjects. The preaching of both was capital, and what renders the subject sublime, and the scene great, is, that there never was so large a conference of this church, since its first organization. There certainly was a quarter more than there were last year. In fact there were "acres of people." The union, the order, and the pleasant appearance of the audience caused every body to bear witness, that an excellent spirit actuated the saints: the Lord was there.

Still they come.—In our last we noticed the gathering at this city, and we are happy to say, still they come. We noticed more than fifty active young men, at one arrival, who had come in to labor on the Temple, through the summer.

It is certainly honorable to the city, saints and country to witness the noble minded among about twenty millions, coming forward to build the house of the Lord, to fill up the City, improve the country, and cause the wilderness to blossom as the rose, charter or no charter! Ah, that is the glory! 'tis the people makes a city, not the scribbling of scoffers, or seals of serfs:

"Were I so tall to reach the pole,

"And grasp the ocean with a span,

"I would be measured by my soul,"

"For that's the standard of a man."

Business begins to assume more activity in this city, than it has for a long time. Industry and frugality very frequently afford comfortable habits;—wealth and wisdom are of no use to men, unless properly employed. So swallow the whole lot, as the good man said, and grow better for goodness will finally draw the highest prize.

Conference.—On Sunday the 6th inst., the annual conference commenced in this city. For several weeks, the elders and saints have been coming in to enjoy the benefits of this great assemblage of common interests for the salvation of the human family. More numbers, and better feelings, never characterized this annual gathering of people, since the last dispensation commenced.

The elders and members, if they practice what they witness, will certainly disseminate union, love, peace and virtue, wherever providence casts their lots.

We do impress it upon the public press, so ready to trumpet forth every frivolous story against the Latter day saints, to feign charity enough to give the world a line or two on their increasing numbers and growing union. A little credit, at the great day of accounts, may be as consoling to many of this generation, as the tip of Lazarus' finger dipped in water, would be to cool the rich man's tongue in hell.

The eleventh commandment.—There are more people attending to the eleventh commandment in the city of Nauvoo, than in any other place on the same size on the globe;—that is they mind their own business in Nauvoo, without interfering with others. Some make gardens; some build houses; some work on the prairies; some work on the Temple; some raft lumber and timber down the river for the benefit of the city; some work at mechanical labor; some sing; some pray; some go to meeting, and some laugh at the folly of this generation? So that the Mormon portion of the city, which may be called "the whole team," is about as good a community as ever lived on this earth.

It is really laughable to see the writhings, twistings, turnings, and screwings, of the enemy of mankind—or foes of Mormonism, when they witness the steady progress of the cause of the great gathering of Israel in the last days. Every steam boat brings more Mormons; every road across the country, runs Mormons upon it, bound for the kingdom; and finally every nation, not even excepting the Islands of the sea, contribute to swell the glory, power and dominion of the little mustard-seed church, established in 1830, by Joseph Smith, the mighty one of the seventh and last dispensation.

Martyred men march to glory, and murderers drop to misery—for it is written that the wicked shall be turned into hell with all the nations that forget God; but the righteous inherit eternal life. Go on, then; let every steam boat bring something for Nauvoo; let every saint labor for Nauvoo; and while mean men, are endeavoring to slander or murder the people of God, the kingdom will be given to the saints under the whole heavens—and they will possess it "for ever and ever." Japheth was to dwell in the "Tents of Shem," but Israel, at last, was to be the head and not the tail. Who is on the Lord's side? That's the question.

A speck at Carthage.—We understand that the mob in the "infected district"—of this county, soon after Col. Backenstos returned from the Legislature, ordered him, by written notice, to leave the country by the 4th day of April, or they would exterminate him on the fifth. The fifth came and Col. Backenstos friends rallied to protect him; so, as the mob call it, there was an issue between the "Jacks and anti-Mormons," but to tell the truth, the law and order citizens, were too many for the mobbers and the mob, backed out for want of force.

As the negro sang of the coon,
"Such a gettin' down trees
There never was afore."

It is highly creditable to men of sense, to prevent mobbing and murder.

Better and better.—During last week a large quantity of goods, wares, and materials, came into Nauvoo, by steamers: among which were leather, raw cotton, &c. And the and so forth is all the glory of it, where it has any resemblance to Spanish or Mexican castings, and Turkish poppy seed.

The scripture says 'Let brotherly love continue.'

Anti-Mormonism.—The St. Louis daily Republican of March 29, besides many minor odds and ends, contains the court journal where nine culprits, upon indictment were hauled up to the bull-rings for stealing, forgery, &c. Ahah! And also the said paper contains the nabbery of Milton Schenck for robbing a German of $335 in gold: And also the nabbery of Charles Gibson and Sterling Baker for 'pulling the wool' of a countryman to the tune of $12. The poor fellow got the cash again, though.

And also, the said paper contains the burning of 28 houses in Crab Orchard Ky. And also an anonymous duel at Springfield, Ill.

And also, an account, that the Whig guesses of Troy, N. Y. have sent,—
Mr. Clay's Whig end to flatter,
A large silver server platter.

And also the jug ends of the Empire club, by one of the tag ends of the land of cysters and disappointment. Now all these things seemeth like Anti-Mormonism.

Again, we perceive in the same papers among the 'wants,' or Mormon like portion: '4 or 6 good men wanted to make rails, and make ditches.' 'Wanted 500 lbs. sweet marjoram summer savory, and thyme.' Also, 'negroes wanted—the highest price in cash will, at all times, be paid for negroes.' Miscellaneous: Lost Dogs; Horses furnished for Dragoons.—As our quill wheel rhapsody says:

All the world 's an auction;
All the men and women;
All the beasts and cattle;
All that look like human—
Are merely goods for sale;
A little will suffice 'em;
And little money buys 'em;
The times are now so fra'l.

The weather during the past week has been cool, windy and dry, and the water continues to rise.

The water upon the Rapids is much lower than it was last year at this time.

THE INFLUENCE OF BISHOPS.

The following striking views of the declining power of the Bishops, which we copy from the recent much admired discourse of the Rev. G. W. Burnap, on "Church and State," receive a singular confirmation from recent ecclesiastical transactions, which so shocked the churchman, while causing the scoffers to sneer. [Balt. Vis.]

"Cheered by the experience of the past we have abundant ground for hope for the future. Is there any thing which threatens to bring the career of our prosperity to a close?"

We are sometimes assailed by voices of apprehension and alarm. It is said, that the church deprived of the support of the state, is falling to pieces, is splitting up into a thousand fragments. Say rather that it is approaching nearer to unity than it has done since the days of the Apostles. It would be nearer the truth, to say, that under the auspices of entire freedom, the kingdom of Christ is becoming spiritual, as it was first designed to be, and therefore outward organizations are becoming every day of less consequence. The followers of Christ are finding out the deep meaning of the words of Jesus, when he said, "Be not ye called Rabbi, for one is your master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren."

Those who are disposed to look with astonishment and indignation at the present and approaching state of things, should calmly reflect, that the age of church dignitaries is past. The world has got beyond them. There was a period, when the administration of religion consisted in sacrifices, in rites and ceremonies. Then was the age of the priest. He was the impersonation of religion. He symbolized it at the altar, and carried it painted on his robes. He addressed the senses of mankind. Now the masses read and think. He must lay aside his robes, and address their understandings. Even the Bishop finds himself born an age too late. He flourished in the days of authority. But the days of authority too are gone, and the bishop finds himself reduced to a travelling agent. His authority is the mere shadow of a shade, and he finds every clergyman he visits in all but the name, just as good a bishop as himself. He discovers himself living in an age of conviction, and not of authority; and conviction is produced by the force of mind, and not by the glitter of garments of any color or dimensions. Power in the church is no longer official, but spiritual and intellectual. The true bishop is he who gives utterance, in clearest and deepest tones, to the truth as it is in Jesus; who has penetrated farthest into the Spirit of Christ; who preaches most like his, the eternal Word which shall stand till heaven and earth shall pass away.

In an intellectual and spiritual age, all church offices merge necessarily in the Teacher. Once there was an order of Deacons, who had the care of the poor.—But the State was then heathen, and the poor were left to perish. Now the State is christian, the poor are provided for, and the Deacon's office has become defunct. The Sunday-school teacher has become a more important personage than the wearer of the mitre.

In such an age as this, ecclesiastical organization must necessarily go to decay; every congregation is becoming, as it was at first, essentially independent. The walls which divide different sects, must inevitably crumble, for as knowledge becomes diffused, the things in which they differ from each other, will daily diminish in importance, till they fall into entire neglect. And the church, so far from losing any thing by this change, will shine with new brightness, and rule with deeper and wider power.

✠ We shall give the glaring sins, and disgrace of the "Lord's Spiritual," of the various churches, which now make up what is styled Christendom, altogether a different turn. Since Mormonism rolled into power, like the stone, cut out of the mountain without hands, the fact is, "the are has been laid at the root of the tree, and every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is cut down and cast into the fire." The utter end of churches and governments, not established or sanctioned by the voice of Jehovah, is too evident at this august period, to need any soft soap, or even putty to fill up the cracks, and bruises, that he that runs may see. To atoms they must go, for God has said it.

ON THE LAWS OF NATURE.

Dr. Combe, in speaking of the bad effects of impure air says, we can appreciate the importance of a due supply of fresh air, wherever living beings are congregated. In man the rate of vitiation produced by breathing, and the relative importance of ventilation, may easily be estimated. An individual is ascertained to breathe on an average, from 14 to 20 times in a minute, and to inhale from 15 to 40 cubic inches of air at each inspiration. Sir H. Day and others, rate the quantity so low as from 13 to 17 inches, but most observers agree with Dr. Menzies, who experimented with great care, in estimating it at 40 inches. The quantity, however, varies much in different individuals. Even taking the consumption of air at 30 inches, as a very low estimation, and rating the number of inspiration at 15, it appears that in the space of one minute, no less than 300 cubic inches of air are required for the respiration of a single person. In the same space of time, 24 cubic inches of oxygen disappear, and are replaced by an equal amount of carbonic acid; so that in the course of an hour, one pair of lungs will, at a low estimate, vitiate the air by the subtraction of no less than 1440 cubic inches oxygen, and the addition of an equal number of carbonic acid, thus constituting a source of impurity which cannot be safely overlooked. From these remarks, we can plainly see how soon the air becomes impure in public assemblies, and in all places where people congregate, if the room where they assemble is not properly ventilated.

Many cannot be made to believe that breathing the same air several times, has any bad influence on them, because it does not immediately cost them on a bed of sickness; the effects may be slight at first, perhaps hardly perceptible, but nature's laws are violated, and the least transgression will be followed by punishment.

It is very essential that sick persons should be supplied with pure, fresh air. Their rooms should be well ventilated; for nothing will more contribute to their speedy recovery, than the privilege of breathing wholesome air. The practice of keeping the sick, day after day, and week after week, in a tight room, permitting no air to enter, except what may rush in as the door is opened for some one to pass in or out, is an outrage on nature's laws, and is justly punished by severe penalties. I believe the want of a free circulation of air in many of our private dwellings, and especially in our public rooms and halls, has carried thousands to an untimely grave. When I have met with public assemblies in places that are not sufficiently ventilated, knowing the deleterious effects it had on myself, and seeing its effects on others, I have been led to ask, how long will man continue to trample on the laws of nature, and defy those immutable and unchangeable laws which nature has established, and cannot be violated with impunity? When I have seen many of the most amiable and virtuous, those who are capable of doing much good in their day and generation, capable of becoming swift and mighty messengers to the nations of the earth, spend hours in public assemblies, inhaling at each inspiration the very seeds of disease and death, yet perfectly ignorant of the consequence? I have asked myself is there no remedy? Must we go on and construct our buildings as we have done, leaving no place for pure air to enter nor bad to escape? Must we, every time we assemble together in a public room or hall, or when we retire to rest at night, be immersed in a fluid filled with contagion and death? Must we continue to see our wives, children and friends, cast on beds of sickness, and carried to a premature grave? For what? For the want of pure air, with which nature has so bountifully supplied us. Must the saints always continue ignorant in this thing? I answer no, for they are to become wise in all things. Therefore, while we are making dams, carriages, ploughs, harrows, shoes, hats, bonnets, &c., let us now and then spend a moment in learning and becoming acquainted with those principles and laws, the observance of which, will give us health and strength to carry on these different works of enterprise. Let those who are very busy engaged in weeding their neighbor's garden, be less active in that respect, but more active in learning those things that will be for the preservation of their lives and health, also how they can benefit those around them, by becoming better acquainted in these matters themselves.

ELDER KIMBALL'S REMARKS AT THE MUSIC HALL, DURING THE CONCERT ON THE EVENING OF THE 5TH ULT.

[REPORTED BY L. O. LITTLEFIELD.]

BRETHREN AND SISTERS—Agreeable to Bro. Goddard's request, I arise to address you for a short time. I hope the congregation will be as still as their crowded situation will allow. This is Wednesday evening; but I stand in need of your prayers as much this evening as I would if it were Sunday evening. Our salvation is just as dear now as it ever was. There is no difference in times, only as time difference is rendered so by surrounding circumstances. I am an admirer of music. I am fond of variety, and when I say this I consider that I am not, in the least, stepping aside from the laws and character of the Creator. Look over this vast congregation and you will be convinced that God is a God of variety. Here are near a thousand persons before me, and my eyes do not rest upon any two persons who are alike in features, or the lineaments of countenance; and our acquaintances with the human family will justify me in saying there are no two persons here who are alike in their dispositions. Look at all the creatures of God: the animal creation; the fish of the sea; the fowls of the air; the beasts of the field; and witness the great variety that exists. I expect if ever I have a kingdom given me, that so far as a diversity of appearance is concerned, this is a pattern of what it will be. I expect it will be characterized by all the variety and difference in disposition, that can be traced in this creation. There is a variety in all things; not only in the works of nature, but in the works of art also. This should be so. What would please one person might not please another; so there must, of necessity, be this difference in order that all may be pleased and all be happy. There is a variety in music also.

Here are many different kinds of instruments, and a great number of tunes can be played, and a variety of sounds may be sounded from a variety of strings on an instrument (for instance the piano,) whereby music may be varied to suit the different tastes and feelings of the mind, and thus can a sameness or monotony be avoided, and different interest be excited.

There is an order in the kingdom of God; there is an order in the creations of God; there is an order in music, and there is an order and law adapted to the government, regulation, and creation of all things.

This is the third night that this hall has been filled to overflowing, and you may continue these concerts for thirteen or twenty nights to come and the same interest will be excited, and the hall will be as crowded every night, with a new congregation, as it is now; and when you have done there will be two thirds of the inhabitants of this city who will not have had the privilege of hearing. There are a great many people in this city—how many I do not know—we have never counted them, and we never intend to. But there are not as many here now as we intend there shall be. Mormonism is going ahead and it is astonishing the world, notwithstanding the efforts made, all the while, by mobs and apostates to crush and annihilate it, and the time will come when our enemies will plead for mercy, and there will be no mercy for them. There is at the present time as many as fifty thousand saints on the other side of the Atlantic, ready to emigrate to Nauvoo. What is the news that comes to us from the Islands of the sea? The inhabitants on the Islands of the sea are beginning to be alive to Mormonism; they begin to wait for the law of the Lord; and does this nation think to annihilate it? As well might they attempt to strike Jehovah out of existence. (Not more than five years will pass away before there will be fifty times as many Mormons as there are now.) Some think we shall be driven from Nauvoo; but we are going to stay in Nauvoo and we shall build it up, and we want Esquire Wells, Mr. Davis, and all good men, to lend us a helping hand, and we will go to work and build some fine houses; some lofty edifices, and splendid palaces, that will look noble, grand and imposing, that will astonish and please the fancy of passengers up our mighty river. This house which we have built for the choir and band in this city, is no more in comparison to the one we will build than my house is to the Temple. I have told our bishops, and will again say here, that not many years will pass away before there will be more than one hundred and fifty floors and bishops to tend to the temporal affairs of the church.

The people and a great deal of fault with the Twelve; but thank God it is without cause. Have we not done any good to this nation? Look at the thousands of people that we have assisted in assembling together in this State, many of whom have emigrated from foreign nations, who are yearly paying a vast amount of taxes into the treasury, swelling the amount of our State revenue, thereby increasing the wealth and affording new resources for the support and defence of our common country. We are building up a city here that will be a credit to the world, and making improvements, that will raise the value of property in this country to a great extent. But notwithstanding we are spending our lives and means, and wearing out our constitutions for the benefit and salvation of the human family, there is scarce a man in Illinois to defend our cause, or protect us in our inherent rights. All they ever gave us, they have taken away, and there is not a tie remaining—not so much as the smallest fibre, to bind us to them any longer. We have spent our fortunes, without winning our lives, to carry the gospel to the gentiles and bring them to the knowledge of these principles by which they might be saved; but they have rejected the gospel; they have killed the prophet; and those who did not take an active part in the murder have sanctioned the bloody deed and rejoice in the massacre. The time is now come, when, if the gentiles want salvation, they have got to come to us for it, for I don't feel like going after them any longer. I feel as though my skirts were clear of the blood of this generation. The cup of the gentiles is full, and destruction will soon overtake them. God will destroy them and they will beg for mercy when there is no mercy for them. After all we have done there are many who begrudge us a place on the footstool of God. What is it that binds us here? It is the endowment; if it were not for that nothing could bind us to this gentile world any longer.

We have now twenty seven already organized, waiting for their endowment, and by the time they get it there will be as many more waiting to receive theirs, and this there will be an eternal increase in the kingdom of God.

The Legislature has repealed our city charter; but it cannot repeal Mormonism; neither can it take away our city. I don't see that the repeal of the charters has effected us any. We are just as rich as we were before; our houses are just as commodious; our soil is just as fertile; our land is just as desirable, and our property is just as valuable as it ever was, and we need not complain. Why, we are the richest people on earth; our wealth flows from a source that cannot be barred by legislative enactment. A true religion is the best wealth of any people. As poor as the world consider us, the State of Illinois has not wealth enough to buy us out and pay us for our property. She is too much of a bankrupt; she has too many unfinished railroads within her borders, defined thus to remain as monuments of blind and foolish legislation. She is not able to pay her own debts, extorted from her prodigality, in internal improvements, let alone buying out the Mormons; and we intend to stay here until she does buy us out; and we won't sell to her unless she will pay us the whole amount down, and that she is not able to do; but we can buy out this country and pay them for their property, and we are ready either to buy or sell. We will hold on to our property; we will build up this city, and make it the pride of the west, a city of refuge for the oppressed.

I would say to this choir, cultivate your voices; string up your harps, and make melody with your instruments of music. This choir is preparing themselves for something more important; they are preparing to make harmony in that Temple when it is finished and dedicated to the Lord, and not only that, but I expect to hear music from them in the eternal world, in the mansions of celestial glory. I expect to see these happy faces in the kingdom of God, and instead of laying our instruments of music aside, we will have more of them and they will be more perfect, and I expect to be where there is music, and singing, and praying, and praise, to all eternity. So be not discouraged; but go ahead, and be careful not to quarrel among yourselves; suffer no wrangle to get amongst you; never let this hall be polluted by iniquity; but be united and abled council, and you shall prosper and be blessed.

REMARKS OF ELDER ORSON SPENCER, ON MONDAY EVENING, THE 10TH ULT.

BROTHERS AND SISTERS—In compliance with the request of Elder Goddard—your instructor in music—I arise to make a very few remarks upon the present occasion. Some of the Twelve were expected here—they have not arrived. It would have been a higher source of gratification to you, no doubt, to have heard from them, than your humble servant; but in the event of their non-attendance, I have been solicited to offer a few reflections. I will not intrude myself upon the patience and time of the singers but a very few moments.

I consider music to be a science, and one that has a foundation in the nature of all minds of every individual. Some persons possess an ability for music to a much greater extent than others. But the mind is susceptible of cultivation in this delightful science. Music finds a response in every human mind. It fans into a flame of ecstasy every lofty, ennobling, refined, virtuous and holy feeling and emotion of our natures. It is a science to be studied and practiced in order to bring it to perfection as much as the study of ethics, or any other branch of refined education. Music will not only delight the ear and charm the sensibility of the human mind; but many instances have been recorded upon the history of men's experiments and observations, where the animal creation have evinced a strong propensity for music. One instance I will mention where a mouse was so delighted with the playing of instrumental music, that it was thrown into an ecstasy to such an extent that it actually began to caper about to the music of the notes and continued so to do until the playing ceased, when it immediately became still and docile as ever. Upon the music being struck up the second time, it again became capricious as before, continuing in that state as long as it lasted. The steeds of mighty conquerors, while marching on to battle, have become furious, until they have been made to neigh and dance to the animating notes of field music, eager to dash themselves into the midst of the bloody conflict. The feathered throng warble forth songs of music, natural to themselves, and fill the air with notes of sweet melody. All nature is rife with music's sweetest sounds, and the Father of the Universe caused the hosts of heaven to strike the high song of praise and thanksgiving, when was born to the world the Babe of Bethlehem—the Savior of the world. The science of music is not confined to this world; but heaven's vast concave reverberates with celestial anthems, in praise to the Most High. Here, the science of music exists but in embryo; there, it has reached the sublime standard of celestial perfection. It is a refined and dignifying embellishment; and should we not become eager and emulous that our sons and daughters should understand the science? We want the educational adornments to surpass those of kings and queens and the nobility of earth. God designs to exalt them to thrones, honors and dignities, in the kingdom of the Father. Then should we not be desirous to cultivate their minds with every grace and quality, to adorn and fit them for the high destiny that awaits them? Let these considerations stimulate this choir, and the saints of God generally, to energy in cultivating this exquisite, beneficial and delightful science.

THE INDIANS.
Declaration of the Seneca Nation in General Council Assembled.

Whereas, the usage, practice and custom of the Seneca Nation of Indians, to sell and dispose of their lands by the consent and agreement of a majority of their chiefs, without the express consent of the warriors and people of the nation, has in this latter days of our weakness and limited territory, given great uneasiness to our people, and created an apprehension among them, that while this power continues to be thus vested, their homes will be insecure, and has impressed them with the belief, that they and their children must live in continual fear that their lands will be sold without their consent, and the deepest misery thus entailed upon them and their posterity. And whereas, a general council of the whole nation was convened at the council house at the Cattaraugus Reservation, on the 28th day of January, 1845, for the purpose of considering this subject, and of altering our political usages and organization in this respect, if after a full and fair discussion and mature deliberation, it should be deemed wise and expedient. And whereas, also the Seneca Chiefs, and Head men of the said nation duly assembled in such council, have after full discussion and mutual deliberation, determined that the welfare of the nation, and the security, prosperity, and happiness of their people require, that express assent of the warriors and people, as well as of the chiefs of the nation, should be necessary to a valid sale or disposition of their lands. Therefore, we the chiefs and representatives of the Seneca Nation of Indians in such general council assembled, acting for and in behalf, and by the authority of the said Nation, and in the exercise of the inalienable right of the said nation to alter and modify their political customs and usages, when it becomes necessary for their security, prosperity, and happiness, do hereby, in the name and behalf and by the authority of the said Seneca nation, Resolve, Determine, Ordain, Publish, and Declare, that our political usages, customs, organization, and constitution be, and the same are hereby altered and amended, so that no sale or disposition of the whole, or any part of our lands hereafter to be made, shall be valid or of any effect, unless the same be made in full and open council of the Chiefs and Warriors of the nation, and by the express assent of two thirds of all the chiefs, and of two thirds of the whole residue of the male population of the nation of the age of twenty-one years, whether attending such council or not, such assent to be given in writing, under the hands and seals of the parties in full and open council of the Chiefs and Warriors of the nation, assembled together in one council; but nothing herein contained shall in any manner alter, change, affect, lessen or diminish, the rights, powers, duties, privileges or authority of the chiefs in any other matter or respect whatsoever.

And we do further Resolve and Determine, that this ordinance or act of the nation, be entered at length in the records of this Council, and that four copies thereof be signed by the Chiefs assenting thereto, one of which copies shall be delivered to the President of the United States, with the request that the same may be deposited with the archives of the United States; one of which shall be presented to the Governor and Council of Massachusetts, with the request that it be deposited among the archives of that Commonwealth, and kept in perpetual remembrance by its Governor and Council, and the other of which shall be deposited and kept with the Archives and Records of the Seneca nation.

Done and Signed in open council at Cattaraugus, the thirtieth day of January, 1845.
Signed,
JOHN SENECA, and 49 other Chiefs.

CONSUMPTION OF THE LUNGS.

Coughs and Colds, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pains or Soreness of the Chest, Difficulty of Breathing, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Croup, &c.

AMONG all the famous medicines for Consumption, none seems to be meeting with greater success, or gaining a higher reputation than that most wonderful article, Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry! That it stands at the head of all other remedies is now universally conceded. It has cured thousands upon thousands—of all classes—in cases of the most dangerously Consumptive character—and physicians of the greatest eminence throughout our whole country unhesitatingly recommend it as the most powerful curative of Pulmonary diseases, in the whole range of Pharmacy. Thousands of consumptive patients have already tested its exalted virtues, and confessed its surpassing, excellent and amazing power. The remarkable success of this Balsam is no doubt owing in a great measure to the peculiarly agreeable and powerful nature of its ingredients. It is a fine Herbal Medicine, composed chiefly of Wild Cherry Bark and the genuine Iceland Moss—(the latter imported expressly for this purpose) the medicinal virtues of which are also combined, by a new chemical process with the Extract of Tar—thus rendering the whole Compound the most certain and efficacious remedy ever discovered.

A CASE OF ASTHMA.

The following is from a distinguished Lawyer of the city of New York, who had been afflicted with the Asthma for upwards of Twenty Years; and who, after reading such cases can doubt the efficacy of this medicine?

New York, January 25, 1843.

I have been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for 24 years—sometimes so severely as to be confined to my room for weeks; and although attended by various medical advisers, of the highest reputation and skill in the country, the relief was but partial and temporary—twice the disease proved nearly fatal to my life.

Some few weeks ago I commenced taking Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, which gave me instant relief, and a single bottle produced in a few days what I believe to be a radical and perfect cure.

STARTLING INTELLIGENCE OF

THE INDIANS ON OUR WEST-

ERN BORDER.

We copy the following article from the New Orleans Picayune. The Camanche Indians, whose savage assaults are here described, are the most warlike tribe on the American Continent. It is generally believed that they number more than 50,000 warriors amongst them. They are perfectly savage, ferocious, and untamable in their nature. Incapable of civilization, they are, on this continent, like the Arab on the Continent of Africa, only more fierce and untractable. By the accounts below, it seems that some of the Cherokee half-breeds have got amongst this tribe; and possessing superior intelligence, acquired while in the United States; the Cherokees are instigating them to more general incursions upon all their civilized neighbors. It is well known that a dark spirit of revenge is cherished by many of the Cherokees, who unwillingly left their possessions in Georgia; and it need not surprise us if, under their lead, and with the knowledge and information they have imparted, the Camanches should extend their ravages even to the borders of the United States, and especially against the parties emigrating to Oregon.

With these facts before us, what is the plain duty of Congress? Certainly to call into service an effective western force of mounted men. Illinois and Missouri could send forth many of the kind of men that is required. Men who understand their duty; who know how to fight; the Indian, and who will fight him whether he be Camanche or any other red skin. It must be evident, that unless some such measures are adopted, this warlike tribe will soon commit unheard of atrocities, of plunder, rapine and blood. There is danger also, that the other tribes who have only been recently removed westward, will join the Camanches. Nothing is more contagious with the Indians than successful incursions:

Inroads of the Camanches.—Capture of two Mexican girls.—An intelligent gentleman, who left Chihuahua some six weeks or two months since, gives us interesting and startling intelligence in relation to the inroads recently made by the dreaded Camanches into the States of Chihuahua and Durango, and of the ravages they have committed during these predatory incursions. Thousands and thousands of horses and cattle have been driven off, women and children have been led into captivity, and ranchos and haciendas innumerable have been made desolate; nor is there force enough to make headway against and rid the country successfully of the invaders. When repulsed in one place they appear in another, and commence anew their depredations and atrocities.

It is suspected, and with good show of reason, that a number of half-breed Cherokee renegades are among the Camanches, instigating them to these deeds, and perhaps leading them on to their commission. On one occasion, a party numbering over one hundred attacked five wagons on their way from Chihuahua to some other point, bent upon capturing and plundering their contents. A number of Americans were along with the wagons; and determined to resist to the last, they disposed of themselves in the most advantageous position and commenced a fire upon their assailants in good earnest. It was while they were choosing their position that a voice from the Indians was heard shouting in excellent English, "that's right—huddle together—don't let 'em get off their saddles, and they were positive that Cherokees were among the Indians. Many of the Mexicans assert that the Camanches, from the daring and systematic mode of their attacks, are led by Americans; but this is flatly denied by all the natives of the United States, who know that the Cherokees or some of our western Indians are leagued with their more savage brethren of the prairies.

To show the daring of the Indians, and the extent to which they go in their maraudings, a party of some two hundred and fifty recently dashed boldly into Cuernavaca, a town of several thousand inhabitants near the southern line of the State of Durango, and carried off a large number of valuable horses, besides many prisoners, the panic-stricken inhabitants hardly making a show of resistance. Among the prisoners were two young, pretty, and well informed girls, the laughter of a wealthy Spanish merchant of the place. The girls were at a small country seat of their father's near the edge of the town; were among the first taken, and were carried off by their captors in the north. Their half frantic parent offered a heavy amount for their ransom or to capture, but all his efforts had been ineffectual up to the last accounts.

We recollect these girls well, having spent the better part of two days at their father's house, while on the march from Santa Fe to Mexico.—The hospitality of the parent, and the graceful deportment of the kind hearted daughters, have not yet been forgotten, and it is melancholy to reflect that such a cruel fate has befallen them.

Such are the scenes, which for the last year, have been almost daily enacted in some of the northern departments of Mexico, and yet these people talk right valiantly of invading and overwhelming Texas. It would seem as though a population kept within its own gates by savages, would set to work to strengthen and fortify itself at home, rather than indulge in idle gasconade about invading neighboring territories.

From the New York Gazette, March 29, 1870.

"Last Saturday night about eleven o'clock, 14 or 15 soldiers were seen about the liberty pole in this city, which one of them had ascended, with an intent to take off and carry away the topmast and vane; as soon as they were discovered, five or six young men who were accidentally crossing the green at that time made up towards the pole, to see what they were about, but they were immediately attacked and driven off the green by the soldiers; who, finding that they were discovered and apprehensive that the inhabitants would be alarmed, they made off. Soon after some persons went into town and acquainted their friends with the proceedings of the soldiers, upon which 14 or 15 persons came up to the green, and going to the pole were there surrounded by 40 or 50 soldiers, with their cutlasses drawn; upon which 4 or 5 of them retreated to the house of Mr. Bicker, and were followed by part of the soldiers, who immediately called out for the soldiers from the barracks; upon which they were joined by a very considerable body who came over the barrack fence. Mr. Bicker seeing himself and family in danger, and exposed to the insults of a licentious and brutal soldiery, stood with his bayonet fixed, determined to defend himself to the last extremity, and declared he would shoot the first man that should attempt to enter; they several times attempted to force the under door, the upper door being open, which Mr. Bicker kept shut by fixing the point of his bayonet against it, while they kept cutting and hacking the barrel of his gun, in attempting to cut him down with their cutlasses, but he soon after got the upper door shut and barred; upon which they strove to break open the front windows, which were also shut, one of which they forced open, broke the panes of glass, and cut all the frame to pieces, in order to get into the house. Some people who were in the house seeing the imminent danger to which Mr. Bicker and his family were exposed, got out the back way and ran to alarm the citizens. The chapel bell was immediately rung, upon the hearing of which, the soldiers retreated precipitately. A number of the citizens were up all night under arms, which probably prevented any mischief being done, as they repeatedly swore that they would set fire to the house, and burn or destroy every person in it. Col. Robertson, the commanding officer of the regiment repaired to the barracks, as soon as he had notice of the disturbance; he immediately ordered the sentinels to be confined, and remained up all night to prevent any further mischief being done; and as a number of the inhabitants nightly guarded the pole, till the transports with the soldiers were stilled, they were disappointed in effecting their designs against it, although they positively swore that they would carry off some part of it with them.

From the Connecticut Journal, Nov. 20, 1775.

On the 20th of this month sixteen respectable inhabitants of this town, (New Haven,) in company with Capt. Sears, set out from this place for East and West Chester, in the Province of New York, to disarm the principal Tories there, and secure the persons of Parson Seabury, Judge Fowler, and Lord Underhill. On their way thither they were joined by Captains Scillick, Richards, and Mead, with about 80 men. At Marneek they burnt a small sloop, which was purchased by government for the purpose of carrying provisions on board the Asia. At East Chester they seized Judge Fowler, and then repaired to West Chester and secured Seabury and Underhill. Having possessed themselves of these captives, they sent them to Connecticut under a strong guard. The main body, consisting of 75, then proceeded to New York which they entered at noon day on horseback, with bayonets fixed, in the greatest regularity went down the main street, and drew up in close order before the printing office of the infamous JAMES RIVINGTON. A small detachment entered it, and in about three quarters of an hour they brought off the principal part of his types, for which they offered to give an order on Lord Dunmore. They then faced and wheeled to the left and marched out of the town to the tune of "Yankee Doodle." A vast concourse of people assembled at the Coffee house bridge, on their leaving the ground, gave them three hearty cheers.

On their way home, they disarmed all the Tories that lay on their route, and yesterday arrived here, escorted by a great number of gentlemen from the westward, the whole making a very grand procession. Upon their entrance into town they were saluted with the discharge of two cannon, and received by the inhabitants with every mark of approbation and respect. The company divided into two parties, and concluded the day in festivity and innocent mirth. Captain Sears returned in company with the other gentlemen, and proposed to spend the winter here unless public business should require his presence in New York. Seabury, Underhill, and Fowler, three of the dastardly protestors against the proceedings of the Continental Congress, and who it is believed had concerted a plan for kidnapping Captain Sears, and conveying him on board of the Asia man-of-war, are (with the types and arms) safely lodged in this town: where it is expected Lord Underhill will have leisure to form the scheme of a lucrative lottery, the tickets of which cannot be counterfeited; and Parson Seabury sufficient time to compose sermons for the next Continental Fast.

Condition of the Post office Department.—A few days before the adjournment of Congress, Mr. Wickliffe, in conformity with a resolution of the Senate, submitted to that body the following statement: Comparative exhibit of the Revenue and Expenditures of the Postoffice Department from April 1st, 1841, to June 30th, 1844, excluding the appropriation of $497,657, made September 9th 1841.

*TEXAS.

The following statistical information relative to Texas, its trade, commerce, public debt, &c., will at this time be deemed of special interest. We derive it from the March number of Hunt's Merchants' Magazine.

The following affords a view of the amount of the original debt in existence in 1841; since which time no new stock has been issued.

Funded act of 1837 41, $1,085,000
ditto 1840 for five yrs. 1,040,000
Bonds pledged 20 yrs. 670,000
Issued for navy, 1842. 992,000
Bonds at 8 percent, 5 yrs. 133,000
Treasury notes 2,250,000
Land receipts, 1,500,000
Floating debt, 500,000
Total	$8,169,000

This is, no doubt, very near the actual amount of the liabilities of Texas, notwithstanding the exaggerated accounts got up by the enemies of Texas Annexation to the contrary. We are aware that some of these statements were wilfully and vilely manufactured, in quarters where they might have been least expected.

The quantity of government land, according to a congressional report of 1839, is as follows:

Extent of the Texan Republic 203,430,000; granted by Mexico, and confirmed by Texas, 53,311,267 acres; Texas grants, since her independence, 5,597,356 acres; military bounty lands, 4,393,074 acres; land scrip issues, 1,500,000 acres; total appropriated, 64,801,797 acres; unappropriated balance, 138,618,203 acres; Probable average worth of public domain, $1.25 per acre; total $173,272,574. From which deduct public debt, $169,000, and we will have the amount, or something near it, of $165,104,754, which was cast aside by this government in the non-ratification of the Texas treaty of last year.

The imports and exports of the United States, to and from Texas, have been as follows:

In 1837, exports, $1,007,923; imports, $163,384. In 1838, exp. 1,247,850; imp. 165,718. In 1839, exp. 1,680,082; imp. 318,116. In 1840, exp. 1,218,271; imp. 303,847. In 1841, exp. 808,296; imp. 305,026. In 1842, exp. 406,939; imp. 480,892. In 1843, exp. 142,733; imp. 445,399.

From the foregoing statement, it will appear that since 1837, the imports from Texas to this country have been steadily increasing, and since 1839, our exports to that country, as steadily declining. The reason of this is obvious. The commercial advantages once held forth to Texas have been curtailed, and she now finds it more to her interest to exchange for her own products of European nations, than to deal with us. From a balance in our favor in 1837, of $47,000 we now have a balance against us of at least $300,000!

These imports from Texas have consisted almost entirely of Cotton. For the eight years ending with 1843, their value was considerably over two million of dollars.

The imports and duties of the port of Galveston for the year ending November 1st, 1844, are thus set down:

Imports, $510,399; Duties, $158,315. Excess of imports over those of '42, $171,867; ditto of duties, $69,773.

This increasing trade, and the economical manner in which the government has been administered, is evinced in the late message of President Houston, who states that during his term of office, three years, the revenue and expenditures have been as follows:—Revenue, $460,209; Expenses, 460,209; Excess revenue, 5,949.

Considering the odds she has had to encounter from the warlike attitude of Mexico, and the insecurity of all Western Texas, it is highly indicative of her future prosperity that she has brought her expenditures within her means.

FROZEN TO DEATH.

"One half the world does not know how the other half lives, or how they die."

Few who experienced it, will forget the cold Friday of December, 1841; while I have especial cause to remember it, from the occurrence of such a scene as I trust it will never again be my lot to witness.

Having hurried through my professional visit, I hastened home, congratulating myself on the prospect of being able to spend that evening by my own cheerful fireside. I was doomed to disappointment. The frozen boots I had taken off were smoking upon the hearth, my coat, stiff with sleet and hail, was spread over a chair before the fire, and I had just taken a seat at the comfortable tea-table; when a call was made upon my professional services.

The door opened to a poor woman, who wished me to see her child. "Oh Doctor—be quick," was all she had strength to utter as she sank exhausted into a chair. I hastily drew on my boots and coat, while a feeling of vexation at being called out, was changed to sorrow when I looked at the poor mother.

An old pair of thin shoes, and thinner stockings, a threadbare cotton gown, a scanty, much worn shawl, and a rusty black leghorn hat, soaked and frozen with sleet, made all her dress. What a mockery of clothing for such a night! My kind hearted little wife, bustled about to hide her feelings, brought out some of her own warm clothes, for which she insisted the half-clad, shivering creature, should change her dripping garments.

The poor woman's entreaties and prayers, that we should set out to the relief of the child, were disregarded until she was suitably clothed, and when dry stockings, stout shoes, a woolen gown, a thick hood and warm cloak had been put upon her, (it would have been murder to let her go without) we started. I having in the meantime, put in my pockets a small bottle of wine and such little articles of nourishment as were at hand.

While on our way to her room, (which being but a short distance, in the street adjoining that in which I lived, we soon reached,) I learned, from the short and hurried answers of the trembling mother, that her child had been gradually failing since the commencement of cold weather, less from any actual disease, than from want of proper food, clothing and shelter. Literally dying of poverty, the only crime upon which the world looks with disgust, and the only one which never goes unpunished.

We soon reached the house, an old, tottering, half-decayed frame building, in an upper room of which, the helpless patient lay. A bottle supplied the place of a candlestick, in which was stuck a bit of tallow candle, with long, untrimmed wick, shedding a feeble light upon the nearest objects, rendering the dark corners doubly gloomy. The hearth was cold, the little invalid having been too sick this day, to be left by the mother while she picked the few chips which had served to keep up a semblance of fire. Through many a crevice in the floor and sides, the wind came in chilling puffs, while sleet and hail drove in at the half-stopped broken panes of the window. Carefully shading the candle, I advanced to the side of the bed, upon which the poor woman was spreading, over the child, the cloak my wife had given her. At a glance I saw that I was come too late. Death had been there. All alone in that dark cold room, with no kind hand to smooth the pillow of her aching head, or wipe the death dew from her sinking temples, the little sufferer had yielded up her spirit.

There was no eye to pity, no arm to save! Death had kindly released her from the grips of pain, had gently drawn her pure spirit from its tabernacle of suffering and sorrow.

Her little limbs were stiff, her features sweetly calm, but pale and rigid as marble, a frozen tear stood in either eye.—The frost had done its work, she was literally FROZEN TO DEATH!

The mother, struck dumb with horror, for a moment gazed upon her child with speechless agony, then fell as if struck down by some unseen hand, across the little frozen corpse.

Hastily calling upon some of the neighbors to assist, I labored for hours in the endeavor to restore her, but in vain. At intervals she would open her eyes for a moment with a sort of dreamy consciousness, then instantly relapse into a death-like swoon. Her day was fast drawing to a close, her hands were almost run, the silver cord of life was nearly severed. Finding it a hopeless case, I procured fuel in the neighborhood, and employed an old woman to watch her; then, as it was long past midnight, I returned home to snatch a few hours of rest. Early on the following morning, I stepped in at this house of death, scarce hoping to find my patient restored, but totally unprepared for the scene which burst upon me. How was I horror-stricken at finding the door ajar, the fire burnt out, the nurse gone away, the mother stretched in death beside her child. There they lay, the mother and her babe, both dead,—both frozen hard as the nether millstone.

Beautiful in death, [they lay sweetly sleeping side by side. I could not feel unhappy for them, "sorrow and sighing had flown away."

Cold and hunger, starvation and misery had been their portion. They had not even the crumbs which fall from the rich man's table. Now their cares were ended. They lie entombed together.

"Lovely and pleasant were they in life, and in death they were not divided."

The Acurus Galeaticus, or Acurus Grossi.—Our readers may remember the excitement caused in the year 1837, by the announcement that Mr. Crosse of Bloomfield, had observed the development of certain insects incident to the long continued action of voltaic pairs. Little additional information on this subject has since transpired until the 15th inst., when a paper from Mr. Weekes, of Sandwich, was read before the London Electrical Society, detailing the successful repetition of Mr. Crosse's experiments. In connection with the original experiments, the possibility was urged that the ova of the insects might be in the air. Mr. Weekes's experiments were so conducted that this objection can be scarcely tenable. A well charred block of beech, containing a circular groove to receive a bell glass, was the base of the instrument. The groove was filled with mercury. A tumbler, containing the solution of silicate of polass, was beneath the bell. The silica was obtained by subjecting to a furnace heat, a piece of fine black flint obtained out of the centre of a "bowler," selected from amongst those lying on the shore at Sandwich. The silica was united to the potash by a furnace heat; the result quenched in boiling water. The solution was immediately covered, and filtered under cover. All things being prepared, the voltaic current was sent through the solution on the 3d. of December, 1741, and from that date to the present time the apparatus has not been disturbed. At the end of October, 1841, the first insect was observed. On the 16th of November five were discovered. "Since that date insects have been repeatedly seen. The bell glass was placed in total darkness, the screen being only removed when the progress was being examined. Mr. Weekes mentioned that he has another apparatus in action, very similar to this, with the exception that the bell was filled with oxygen, and expressed an anticipation that he should sooner or later detect insect life there. This expectation was realized a few days ago. In an appendix to his communication, bearing date February 27, 1842, he states that on the previous morning he perceived eight or ten full grown acari in vigorous locomotion on the inner surface of the air-bell."—Times.

Slaughter of Witches.—During the 17th century, 40,000 persons are said to have been put to death for witchcraft in England alone. In Scotland the number was probably in proportion to the population, much greater: for it is certain, that even in the last forty years of the sixteenth century, the executions were not fewer than 17,000. In 1743, the madness may be said to have reached its highest pitch; for in that year occurred the celebrated case of the Lincolshire witches, in which eight innocent persons were deprived of their lives by the inherent falsehoods of a mischievous urchin. The civil war, far from suspending the prosecution, seemed to have redoubled it. In 1644, the infamous Matthew Hopkins was able to remove by the profession of witch-finder, which he exercised, not indeed without occasional suspicion, but still with general success. And even twenty years later the delusion was still sanctioned by the most venerable name of the English law!

From Mexico.—The Picayune of the 4th has news up to the 18 ult.

Verbally we learn that there was no news of importance stirring. Santa Anna was still in prison at Perote. Letters from the tyrant to different merchants at Vera Cruz, directing them not to give up any money of his in their hands, have been intercepted.

It is stated that the 24th of February had been fixed upon as the time of bringing on the trial of Santa Anna; and he is to stand on his defence in writing instead of appearing in person before the Grand Jury.

Fight between the Creek and Pawnee Indians.—We learn that the Pawnee Mahas attacked, about ten days since, the Creeks who live upon Little River, near the store of Mr. Thomas Hazen. The Creeks repulsed them after killing six of their warriors, and without any loss on their side. The Pawnees have returned to their homes upon the wide prairies, for a reinforcement, with which they have sworn to return and take revenge. They scattering Creeks are removing from the exposed quarter to the denser settlements. An account of the affair has been transmitted to the commanding officer at Fort Gibson. This affair occurred in the country which was apportioned to the Seminoles by the late treaty, and whither they are daily removing. The Pawnees, when they come back to fulfil their threat, will find a "trouble-some customer" in Halleck Tus-tug-gee, the Seminole chief, and will be apt to lose "plenty scalps."—Arkansas Intelligence, Feb. 22.

Solar Gas Light.—The Cincinnati Atlas states, that Mr. J. Crutcher of that city has invented a mode of generating gas by which a very superior light is produced at a cheap rate. The apparatus has been placed in several houses in Cincinnati, and also on board the steamboat Pike. The Chronicle adds—

It has been used on this boat for several nights, on her trips from Louisville; the whole of the deck and a part of the cabin being splendidly illuminated. The brilliancy of a single burner is sufficient to overpower a chandelier of five lamps of sperm oil. The apparatus occupies but a very small space—is light of weight—is so constructed as to obviate all vibration, and is much safer than any other mode of lighting.

The gas is produced by the decomposition of any greasy substance from the kitchen or elsewhere, however worthless; that which in most families is thrown away, or used as soap grease, being sufficient for the purpose. This gas is united with oxygen by a simple process, and produces a more splendid light than common coal gas.
